Harper College approves $3 tuition increase for '89

By Vicki Mlewski
News Editor

Harper has decided on a three dollar per credit hour increase for the spring semester of 1989.

Vice President of Administrative Services, Vern Manke, pointed to a reduction in state funding for Harper as the major reason for the increase.

This reduction to state funds has two parts: first is an overall cut of 2.1% for higher education and second is a 5.24% reduction due to decreased enrollment at Harper.

The enrollment grant from the state is determined by how many credit hours a school services. The school then receives their funds two years later. Since Harper's enrollment has decreased in 1987-88 so will its funds from the state for 1988-89.

In addition to the loss of state funding, the increased cost of living our economy as a whole has experienced has contributed to the tuition increase.

As a result of obvious financial problems the idea of raising tuition was explored completely. First, an analysis of what other colleges were charging was conducted. Many colleges have found themselves in the same position as Harper and have raised their tuition.

The analysis was prepared in April of 1988 and since then some schools have decided to raise tuition even though in April they did not. Harper's tuition is comfortably in the midrange when compared. Second Manke did a Financial Projection for the next three years.

According to Manke, "It was easy to see the institution would have some financial problems maintaining its levels and standards in academic areas if we didn't increase tuition."

A major area in need of funds was capital equipment which encompasses tools for instructional purposes (microscopes, projectors, etc.). Capital equipment falls under two major funds of the budget: education and operation. Capital equipment for education was budgeted at $54,832 for 1988-89, quite a difference from $593,319 in 1987-88.

Manke said each department requests money for equipment. These requests are listed under three different priorities. With the tuition increases, Manke states, "We will now be able to purchase all requests for priorities one and two and some in three." The expenditures for capital equipment in education for 1988-89 is now $1,095,743 due to the tuition increase.

In April of 1988 an estimated $24,975,287 would have been revenue with a $27 per credit hour tuition. Now with $30 per credit hour, the revenue will be $25,895,052.

Estimated expenditures were to total $24,920,455. They will now total $25,895,052. As one can see, the budget balances. But if there had been no increase Manke stated, "there would have been a deficit due to capital equipment purchases that we needed."

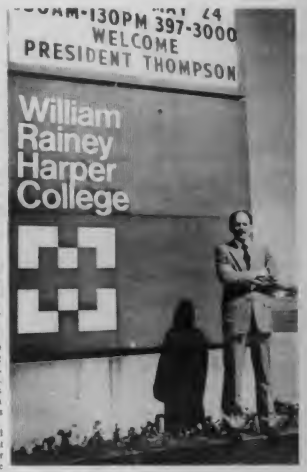

A tuition increase was not the only way Harper's budget became balanced. Money from certain funds was moved to other funds (where necessary). The Operating Room Certificate Program was discontinued.

An addition to the budget, though, is a part-time position ($20,000) for a Director of Minority Affairs, which Harper feels is necessary in order to better serve qualified minority candidates. This new position is one of many goals Harper hopes to attain. Other goals that Harper sights don't always cost money, sometimes just reorganization.

Will tuition need to be raised again in the future? Manke answered, "I think we should be able to maintain this tuition for at lease three years, hopefully more, but due the number of variables a three year prediction may not be entirely accurate."

He added, "We all need to be realistic about receiving quality programs and staff, modern equipment and facilities. And since the Illinois Legislature did not pass a tax increase school funding looks bleak."

Looking past their initial surprise, most students said that $30 was still a good price for the education they were receiving

President Paul N. Thompson

McGrath to Trinity--Thompson to Harper

By Douglas Ray
Editor-in-Chief

In October, 1987 the Harper College Board of Trustees, a committee consisting of eight community members, began the process of selecting a new president.

The board established the presidential search advisory committee (PSAC), which selected five nominees for the position.

The board formally approved on April 28 Dr. Paul N. Thompson, then President of Bellevue Community College in Bellevue, Washington, to succeed James McGrath.

McGrath ended his ten year presidency at Harper College early in May, 1988 to undertake another challenge at Trinity College in Washington, D.C.

President Thompson holds both a Ph.D. in education and an A.M. degree in Mathematics from Gustavus Adolphus College in St. Peter, Minnesota. He has co-authored two mathematics textbooks and published numerous articles in professional journals.

Several goals have been made by President Thompson. Near the top of his list is the search for new faculty members to replace the high quality members who are now retiring. He thinks the search will be very successful due to Harper's nationwide reputation for dedication to academic excellence.

President Thompson visited Harper the week of May 23 both in search of a house and to attend the numerous meetings scheduled for him. Many members of the Harper staff met President Thompson for the first time.

President Thompson's wife Doriann, as "lovely as the day I married her," is working towards her second baccalaureate degree in anthropology to back up her first in elementary education.

The Thompson's have three children, the oldest, Julie, and her husband and son Michael are currently living in Albuquerque, New Mexico. Sara, who is getting married in the near future, has recently returned from Japan where she taught English. And Bellevue, Washington.

The Thompson's, pressed for time, were unable to find a home during their one week stay. When David was a Sophomore at Evergreen State College in they arrive. President Thompson's first day back to Harper is July 25--the Thompson's plan to rent an apartment until they can find an in-district house.

President Thompson's appointment comes during a period of low state funding making perhaps one of his most important tasks to increase revenue.

Similarly in 1977 the tax for Harper was the lowest in the state and the college was "underfunded," according to McGrath. He said student enrollment was down and the State Appropriation was being reduced.

McGrath came to Harper while it was financially unstable, and faculty and staff had little pride for Harper.

According to Martin J. Ryan, dean of liberal arts, "Morale when Jim McGrath came to Harper, among both faculty and staff was at its lowest ebb."

Ryan explained that McGrath's predecessor, Dr. Robert Lahti, was interested in putting Harper on the map by building other campuses and enlarging the campus here in Palatine.

McGrath wanted to get Harper on the map by developing for Harper a reputation of academic excellence.

Vice President of Academic Affairs, Dr. David Williams explained McGrath's theory about Harper and its staff. McGrath believes that the faculty and staff need to be proud of Harper and consider Harper their own.

Williams said "Ownership builds commitment. Involvement builds an ownership-type atmosphere. Jim personifies this get-involved type of leadership."

"We are here as an educational institution, and Jim McGrath has kept us moving in that direction," said Williams.

According to Vice President of Student Affairs, Bonnie Henry, his largest contribution has been ... his humanity. That and his high focus on student awareness."

"He has created a most favorable and positive environment and it is attributable to President McGrath."

McGrath has done a number of things for Harper College during his presidency. Among them are the development of trust among the staff, encouragement of administrators to teach by providing himself as a model, and overseeing an increase in the treasury balance for the Education Foundation.

He also provided the funds needed to efficiently operate a community college by suggesting a referendum which increased taxes, attended to the improvement of the campus (including the addition of over 500 trees), increased morale, opened communication among the staff, encouraged new ideas, and he provided good communication between Harper and the business community.

Over the years McGrath has learned. There is a collective wisdom in a college community" and added that the wisdom will direct the community in the future.

President Thompson will be leaving Bellevue after a seven year stay. He received many honors from the college before his departure including a "going-away" reception.

"BIG" SUMMER MOVIE

By Andrew Balazs
Entertainment Editor

"Big", the fourth-kid in an adult's body-film of 1988, is a comedy/romance starring Tom Hanks ( "Splash", "Dragnet", "The Money Pit") as Josh Baskin. Josh is a twelve year old who wishes himself into a 35 year old's body. The movie also stars Elizabeth Perkins as Susan Lawrence ("About Last Night") , a yuppie toy company executive.

Early in the movie we find Josh at a carnival, jealous and upset because his junior high love interest, Cynthia Benson, is with a high school guy. In hisanger, he makes a wish to ZOLTAR ( a carnival wishing machine) to become big. In the morning he wakes up in the body of a 35 year old.

Confused and frightened, he runs away. With the help of his best friend Billy, Josh finds a job with a toy manufacturer in the want ads.

On the job, he meets Susan Lawrence, who makes Cynthia Benson look like...well, a child. Susan is attracted to Josh's playfulness and innocence, and they become romantically involved.

Meanwhile, his best friend Billy frantically searches for ZOLTAR in order to return Josh to his old (young) body and worried family.

Tom Hanks turns out an excellent performance as the youngster. His natural playfulness and energy make his character truly believable, despite the obvious plot flaw. Elizabeth Perkins is also very good as the epitome of yuppie-dome.

The supporting cast is equally good,especially Robert Loggia as Mac MacMillian, the owner of the toy company. Jon Lovitz, the Liar Guy on Saturday Night Live, also makes a cameo appearance as a frustrated bottom of the ladder office worker.

"Big" is wonderfully directed by Penny Marshall (Laverne and Shirley) who also directed "Jumpin' Jack Flash".

Overall, "Big" is BIG. The cast is wonderfully talented, and the script is fantastic. "Big" is the feelgood hit of the summer.

Thespians: notes for new year

Students interested in theatre have many opportunities for involvement at Harper. There are several theatre classes from which to choose as well as play productions available for student participation.

The fall production of the Harper College Theatre will be the classic 18th century Italian comedy, "The Servant of Two Masters" by Carlo Goldoni. Production dates are November 11,12,13,18 & 19.

Based on the commedia dell' arte, a popular form of theatre which flourished in Europe for hundreds of years, "Servant" tells the story of two pairs of young lovers who, for complicated reasons, cannot work out their own affairs. They are assisted in their misadventures by the rascally servant, Truffaldino, who finally helps them resolve their difficulties. The play is characterized by action, intrigue, disguise and humor.

Auditions for "The Servant of Two Masters" will be held on Tuesday and Wednesday, September 13 and 14 at 7 p.m. in the Theatre, Building J. There will be a callback on Thursday, September 15, at 7 p.m. in the Theatre. Students interested in auditioning should read the script; copies will be available on reserve in the Library when classes begin. Students interested in working on the technical areas of the production or those with questions about the audition are encouraged to contact Mary Jo Willis, Director of Theatre, in her office, A139, or telephone 397-3000, ext. 2448.

The spring production this year will be the musical revue, "Jacques Brel is Alive and Well and Living in Paris". Production dates are April 14,15,16; 21,22,& 23. Auditions will be held in early February. Watch the Harbinger for details.

Theatre classes available to students include: Introduction to the Theatre, Acting, Stagecraft and Oral Interpretation. They are offered during the fall and spring semesters. Contact Mary Jo Willis for details.

Students are encouraged to stop by the Box Office, Building J, and meet Kevin Geiger, Theatre Manager. Kevin sometimes has need of both volunteer and paid student help for the many events which are held each semester in the theatre. This work includes selling tickets, ushering, running lights for shows and similar other theatre related activities.

If you're interested in theatre, get involved at Harper.

Harper's speech team

The Harper's Speech Team is gearing up for the 1988-89 school year. Harper's team is preparing for a competitive season and a growing team.

The team will be competing in several divisions: Duet Acting, Poetry Interpretation, Prose Interpretation, Persuasion, Informative Speaking, Speaking to Entertain, Impromptu Speaking, and Reader's Theater, as well as other events that vary at each tournament.

According to Marcia Littenta, Director of the Speech Team, they will be competing in tournaments as far away as Illinois State University or as close to home as Elgin Community College. Harper will host a tournament which enables students to learn the behind-the-scenes' aspect as well.

Speech Team can offer tuition rebates to Harper students who qualify and through their competition students earn experience which becomes visible to four-year universities.

If you are interested, contact Marcia M. Littenta, Director of Speech Team, Room F348, Extension 2944.

TELL IT LIKE IT IS: movies with Mike Park

PHANTASM II: the balls are back. . . .

By Mike Park

Unfortunately, it's not "just a bad dream". Phantasm II features such favorites as James LeGross, Reggie Bannister, and Angus Scrim, who turns in a deeply moving performance with his interpretation of "The Tall Man".

It's difficult to describe the plot because there isn't one to speak of. Perhaps the only reason for having a story line at all was to link the cliche's.

As far as I could tell, Mike (LeGross) and Liz (the girl he's psychically linked to just like in that Disney movie "Escape From Witch Mountain") know what the Tall Man is up to, and they know he's after them.

So Mike convinces Reggie (Bannister) to help him kill the Tall Man( only after the Tall Guy's army of little jawa men blow up his family).

They follow the Tall Guy's mile wide path of destruction, with their mighty arsenal of "tools", to meet up with him at the sleepy little town of Perigourd. There they find Liz, fight jawas, have a light saberesque duel with chainsaws, and encounter the Tall Man's Black & Decker stainless steel cordless rechargeable "balls of Death"(which, to my disappointment, have absolutely nothing to do with the story.

There's a gratuitous sex scene, an obligatory freaked out clergyman gets killed, ana a bunch of scary "zombee at the window" shots. The Tall Guy's henchmen die violent, terrible deaths, and they spike the Tall Guy's embalming fluid with acid.He dies ? The end ? Not quite.

Everybody gets out of Perigourd o.k.. They hop in the Hense driven by Reggie's hitch hikin' girlfriend/babe named "Alchemy" and things are cool, 'til she pulls off her scalp, slices Reggie up, and all of a sudden, out of nowhere the Tall Guy's in the front seat!

This movie is truly lame. Its two redeeming qualities are the silliness of the gory death scenes (which are a riot) , and perhaps the coolest evil monster guy ever conceived..."the Tall Man".

I think what I'm trying to say is this movie makes very little sense so I have no other choice but to rise it a .....HUH!?!

KEVIN'S CORNER

Baseball: end of season reflections

By Kevin Goldstein
Sports Columnist

It's All-Star break again, and we all know what that means, Right? The teams in first place now (Dodgers, Mets, Athletics, and Tigers) will finish there at the end of the season.

Yeah, buddy. The Giants are closing in quickly and will have the Dodgers begging for mercy by mid-August. The Tigers are playing well above their heads, and will be passed up by a bevy of teams.

So at least two will stay at the top, right?. Maybe. If the A's just slip a tiny bit, the Twins will be with them neck-and-neck to the end.

The Pirates are for real (The Cubs aren't), and a few more slumps by the Mets, like the one they're in know, and Pittsburgh could give New York some real problems.

Mid-Season Awards:

NL MVP: Darryl Strawberry. Runner-up: Kirk Gibson.

AL MVP: Jose Canseco. Runner-up: Dennis Eckersley

Surprises: Greg Maddux (15-3), Doug Jones (16 saves), Chris Sabo (.300+ avg., 32 doubles), Jose Canseco's 23 steals (when did this guy suddenly become a speed demon?), and Bruce Sutter (the best comeback story in a long time.)

Dissapointments: Eric Davis, Tony Gwynn, Jack Morris, Benito Santiago, Don Mattingly, Mel Hall, Juan Samuel.

Finally playing like everybody says they should: Shawon Dunston, Bo Jackson, Darryl Strawberry.

Final Predictions: No changes since March: Mets over Giants in 5, Yankees over A's in 6. Mets winning subway series in 6.

Other finishing touches: Maddux's arm all but falls off by the end of the year, he finishes 22-9, Canseco becomes the first 40-40 man ever.

INTRAMURALS

Harper offers a wide variety of alternatives to students with an interest in sports and physical fitness.

For those interested in participating in intercollegiate athletics, Harper offers fourteen varsity sports for men and women including football, cross-country, tennis, basketball, wrestling, swimming and diving, track and field, softball and baseball.

The athletic program offers students the opportunity to compete at local, state and national levels within the structure of the North Central Community College Conference (N4C) and The National Junior College Athletic Association (NJCAA).

In addition, over 300 student athletes have received athletic scholarships to four-year colleges/universities after their participation at Harper.

In recent years Harper athletes have accepted scholarship offers from: Colorado, Washington State, Western Michigan, South Carolina, Northwestern, Iowa, Texas, Texas A&M, South Florida, all Illinois state schools and many others across the country.

Students interested in intercollegiate athletics should contact the Physical Education Athletics and Recreation Division Office (Building M; 397-3000 ext. 2466, 2467) as soon as possible for additional information about starting dates and athletic eligibility.

An extensive intramural program is also available to all Harper students. Some of the activities offered include league competition in baseball, softball, touch football, volleyball, floor hockey and basketball.

Tournaments for racquetball, billiards and ping-pong are also coordinated through the Intramural Office. Students interested in men's and women's body conditioning and 5(K) and 1000 mile clubs may also contact the Intramural Office.

The Intramural Calendar of Events and schedule of activities are available outside the Intramural Office (M202) and at the Information Booth (2nd Floor, Building A). Announcements of upcoming events will also be listed in the Harbinger, on campus bulletin boards and will be broadcast over the campus radio station (WHCM).

Student aides, supervisors and league and tournament sports officials are also needed for the Intramural Program. For further information or to apply for supervisory or officiating work, contact the Intramural Office (M202) at 397-3000, ext. 2466,2467.

THANK GOD! A New Track!

Rejoice! Harper Women's Track coach Renee Zellner ( 3-time division IV conference coach of the year) and mens coach John Johnson have a new torture device for their young merchants of speed. A state of the art track. Hopefully, this will increase track participation.

GRILL BUSTERS

by Byron Blanchard
Sports Editor

"Another one bites the dust" as a quivering piece of pseudo man-meat named Micheal Spinks got into the ring with the intensity of a doe caught in the headlights of a Mack truck.

I got the feeling he knew what he was in for. Tyson, reality's answer to Rocky III's Clubber Lang, made this trump extravaganza into a huge rip-off.

Rather than to reiterate the fight I'd like to talk about the fans. We all know that Tyson fed Spinks a knuckle sandwich half-way through the first round. The fight was funny in a brutal sort of way, but the crowd was funnier.

Since I did not pay 35 bones (We don't say dollars in the fight game) to see the fight (did I call it a fight?, I meant contest) on closed-circuit TV, I watched it on HBO from 50 different camara angles.

My roommate and myself must have counted 20 people still standing when Tyson broke Spinks' grill and sent him down for the second time. They were all in various stages of getting ready to be entertained: smoking cigarettes, drinking beer and I even observed one man zipping his shirt into his fly. One woman was picking her nose with a pen.

Finally, when Spinks went down from only two shots to the dome (head) , the people in the crowd almost in unison shook their heads in disgust, and I had to shake mine.

Faculty amid negotiations

An overflow crowd of faculty members listens intently at last Thursday's Board of Trustees meeting.

By Vicki Milewski
News Editor

Since August 16, 1988 the full-time faculty members of William Rainey Harper College have been working without a contract.

This has made for a more than uneasy staff working under less than desirable conditions. The full-time faculty became so uneasy that they felt it was necessary to picket the Board of Trustees meeting on Thursday Aug. 25. This was part of an effort to inform the board of their concerns and to show that they are united and serious.

There are 5 main concerns which the faculty would like to address before settling their contracts: a salary increase, an insurance benefit increase, an automatic promotion from associate professor to full professor, better early retirement options, and better overload pay.

A flyer was distributed during the picketing which stated their intentions clearly. "The Harper College Faculty is attending tonight's board meeting to demonstrate its resolve to negotiate an equitable and just contract now with the Board of Trustees."

Rex Burwell, faculty negotiator said, "We would like some movement on a few topics in our contract. The reason a new contract has not been signed is because no agreement has been made on those topics."

The board has offered a 4% increase for the package plan (which includes salary and insurance) in June of 1988.

This proposal was given after the faculty asked for much more in May. After hearing the proposed 4% increase the faculty came down some, but still refused the board's offer.

Since then the board has not responded to this proposal. "Area high schools, like district 211, have had approximately a 7% increase, and other community colleges have experienced a 6.5% increase," said Ray Moehrlin.

"The 4% offered is also not just a salary increase; part of it would go toward our insurance benefits," added Moehrlin.

During last Thursday's board meeting, Faculty Union President Phil Stewart presented to the board a salary comparison sheet from area schools and financial information from an audit conducted in 1987.

These documents showed the basis for the faculties proposal.

The package plan that the 4% increase would effect includes salary and the insurance. A faculty member's salary is determined by how many years they are employed by Harper and whether they are an assistant, associate or full professor.

The insurance benefits that are given to the faculty come in the form of a given money amount which is controlled by a committee made up of faculty and administrators.

The committee decides how to distribute the amount of money between all of the insurance benefits.

The 4% offered by the board is divided into the insurance benefits as well as the salary.

The faculty also feel automatic promotion from associate professor to full professor is an important issue.

Right now, the process is unsatisfactory according to a the faculty members.

A prospective associate professor who has completed their master's degree and thirty hours or more of graduate study must first fill out an application.

A faculty committee then reads the applications and recommends faculty members to the board. The number of associate professors granted full professorship is flexible and is determined by funds available and credentials of applicants.

It is the Board of Trustee's responsibility to approve all professorships. The faculty feel many arbitrary factors evolve during this process, for example, the reviewer's frame of mind, and personal knowledge of the applicant.

By implementing an automatic promotion based on as-of-now unspecified requirements the faculty hope to eliminate objectivity and make the process more neutral. The board has not commented on this issue.

Moehrlin explained the reason the current system is the way it is. He said James McGrath ex-president of Harper felt the desire for an automatic professorship was a philosophical dilemma, because he felt a full professor is an important position and should not be handed out automatically.

Two other issues concerning the faculty are better retirement options and better overload pay.

The second negotiations meeting was mediated by a Federal Mediator which is provided by law when two parties in any contract dispute come to an impasse.

Bill Miller explained, "The function a mediator plays is to talk to both sides and do what he or she can to produce an agreement."

Both the board's legal consultant, Fred Lifton and Norb Swenson, president of the faculty's union wrote to the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Services to request a mediator on July 20.

The Board of Trustees committee is made up of David Williams, vice president of academic affairs, Larry Bilowus director of personnel, Joan Smith, president of counseling services, George Vogel, Chuck Harrington, and Vern Manke, vice president of administrative affairs.

Fred Lifton was also present for the board's committee.

On the faculty committee is Bill Miller, Ray Mochlin, Jay Singelman, Joanne Powell, and Mike Lackey.

Norb Swenson was also present on the faculty committee.

Although neither side wanted to comment about what happened at the second negotiations meeting on Aug. 29, movement on both sides on the issues was confirmed.

The next step for the faculty as to hold a strike workshop presented by a representative of the American Federation of Teachers Union. The workshop will explain how to prepare and conduct a successful strike.

"We hope a settlement is reached sometime soon so that a strike does not become a possibility," said Stewart.

"We would like to settle this as soon as possible," Kris Howard chair-person of the board of trustees told a Daily Herald Reporter.

The same words echo from the other side.

Faculty pickets

By Robert Bols
Staff Writer

Following their 'informational picket' a multitude of faculty members crowded into the board room for Thursday's monthly Board of Trustee's meeting on Aug. 25.

The Trustees heard Phil Stewart, speak on behalf of Harper's full time faculty. He said in the board that the faculty's picketing of the meeting was "...for informational purposes only." He elaborated by saying:

"We strongly encourage the board to present proposals that will bring about movement toward the settlement of the contract, for without that, productivity in an unstable situation grows evermore dangerous."

He concluded the message with a pledge from the faculty "...to give the mediation process a chance to work."

When asked if the board of trustees intends to bargain in good faith with the faculty, Trustee Larry Montes said 'yes'.

During the course of the meeting, The Board of Trustees approved the 1989 budget for Harper College which included the tuition hike which will bring in approximately $315,000 more than current tuition rates. Harper has a working cash fund of $9,860,000.

Trustee Larry Montes spoke against including the tuition hike in the 1989 budget. He pointed out that Harper is very healthy financially and there is no need to make getting an education more difficult than it already is.

Funding was approved for the purchase and installation of a computerized automation system in the amount of $905,645. The system will provide optimum heating and cooling with substantially increased efficiency. The purpose for installing being to spend a lot of money now to save even more money in the future.

A concern was voiced that the cost of installing the system may exceed the amount awarded by the board. It was thereupon agreed that any money above that amount would have to be justified and approved by the board.

Also approved was $10,000 to be applied with a matching funds grant from the Brown and Sharpe Manufacturing Co. for the purchase of a state of the art computerized measuring device called The Brown and Sharpe Micro Val Coordinate measuring system.

This system will be implemented in existing manufacturing programs and will allow the T.M.P.S. dept. to develop new programs which relate to computerized automated manufacturing.

Polly Brandt was granted early retirement and was saluted for 20 years of service on Harper's Computer Services staff. Polly Brandt served as the data input-output Manager.

F.Y.I.. The Harper College Board of Trustees meets on the third Thursday of every month at 7:30 p.m. in the Administrative board room on the third floor in bldg. A. These meetings are open to the public.

Gura's fountains installed for ecology

By Michele Ostrowski
Features Editor

"Please excuse the temporary inconvenience, we are working towards a safer more attractive campus" Does this poster remind you of improvements or has it been fuzzed out by repetition?

Supervisor of Roads and Grounds, Charles Gura has taken those little yellow signs to heart with his idea of the aeration/fountains of the lake between D and E buildings.

Gura called upon his experience and training with the Northbrook Park District to tackle the potential problem of dead or dying lakes.

His two bubblers connecting the east and west ends of the pond are to aerate the lake in order to circulate water with more oxygen, as the water is thrown up more air can enter the entire system.

In the words of the sign, Gura's fountains are also there for the fish, fowl in that they are designed to reduce anaerobic algae growth and purify the water for the fish and the football fields.

The water from the campus lakes are used to irrigate the playing field and therefore cleaner water makes for healthier grass.

In terms of making the campus more attractive, the sparkling water from the bubblers is a delightful sight, the grass will be greener and more appealing to spectators and finally the air is more pleasant on the nose now that the fountains "also reduces the algae smell."

Others also deemed the fountains necessary. Donald DeBiase, director of physical plant, approved of Gura's idea in hopes of keeping the runoff from sidewalks and pavement to a safe lake level.

Gura also consulted Dr James Arneson, of the biology department, for his opinion based on Arneson's water quality tests on the lakes. Arneson agreed the aerators would "help it [the lake] out". Finally, the idea passed with board approval.

Moreover, Mike Brown of liberal arts will be adding to the "attractive campus" as soon as the weather turns cold enough for an ice sculpture exhibition.

The bubblers will intentionally keep the lake open and the idea is to set Richard Hunt's sculptures floating amidst other bergs like a flotilla of Jack Frost's captives released into animation by the flowing water.

Gura's fountains promise to be a real plus all year long for both human and non-human observers. Fish and fowl will benefit with cleaner water and more oxygen while people get fresh air, cleaner water, perhaps more fish and birds to observe and the delightful sight of the fountains themselves.

"Hands" and "eyes" aides needed

By Mona Isa
Staff Writer

The Disabled Student Services is one of the many services at Harper looking for student aides this semester. Anyone with an interest in reading, writing and note-taking for the disabled will be welcomed.

"We are looking for someone on an on-call basis for working one on one with a disabled student who needs scribing done" or who needs someone to read a chapter or even a test, agrees Karen Habe, disabled student services supervisor.

It is not necessary to have experience in the human services or to know sign language as a tool to become an aid. It is only required that the aid be a Harper student.

The aide will be called on to be someone's "hands" or "eyes." "Or the aide may be on an ongoing basis, in which case he/she meets with the student once or twice a week," added Habe.

Besides reading and writing for the disabled, the aide may also want to become more familiar with the disabled department by doing clerical work, by answering phones and by interacting with the disabled students.

Meanwhile, the construction that has been going on at Harper for the past year is tumbling to an end, allowing convenient entrances to and from buildings. One of many projects in progress is the external lawn replacement.

A problem arises, though, for the disabled, wheelchair students; the door handles are too high to reach. The Disabled Services is working on improvements, but asks Harper students to be kind enough in assisting anyone who is struggling with entering or exiting a building.

Anyone with a desire to work with disabled students and it's services should contact Karen Habe at 397-3000 X2266 or stop by at D119. The hours are VERY flexible with an added incentive of $4.00 an hour.

IS 'TEMPTATION' REALLY TEMPTING?

Angry protestors outside the Ranguth Theater on the opening day of The Last Temptation Of Christ.

By Scott Neidl
Staff Writer

Although one of the most controversial films to be released this decade, The Last Temptation of Christ has all the makings of an expert presentation of cinematography. Qualities which make this picture shine include a powerful cast and a brilliant director.

Martin Scorcese (director of The Color of Money), displays his strong talents as a director in this fictional rendition of the life of Jesus of Nazareth.

Scorcese's keen eye for the camera and his creativity are what bring this show its vibrancy and realism.

William Defoe (Platoon) heads up the cast as Jesus. His portrayal of Christ, I must admit, was a little doubtful to me before I saw the film. However, I was truly impressed with his depiction of Christ. This character had so much emotional versatility that it was by far one of Defoe's best and most challenging roles.

Other cast members include Harry Dean Stanton of Pretty in Pink as Saul/Paul. David Bowie rounds out the cast with his intriguing portrayal of Pontius Pilate.

So what's all the controversy about if its such a good film?

Strong believers and followers of Christianity have been protesting the film due to a scene that displays Christ committing a sin (sexual intercourse) with Mary Magdalene.

It should be explained that in this segment, Christ had previously married Magdalene. The act of intercourse was not committed out of wedlock. Therefore it was done as an act of love, not of lust.

Most of the protestors have not viewed the film. As a matter of fact, they refuse to see it. Yet they continue to protest a film they haven't seen?

As far as the passionate scene between Jesus and Magdalene, that is all part of The Last Temptation of Christ.

The Devil tempts Christ with an easier life than dying on the cross for our sins, which Christ does not succumb to. The controversial scene is only a vision for the benefit of tempting Christ.

Throughout the movie Christ is so devoted that he abstains from temptation in the name of the Lord.

I suggest that you see it and decide for yourself. I assure you that if you're looking for a ticket to hell, you won't find it at a box office.

SUMMER RECORD RE-CAP

Part one of a two part re-cap of summer record releases.

By Steve W. Hill
Staff Writer

The Long Hot Summer has passed us by (as The Style Council has told us in song) and there is a lot of catching up to do on albums that have been released during the summer semester. Here are short capsule reviews of several of this summer's releases.

Elton John, "Reg Strikes Back"
MCA Rec/Cass/CD

I have a very uneasy feeling about this album. Part of me says yes, Reginald Dwight IS back, and making music that could almost be slated next to such classics as "Madman Across the Water," and that this album could be his biggest in years.

The other part of me says that yes, this album is good stuff, but where will it be a year from now?

No matter which part of me speaks louder, there is some very high quality material here. I am actually listening to this CD more than I thought I would be. Worth checking out for Elton John fans.

Rating out of 5: 3.

Wire, "A Bell Is a Cup Until It Is Struck"
Enigma/Mute
Rec/Cass/CD/DAT
(Reviewed by Rob Warnick)

To paraphrase a line from a classic Love and Rockets song, this album is haunting. On the first few listens the lyrics seem like gibberish. But when you begin to understand the words, the songs will start getting stuck in your head, leaving you with an unsettling feeling, most noticeably on the tracks "Silk Skin Paws" and "The Queen Of Ur And The King Of Um."

This album, Wire's second since they reformed in 1985, is also their most accessible. Although they are using more keyboards now, their trademark distorted guitar sound is still evident, especially on "It's a Boy."

The album was produced by Gareth Jones, who is known for his work with Depeche Mode. It is also one of the first two rock albums to come out on DAT (Digital Audio Tape).

Rating out of 5: 4.5.

'MOB' is "O.K."

by Mike Park
Staff Writer

I didn't want to see it, but now dare I say it? Yes I will say it , say it for the world to hear! For I am not ashamed. I thought MARRIED TO THE MOB was O.K.!

Were it not for the fact that I had a free pass and two hours to kill, I would have passed this one right by. But as it turns out, MARRIED TO THE MOB is pretty funny.

It's all about this woman (Michele Pfeiffer) who gets sick of being a mob wife. So after the evil godfatheresque head mafia guy "Tony the Tiger" has her husband wiped out, she goes to hide in the big city.

Then she teams up with an FBI guy (Matthew Modine, who played Joker in FULL METAL JACKET) to put Tony behind bars.

This picture rates right up there with RAISING ARIZONA and HAIRSPRAY as far as skeezoys of all sizes go.

Another plus lies in a groovy sound track with Debbie Harry and Chris Isaak.

Toss it all together and what do you get? Solid entertainment and a damn good choice for your amusement dollar.

STUDENT AMBASSADORS

The Harper College Student Ambassadors is an organization of students who, through a variety of volunteer activities, assist with the enrollment and orientation of new students to the Harper campus.

The organization offers students the opportunity to develop leadership, organizational, and interpersonal communications skills through involvement in programs coordinated by the Admissions Office and the Center for New Students.

Participation in the program also will help students in the future, providing an added dimension to their job resumes or applications to other colleges and universities. An added personal benefit is the new friendships that the students make through their volunteer work and attendance at Student Ambassador meetings.

Some of the activities that Student Ambassadors participate in include serving as campus tour leaders, participating in student discussion panels, serving as new student orientation leaders, representing Harper at college nights and during information visits to high schools.

Students who would like to participate in the Student Ambassador Program should be available to volunteer about one hour per week to selected activities.

To learn more about the Student Ambassador Program or to obtain an application, contact Bev Hoffman in the Admissions Outreach Office, Building C, Room 101, phone 397-3000, extension 2247. There will be an information meeting on Tuesday, September 20.

WHAT IS PTK?

Phi Theta Kappa is a national honorary fraternity for community and junior colleges. Harper's members belong to the Phi Phi Chapter.

To become a member of the Phi Phi Chapter students must have a grade point average of at least 3.5 and have completed 24 credit hours in courses at the 101 level or above while at Harper College.

Although becoming a member of Phi Theta Kappa is not necessarily easy, it is an honor that lasts a lifetime. Being a member of Phi Theta Kappa also has advantages. For instance, it appears on your transcript, opens scholarship eligibility, and develops your leadership and interpersonal skills.

The Phi Phi Chapter initiates new members twice a year at the beginning of the Fall and Spring Semesters. Members of the Phi Phi Chapter participate in various activities. In addition to the monthly business meetings, members attend breakfasts and dinner meetings, play wallyball, participate in service and fund raising projects, as well as social outings.

When you get notice that you are eligible to join Phi Theta Kappa, don't hesitate; just come join us. The members of the Phi Phi Chapter of Phi Theta Kappa look forward to meeting you!

Q: Is There Anybody out There?

A: Nope.

An open letter to the Players, the Writers, the DJs and the Senators--

By Peder Sweeney

If you have been a regular reader of the Harbinger in past semesters, you're probably familiar with what has generally been termed the "apathy problem." When I wrote for the Harbinger in '82, '86, '87, and Spring '88 there was an apathy problem. I've read through issues of the Harbinger dating back to '75 and there has always been an apathy problem. Judging from what I've read about this dreaded apathy problem it's a wonder that Harper didn't shut its doors years ago.

But the truth is that there is no apathy problem. There simply is no apathy. The entire, long-running issue stems from a simple misconception that has been magnified out of proportion because, by its very nature, those people who hold it, and who are best served by it, have access to Harper's media.

We should realize by now that the apathy problem is one of self-serving illusion and not a lame student body. The answer lies not in exhorting students to rally round the ticket office, but in redefining the problem--in stating the problem for the first time as it is instead of how some of us would like it to be.

If half the people at Harper didn't care what went on, then they could be called apathetic, but no one cares, and in the history of Harper, no one ever has! That's not apathy, that's the way it is.

Harper is the drive-thru restaurant of higher education. Taco Bell doesn't sell pennants and pom pons or accuse the eating public of apathy when they have a bad quarter and we shouldn't either. People come to Harper, get what they paid for, and go. They have neither the time nor the inclination to pretend that Harper is the sister institution of U of I. It's not. They're third cousins, twice removed.

When we hear the word apathy used to explain unattended events, students are being made the scapegoat for a bumbling Program Board or Cultural Arts Committee. Some events draw big numbers and make big money. Others are targeted to a select few and sustain acceptable losses. Some are so incredibly inane that they bring the terms "malfeasance" and "mismanagement of funds" to mind. It wasn't student apathy that signed a contract with Jimmy "Dy-no-mite!" Walker.

More often though, we hear the word apathy used with regard to Harper's sports teams, the Harbinger, WHCM and the Student Senate. It is important to remember that Harper is not one of the big schools, it's more like a scaled down version--a practice field. At Harper, the sports teams don't exist for the fans, they exist for the players. This newspaper and the radio station don't exist to serve readers and listeners, they exist to serve their staffs. Saying that the Student Senate is important doesn't make it true. It's not. If any of the teams or this paper or the radio station or the senate were to disappear tomorrow, it would make not one iota of difference to any Harper student except the players, the writers, the DJs and the senators.

And this isn't a bad thing. It's great that Harper provides the teams, the newspaper, the radio station and the senate for those of us who wish to take advantage of them. Apathy is the term that players, writers, DJs and senators lash out with when they forget this basic precept of their position and develop a hunger for recognition.

From this point of view, the student body is not apathetic--it's just right. Players, writers, DJs and senators must remember that they are here for themselves--that their brightest moments are theirs and theirs alone. They should struggle for the sake of the struggle and onward that end they should maintain their focus. Measurements of success should be made against personal standards and not on the basis of response from fans, readers, listeners or constituents.

If recognition for my columns were meat and potatoes I would have starved long since, but I have other reasons for writing them and the Harbinger satisfies those reasons perfectly. Recognition is more like a special, seldom-served dessert.

Off her Rocker

with our mom

What is it about sitting down to my typewriter to begin my first column for this school year that makes me feel like a sixth grader in English class beginning to write the ever popular "What I Did on My Summer Vacation?" The only difference is, my essay is a little more along the lines of, "What am I Doing Back at School--Again?"

Actually, summer vacation was wonderful. I feel as though I have passed the ultimate test of endurance, having survived three of the highest electricity bills in history, amidst cries of "Mom, are we ever gonna go outside again?"

Yes, many people complained about the heat this summer, but how many of them survived back to school shopping at Venture? Well, I survived this test of agility, patience and endurance while sporting true grit. I grit my teeth as hard as I could in an effort to avoid spewing forth the MOST incredible collection of distasteful dialect ever recorded.

It has often been said that housewives at a two-for-one lingerie sale are animals, but you should have seen their children at a ninety-nine cent erasers that look like lipstick or fruit sale. It was incredible--the fighting, the pinching, the scratching--oh yeah, that was the moms. I guess we are animals.

Back-to-school supplies shopping at Venture gives new meaning to the old slogan "something ventured--something saved". I figured that the biggest savings at Venture on that memorable summer day, was the life of the manager as I made my exit.

My answer to the husband who comes home complaining of a hard day at work and says "Honey ... you've got it made staying at home with the kids all day ... Oh dear, I seem to have forgotten something at the store. Would you be a sweetie and bring the kids with you to Venture for me to pick it up?" It's always months before my husband complains again.

We are all back to school now. The children are armed and deadly with their five pairs of new footwear; followed by a three hour debate over the cost effectiveness and quality of Reebok tennis shoes (compliments of Dad);

the "Who Framed Roger Rabbit" lunch box, followed by a trip to Ridge cinemas to find out who in the heck Roger is anyway (compliments of Mom); and the box of sixty-four brand new Crayola Crayons, followed by a five page long, all lower-case lettered list of rules on the who uses, how to be used, and when to be returned pastels (compliments of sister).

Much to my amazement, I did get over the let down of summer's end as I watched my little darlings traipse off to school all caught up in the glory of freedom from their heat-crazed mom.

And as I look back on that moment, I realize once again, that going back to school is a privileged experience that gets better with age.

WINTER MOON

By Peder Sweeney

The old Ford pick up sat idling in the parking lot, its heaters unit defroster blasting on full, its engine rumbling with mild uncertainty as its exhaust puffs and gasps punctuated its spirited efforts and vaporous clouds of exhaust swirled up and away from it.

It was cold outside, the kind of cold that sets records and makes headlines. A cold so extreme that children weren't allowed outside at all and which adults braved only as necessary, timing acceptable periods of exposure not in minutes, but in seconds.

Two men ran out of the nearby tavern toward the truck, their heads bowed, upper torsos rigid as they drove their hands deep into their pockets and hunched their shoulders up high. They reached the truck and leapt into the warm cab, gratefully yanking the doors shut and muttering mild oaths in grudging respect in the almost unfathomable cold. They were fortified with bourbon and beer but the cold cut quickly through the alcohol and into the bone. They petted their hands and contorted their faces to restore warmth and circulation but even a few seconds of exposure had deprived them of Dan sat behind the steering wheel and stared forward with grim determination. They had a drive of fifteen miles ahead of them, fifteen miles that normally took less than twenty minutes. It was fifty-five most of the way but seventy five was fine since you were past the city limits where there was nothing left but miles and miles of seemingly endless farmland all the way to the isolated hunting cabin that Dan called home. Farming roads that had only been paved within the last ten years and from which nothing was visible but loosely strung telephone poles and rolling, snow covered fields.

Scotty stared forward also, silently regretting the last few hours in the bar, wishing they had left earlier when there would at least have been other traffic on the roads. Those dangerous last few hours certainly hadn't been any fun, sitting and listening to grizzled old boozers trying to top each other in local horror stories. One loathless old fart had gone on for half an hour about a thirty year old double murder/suicide, detailing again and again the gruesome remains that went undiscovered for two weeks, when little remains, he said, the 12 gauge shotgun and two starving family dogs had left.

Well, the idiot bartender had a story that could beat a simple double murder/suicide. This one too had dogs, wild dogs. Everyone's ears perked up at that. Wild dogs were a major problem in the area. They were dangerous bastards, homicidal. Killing sheep, calves and colts not for food, but just for the sake of killing. Weak and cowardly individually, they travelled in vicious packs. Sick, infested and mangy, covered with open sores and flies and their own feces, often rabid, they were hunted by day and hunters by night. The bartender related a tired old story that had achieved folklore status in the area. A story where the mongrels actually broke through a window of an isolated farmhouse and killed and killed and killed Mommy, Daddy and six kiddies found with their throats and bellies torn out, their faces twisted in pain and horror.

Sanity hated it. He hated the dogs, he hated the suicidal killers, he hated the cold and the snow, he hated the slack jawed boozers and the bartender and he was beginning to hate Dan who kept them in the room but when they should have been on the road. Most of all he hated the alcohol which was making him so goddamn loutish.

Dan was angry too. Angry at Scotty who had been strong with him for a few weeks since his old lady kicked him out. Dan got along all right with Scotty, seeing as he didn't have to see much of him and he'd been strong with him much of him lately. He was angry at himself too. At almost thirty, his thinking was still an extension of his youth, but that wouldn't last much longer. A few more years and he'd be just another toothless old boozer sitting around in cars telling essentially inaccurate tales to homeless old bastards. He put away his fear of an nightmare future and resolved. At least be half good tonight.

He flipped on the headlights and spun the truck out onto the road. It was almost stupid, he knew, placing so much faith in such an old piece maintained (when?) when they were out on the town their lives would quite literally depend on the truck. If it stopped running for any reason, and there were several good ones such as ice in the fuel lines, a frozen cooling system and being grossly in need of a tune up, such he and Scotty would have to face their final dilemma, stay in the truck and freeze to death or go about to get out and freeze to death in less. Once they were out of town that was it, nothing as far as the eye could see and further. He had been making the trip through bitter winter weather for years and had never had any problem. Still, he thought, it only, had to happen once.

They were several miles out into the farmland when they came into trouble. The truck was bulling up well and keeping the cab heated as Dan held her at a steady sixty. They both saw it at the same time, a snow drift of indeterminate depth across the road ahead. Scotty yelled for Dan to stop which Dan had planned to do until Scotty yelled it. Instead, he pressed down on the accelerator and had the old Ford doing seventy by the time they hit the drift. They had to brace themselves against the abrupt reduction in speed the impact caused, and Dan had to fight to keep the truck lined up with where he assumed the road to be, but they finally managed to grind through the west high snow to the open road beyond. The drifts were dangerous as hell. They could easily cause the truck to stall or send it flying off course into a cornfield from which two men in this weather would not be able to extricate it. No sooner were they free of the drift than the next one appeared, flavored in alcohol and his previous success, Dan again pressed the accelerator down and plowed headlong into the mass of snow. This time the snow was shallower than before but further across and by the time they came out of it the truck was fishtailing and its speed was reduced to thirty. When they came out of it the truck tried to leap off the road at the angle it was pointing, but Dan managed to regain control and they sped along through the perilously bitter evening, each with his own thoughts, each with his eyes locked intently on the road ahead.

There was one more drift between there and home, besides the long driveway, of course, where the drift was frozen like bandra. Under the full moon, Dan was able to see the drift from a quarter mile away. He didn't give much thought to it since he knew it wasn't as long across as the last one he had gotten them through. He approached it at an easy fifty five, intent on achieving an optimum speed that would allow him to break the truck all the way through without sacrificing control. It was then that Dan came to a rather startling realization, he saw a speed limit sign with only the word SPEED showing above the snow and he remembered that the road dipped away here

They were about to plow into an eight foot drift

He thought of slamming his feet down on the brakes but decided against it. They were almost already into it and trying to stop would only make matters worse at impact. Scotty came to the same realization that Dan had and placed his hands against the dash just as the truck sped into the drift and immediately crashed into a steeled car that had been completely hidden under the snow.

The collision was brutal. Scotty's arms were not ready for no severe an impact and his forehead crashed against the windshield. Dan had the wind knocked out of him by the steering wheel which also took several of his teeth. The front of the truck was crushed and twisted. Afterwards they sat in silence, each taking stock of his injuries and predicament.

"Are you all right?" Dan asked around a mouthful of blood and crushed tooth that he did not yet know the severity of.

Scotty's forehead looked like Dan's mouth, misshapen and bleeding freely. He put his hand to it, inspected the blood on his fingers and shrugged Dan understood the shrug.

"We're not far. I'm pretty sure we can make it."

That was all there was to be said. With the windshield blown completely out and both windows shattered they were practically outside anyway. They exchanged glances and stepped out of the cab to start their walk.

Then, both came out the passenger door so that they would have less snow to wade through. Then, backtracked along they short trail the truck had cut and were then able to circumnavigate the entire drift. Once on the open road they continued their trek at the same stiff, hunch-shouldered trot they had come out of the bar in. The air was bitter, it burned their exposed faces except where the blood flowed and quickly penetrated their inadequate clothing. It froze their nostrils, stung their teeth, dried their eyes and scorched their lungs

To keep moving was all they could think about. Maintaining the rhythm of their fast shuffles and focusing everything on the asphalt and their moonlight shadows, trying not to notice that the path was fast becoming agony, or that the lightness in their chests was fast becoming constriction. Ears on fire, eyes squinting out of scrunched and bloody faces, clouds of steam issuing from their nostrils and quickly dissipating, they kept their slow but steady pace as the task of shutting out the pain grew more and more difficult, not yet sure that they would survive the cold and not even suspecting that an enemy more lethal than the cold awaited them

By the time they reached the end of the long driveway they could not judge whether they had been running for ten minutes or ten hours. Their minds were frozen into a command and an autopilot mechanism carried that command out. The command was keep going. Approaching the driveway their autopilot mechanisms awakened them to ask for new orders. Dan slowed to let Scotty come up even with him and then spoke in economical terms

"We can't make it around the drift. No time. It's frozen. We can go over it. Stay together."

Scotty nodded and they cut left down the driveway. It was about five hundred feet long. From the road it dropped away for three hundred feet until it cut back up toward Dan's house. They could see the one room cabin already, a light was on inside appearing yellow against the stark moonlight. It looked warm.

They reached the frozen drift, which hadn't done any actual drifting for several days, and gratefully mounted it. The frozen snow provided a hard but precarious surface under their feet and they moved stealthfully across it. No autopilot steered them now, they were as alert as sentries, judging every foothall with meticulous scrutiny and then the next and the next. Their movements looked patterned as they mixed long steps with short, their legs moving forward, left and right in a continuous search for firm footing and safe weight distribution. Another hundred feet and they could step off the side and bolt straight for that house through a clear section of field, forsaking the rest of the driveway altogether. As they approached it Scotty hit a soft patch and his left leg plunged through the crust all the way to his upper thigh. Dan stopped and helped to pull Scotty deliberately out, careful not to break the crust under his own feet with the added weight. They were both up and moving again when Dan said something that he wouldn't have unless he had to

Dan didn't know who or what was watching him, only that the feeling was strong. He had never had the feeling of being watched before and had always scoffed when he heard someone say it on the TV. Scotty scoffed then now and kept moving low and the open field, unaware that Dan had slowed and was behind him, but then Scotty must have felt the same thing Dan did because they both saw the source of their anxieties at the same time.

They were on the lapsed a nearby rose twenty of them, maybe more. They were very still, their attentions locked on Dan and Scotty. Clouds of steam billowed up and around them glowing eerily in the moonlight. Dan and Scotty stood and sat still, staring back. There was a silence to the universe as the two men, almost paralyzed with cold, their faces covered in white crystals that even formed on their bloody wounds, stood transfixed in a primordial confrontation with the twisted yellow eyes and clean, gleaming, white fangs of one of nature's most efficient killing organisms, a pack of wild dogs

The only movement on the landscape was the swirling, rising clouds of breath. It was only a few seconds that Dan, Scotty and the dogs stood still, but for Dan they encompassed a millennium of racing thoughts and calculations. Every hideous story of carnage wrought by wild dogs flooded over him as he mentally ran the race he and Scotty would soon have to run for real. Dan and Scotty arrived at the same conclusion and that was that the dogs would intercept them twenty or more feet from the door. The idea of moving very slowly occurred to Dan, but he dismissed it. The race was on and it would be started in a matter of milliseconds.

Scotty realized it too, knowing that the race would very well get to be who got off to the earliest start. Sensing that the dogs were on the very brink of attacking, and knowing that Dan was still back on the drift Scotty made his decision: he ran

And so did the dogs.

And so did Dan, whose very first step shot down through the crust. He tried to lunge forward and off the drift, but his leg went deep and caught him. He pushed with his hands and one of them broke through. In frenzied desperation he spun his free leg out in front of himself and used it to gain the leverage to pull himself, not up, but forward, and into the open field.

Scotty was way ahead of him, the bastard. Dan ran as hard as he could but knew it was no good. The dogs would catch him way short. Scotty's fault. Scotty had betrayed him, left him stranded on the drift from which he would surely starve and freeze and he gotten off smoothly. It was hatred for Scotty and the desire for revenge that fueled his efforts. He ran hard, so hard as he could, angry that he couldn't run harder. The pain in his chest was searing.

Dan hadn't seen the drainage ditch that the dogs had to cross to get to the house. It slowed them down, altering his calculations. He redoubled his efforts, seeing a glimmer of hope.

No. He still wouldn't beat them, although it was clear now that Scotty would make it and that Dan could have made it had he gotten off to the same start as Scotty.

Dan waved very badly to get his hands on Scotty.

Scotty hit the door of the house and burst in to safety as Dan continued inward the point where the dogs would inevitably overtake him. He focused on the door, fully knowing that the dogs bearing down from his left would catch him fifteen feet short. They would fly at him, knocking him down, and then they would be on him, all of them, tearing at his skin, locking their teeth into his flailing arms, burrowing in until one of them had his throat in its mouth for the final, sudden, head shaking bite. . .

while Scotty sat inside warm and safe.

The dogs were so close as Dan now that he could hear their labored breathing and the crunching snow beneath their paws. It was a few more feet until they would be on him when Dan and the dogs were all startled by the emergence of Scotty from the house. His eyes were opened wide and he was screaming like a wild man, louder than Dan had ever heard a human scream before. Above his head Scotty brandished Sam's guitar by the neck, ready to bring it crashing down on the first dog that came within range. The sight and sound of the maniacal Scotty crazed the dogs to dig in with their paws and take a moment to reassess the situation. Dan bolted into the house as Scotty, still screaming and waving the guitar, backed slowly in and slammed the door shut.

They collapsed to the floor gasping for breath. Neither could rub the warm air in fast enough. After several minutes their eyes met and they laughed. Not a civil laugh or a polite laugh, an element insane laugh, loud and unrestrained, bordering on hysteria. They laughed so hard it wrenched their guts. Dan pulled himself across the floor to Scotty and they clasped hands tightly, lashing tight the bonds of comradeship as they lay on their backs still laughing crazily, rapturously sucking in lungfuls of air.

And that was where Dan and Scotty were when the first of twenty-three dogs, burning with the rage of hell, crashed in through the plate glass window.

Chicago Bears : A defensive preview

By Byron Blanchard
Sports Editor

The midway's favorite monster's are in serious trouble. The defense that so terrified its opponents in 1985 is gone. The defensive line is still intact but after that "it's all over baby."

All-pro linebackers Wilbur Marshall and Otis Wilson are gone. Marshall on a trade to Washington and Wilson out for at least 5 games because of ligament damage. That leaves only Ron Rivera, unproven 3-year pro Jim Morrissey, and Oklahoma rookie Dante Jones.

What about all-pro Mike Singletary? Oh, he's still there but has missed practice's due to water on the knee. Tough as nails he may be. Impervious he's not.

Out on the corners we have a pitiful situation. "L.A." Mike Richardson's name should be Gilligan. He's stranded on an island where receiver boats seem to always cruise by but never dock.

On the other side we have Vestee Jackson, Reggie Phillips, Maurice Douglas and rookie Lemual Stinson from Texas Tech incidentally, Jackson, Phillips and Douglas all started at least one game at corner.

Moving to the safety positions, we have the first rays of sunshine. Strong safety Dave Duerson is all-pro material. Although Shaun Gayle, a part-time starter at Ohio State, is small for a safety he fits well into the Bears' system.

The best news for Bear fans is that the defensive line of Richard Dent, Al Harris, Dan Hampton, Steve McMichael and FATBOY Perry collected a league-high 70 sacks. This is a group with few flaws.

A well publicized eating problem for the fatboy-ah-fridge should not effect his play.

This years black and blue bad boys are not going to be run over by enemy offences but neither are they going to be the Juggernaut of years past.

CROSS COUNTRY
willing to go the distance

By Chris Cotsiopoulos
Staff Writer

Cross Country head coach Ron Theberge, a cross country and track star in the early 80's, enters his third year at the helm of Harper's Cross Country team. "I am very optimistic about this year's team. I feel they are the best of my three (years) here at Harper" commented coach Theberge.

Although still growing, Harper's present Cross Country team consists of seven members. Returning are Brian Kwitchoff and Chris Cotsiopoulos along with newcomers are Tom Irons, Chris Swierzbinski and Maurice Stone of Fremd, Leo Heinz of Rolling Meadows, and the single female harrier, Jackie Szykowny of Schaumburg.

The season officially start on Friday, Sept. 2 with the Oakton open held at Niles West High School in Skokie.

On Wednesday, August 24, the pack carried themselves to the first of their two pre-season meets. This meet was also held at N.W.H.S.. The meet was repetitious 1/4 miles. Tom Irons and Brian Kwitchoff teamed to run six miles while Leo Heinz and Chris Cotsiopoulos ran four miles.

The other pre-season meet was the "Phoebe beneful Run" held in Mt. Prospect. The race was 6.2 miles. Tom Irons finished 3rd and Brian Kwitchoff finished 5th.

Theberge is training his team for the National meet in November. Coach Theberge has strong faith that his team will qualify for that meet.

Faculty prepares for strike: Negotiations continue

By Vicki Mlewski
News Editor

The faculty senate scheduled a strike workshop for Sep. 12 to be presented by a representative of the American Federation of Teachers Union (AFT). The workshop will explain how to prepare and conduct a successful strike.

"We hope a settlement is reached sometime soon so that a strike does not become a possibility," said Phil Stewart, faculty senate president.

"From what I have observed, I would hope it would be a short strike if in fact we had to strike," added Stewart.

Since August 16, 1988 the full-time faculty members of William Rainey Harper College have been working without a contract.

The full-time faculty felt it was necessary to picket the last Board of Trustees meeting as part of an effort to inform the board of their concerns and to show that they are united and serious.

A flyer was distributed during the picketing which stated their intentions clearly. "The Harper College Faculty is attending tonight's board meeting to demonstrate its resolve to negotiate an equitable and just contract now with the Board of Trustees."

There are five main concerns which the faculty would like to address before settling their contracts: a salary increase, an insurance benefit increase, an automatic promotion from associate professor to full professor, better early retirement options, and better overload pay.

Rex Burwell, faculty negotiator said, "We would like some movement on a few topics in our contract."

The board has offered a 4% increase for the package plan (which includes salary and insurance) on June of 1988.

This proposal was given after the faculty asked for much more in May. After hearing the proposed 4% increase the faculty came down some, but still refused the board's offer.

Since then the board has not responded to this proposal. During last Thursday's board meeting, Stewart presented to the board a salary comparison sheet from area schools and financial information from an audit conducted in 1987. These documents showed the basis for the faculties proposal.

The faculty also feel automatic promotion from associate professor to full professor is an important issue.

Right now, the process is unsatisfactory according to a the faculty members.

A prospective associate professor who has completed their master's degree and thirty hours or more of graduate study must first fill out an application.

A faculty committee then reads the applications and recommends faculty members to the board. The number of associate professors granted full professorship is flexible and is determined by funds available and credentials of applicants.

It is the Board of Trustee's responsibility to approve all professorships. The faculty feel many arbitrary factors evolve during this process, for example, the reviewer's frame of mind, and personal knowledge of the applicant.

By implementing an automatic promotion based on set of non-unspecified requirements the faculty hope to eliminate objectivity and make the process more neutral. The board has not commented on this issue.

Two other issues concerning the faculty are better retirement options and better overload pay.

The current retirement options do not cover spouses and the overload pay is approximately one-third straight pay. The faculty is requesting an overload schedule that would pay full-time faculty 50% pro-rata of regular pay.

The second negotiations meeting was mediated by a Federal Mediator which is provided by law when two parties in any contract dispute come to an impasse.

Bill Miller explained. "The function a mediator plays is to talk to both sides and do what he or she can to produce an agreement."

Although neither do wanted to comment about what happened at the second negotiations meeting on Aug. 29, movement on both sides on the issues was confirmed.

The next meeting is scheduled for Sept. 12. Stewart said an informational leaflet would be distributed to the students on the same day. The leaflets will be available in the student activities office, room A356.

The use of an arbitrator (differing from a mediator by making a decision rather than helping the disputing parties make a decision) is an avenue that can be taken if negotiations fail.

"We are certainly hopeful we will reach a settlement within the next few weeks," said Chairperson of the Board of Trustees Kris Howard.

The same words echo from the other side.

The faculty is resolved to gain a fair contract from the Harper Board and its members are assembled here to demonstrate that resolve and their unity of purpose," said Phil Stewart, president of the faculty senate.

Phi Theta Kappa hosts reception

By Susan Berne
Upcoming Editor

Harper College's chapter of Phi Theta Kappa hosted a reception last week in honor of Harper's new President, Dr. Paul Thompson, and the Chapter's newly appointed Faculty Advisor, Dr. Larry Kent.

The chapter also invited all faculty advisors and club representatives, the Phi Phi Chapter's active members, the Board of Trustees, the Administrative Board.

Dr. Thompson was elected Harper's President last April by the Harper College Board of Trustees from a slate of 80 candidates. Thompson was previously the president of Bellevue Community College in Bellevue, Washington.

Thompson is an honorary member of Phi Theta Kappa, an honor bestowed by the Alpha Phi Rho Chapter at Bellevue Community College.

In her welcoming speech, Chapter President Trudy Herbst welcomed back Dr. Kent to the Phi Phi Chapter because he served as faculty advisor for two years earlier in his tenure at Harper.

HARPER COLLEGE INTERNATIONAL STUDIES. . .

. . . . the education vacation

By Robyn Davis
Managing Editor

Sick of school in Palatine? Need a change of scenery? If only you could zip out of the country for a few months, soak up a different atmosphere, and see some sights. Ahhh, if only you you were rich, famous....or a Harper student. Wait a minute! You are a Harper student!

If Palatine isn't exciting enough for you perhaps London is. Harper College offers a study program in London where you can live in London, see the sights (as well as surrounding European countries), all the while continuing your classes.

Can you think of a better place to study art than Europe? You won't be taking field trips to the Chicago Art Institute (as wonderful as it may be) you can skip on over to The Louvre! What a place to fill your Lit requirement, take Shakespeare and go to Stratford! The possibilities go on and on.

As far as being rich is concerned, that is not a prerequisite for the program. The cost of the program; which includes travel, room and board, and an average spending budget, is estimated at around $5,000. Yes, it's a wee bit over that of an average semester here at Harper but it's about equal to the cost of spending a semester at a private institution such as Loyola right here in Illinois.

Just as with attending school at a public or private institution when you are financially in need, there are financial aid programs that do apply.

Another question that arises is that of transferring and the possibilities of participation in the four-year institution's exchange programs. This is a valid concern for more than one reason.

Many students are concerned that their credits won't transfer from a foreign institution to that of the school that they are transferring to or graduating from (as in Harper career programs). Not to worry.

The program is relatively new. It was created for junior college students in Illinois to give them the opportunity for study abroad where, in the past, they would not be able to do so.

The classes that are offered are the same as here at Harper. They are taught by instructors chosen from the participating junior colleges in classes with students from Illinois who are in the program. The credits transfer as if you were here in the good 'ol flatlands.

Junior college students in past years have been denied the opportunity to live and study abroad.

One reason is that many junior college students are involved in 2-year programs which don't require transfer to complete their education. Prior to a year ago in Illinois, a study abroad program on the junior college level simply did not exist.

A second reason that junior college students missed out was that many 4-year colleges require the student to have been going to school on that campus for at least a year. This rules out going for your junior year. The only year left to do so then is your senior year. Due to the fact that you are involved in graduate classes and finishing up, you usually can't or don't want to leave.

Due to the fact that the program is where it is, it is more or less geared towards a Liberal Arts education with the exception of some business classes that were only recently added. This should not be a deterrent though, as we all need to fulfill a number of Humanities requirements to graduate.

Let's put aside all the technical academic and financial jargon for just a moment to consider this. This, (pardon the cliche) is an experience of a lifetime. It is an opportunity to experience another culture in a way that can't be done through reading about it, watching it on TV, or even by going on a short vacation. The fact that you need not learn another language allows you to better interact and know this culture.

Also think about this one: If you are young and don't previously have a career (which you are now working towards), this may very well be the last chance you have to travel this extensively without worrying about family, your job, the dog at the kennels... all those ties that bind.

Perhaps you are not young and are returning to school. This can be the opportunity to travel that you missed years ago. A good portion of the students who are involved in the program have gone for that very same reason.

Got the itch? If you want to scratch it you can find out how. Harper College will host two information sessions for students who are interested in finding out more about the program or enrolling in the spring 1989 International Studies Program. The sessions will be held at noon and 7:00pm in Wednesday, September 21 in the Board Room, Building A, at the College.

To be eligible for the International Studies Program, a student must have completed 15 credit hours by the end of the fall 1988 semester, with a minimum cumulative grade point average of 2.5 . The recommended deadline for applications for the spring semester in London is October 1.

The only thing left to say is: when opportunity calls....don't leave it on your answering machine!!

Harper's Health Services

beyond band-aids & aspirin

By Michele Ostrowski
Features Editor

Campaign '88 is on and one of the most recent debate topics between the candidates is the condition of the environment and its impact on human health.

Here in a little midwest city, the toxic dumps in suburbia, the blood test syringes on the ocean beaches or the oil spills in the Persian Gulf don't have the advantage of "here and now" impact on people - in particular Harper students.

Our microcosms "here and now" guardians of public health reside in building A room 362.

Harper's Health Services is staffed be fully qualified registered nurses on Mon.-Thurs. 8:00am-10:00pm, Fri. 8:00am-4:30, Sat. 9:00-1:00 and by part-time physicians on weekdays for one and a half hours.

The major emphases of Harper's Health Services, according to college nurse Becky Santeler, are wellness, immediate care and free and confidential services."

Besides giving treatment for mild illnesses, Health Services endeavors to prevent physical difficulties through health education seminars, brochures, counseling groups on smoking, sexuality or weight loss and testing services for mononucleosis, pregnancy, vision hearing, V.D., blood pressure and others.

Health Services would like to help you, they want to know if you need someone to talk to and listen to you, would like allergy injections, have problems with a disability, want to talk about a hangover or about drugs, need accident insurance or want treatment for an emergency.

Santeler urges the Harper community to "watch the Health Corner Column in the Harbinger" and to attend the upcoming seminar on collegiate sexuality and blood drive on September fourteenth.

For an appointment or a visit call 397-3000 ext.2340, 2268 or for emergencies, ext. 2599.

As personal health awareness increases with visits and information to Health Services, perhaps further concern will spread to community services in the health field.

Rainbow Hospice, Inc. is looking for volunteers who, according to their news release, are "concerned with the comfort and support of terminally ill patients and their families." Volunteer classes will be held at Resurrection Hospital from 9am-12noon on Oct. 1,5,12,19,25 and Nov.2.

Margaret Murths-Krezka, volunteer coordinator, explains that volunteers "would be asked to do any of the following, being a friend and companion to the patient and family; relieving the primary care-giver for a short period of time, running errands for] performing office clerical tasks and fund raising activities."

Any persons interested should call 774-2480 for information or an interview.

Other services in the community include Parkside Senior Services. Parkside's Older Adult Services will be holding a six-week seminar series on "You and Your Aging Parent."

The group will discuss: "Normal Aging Process" on Sept. 27; "Depression in the Elderly" on Oct. 4; "Dementias Including Alzheimers Disease" on Oct. 11; "Psychological Impact of Aging on Individuals and Family Members" on Oct. 18; "Family Assets" on Oct. 25 and "Where to Go For Help" on Nov. 1.

The meetings will be held from 7:00-9:00pm at Older Adult Services, 9375 Church St. Des Plaines. For further information contact Pam Rumenzas at 439-5914.

In addition, the Center for Applied Gerontology will be sponsoring an education symposium on Intergenerational Equity. A Dilemma for Young and Old."

The meeting will be on Thursday, Sept. 22 from 8:30am-12:00noon at the Lieberman Geriatric Health Centre, 9700 Gross Point Road, Skokie. For additional information call Gail Bookhid at 508-5250.

Therefore whether nationwide or local, health services are available to you. There are opportunities right in this community for you to join, obtain information, or receive complimentary services all with the goal of public health.

Striking Odds:

A drawn-out disagreement

By Douglas Ray
Editor-In-Chief

Faculty members from Thornton, a local community college recently went on strike for 16 weeks. Is this what Harper's faculty members must do to settle their contracts?

Both faculty members and Board of Trustees Chair person Kris Howard say, "We are certainly hopeful we will reach a settlement within the next few weeks." For what reason is everyone so hopeful?

Negotiations began in May (almost four months ago). The first meeting saw very little progress. The second meeting resulted in some give on both sides, but a settlement is still far off. Currently a Federal Mediator is trying to secure an agreement from both parties.

If the faculty feel the negotiations are failing, they can strike by a vote of a simple majority authorizing such action. Then the date is set for a walk-out and finally, the students will be denied the "academic excellence" that put Harper College on the map.

"We are as concerned about your education as you are. We don't enter into this lightly. This is a serious topic," says Student Liaison, Mary Jo Willis, associate professor of speech and theater.

The negotiations are being complicated by the faculty's concern for the neglect of the current form of management termed "shared governance". The idea of shared governance (according to a number of faculty members) is "the faculty holds high respect for the president and the Board of Trustees and in return the president and the board demonstrate respect for the faculty by establishing committees to collect input from the faculty, staff and students."

The origination of the faculty's frustration with shared governance stems from the presidential selection process. Allow me to clarify and emphasize that the faculty is disappointed in the process NOT the selection.

Back when James McGrath left Harper College for Trinity College, the Board of Trustees began their search for a new president. They formed a committee consisting of one or two members from each element of the college (ie. faculty, classified staff, administrators, students, board of trustees, president's office, student affairs, academic affairs, administrative services and the community).

The committee broke down to approximately 15% faculty. The faculty feels that in terms of percentage make-up of the college, the faculty out-numbers many of the other elements and therefore they should have had a larger representation.

Since that time the faculty's morale has declined. The problem still exists and won't just disappear if we ignore it.

Negotiations would run much smoother and faster if the board of trustees and the faculty would recommit themselves to shared governance.

Next to "We are hopeful..." the most popular quote I received was "negotiations belong in the meeting room not in the press." I fully agree. I am not nearly qualified to carry-out negotiations and that is not my intention. The facts concerning this issue are numerous and complicated and I simply want to convey them to the student body.

Perhaps next week during the third negotiation meeting a settlement will be reached (I certainly hope so too!); but either way a show of concern from the students will help.

As I mentioned earlier, a show of student concern is important. I urge anyone who is interested in more information or who has an opinion concerning the negotiations to write a letter to the editor AND to our Student Trustee, Laura Jacobson. She is responsible for informing the Board of Trustees about student opinions and ideas, which is difficult to do without student input. You can send letters to A336 in care of Laura Jacobson.

Phil Stewart, faculty senate president, would also like to hear from you. He is located in A152. He will be distributing informational pamphlets about the negotiations which will be available on Sept. 12 in the Student Activities Office room A336.

Off her Rocker

with our mom

By Liz Brousseau

For the past 5 years, our family from the west coast has spent Labor day weekend at Mount Whitney. The two facts that I know about this particular place are that some folks camp there, and others climb to the top of it.

As the family had been begging us for five years to join them camping, we decided this would be the big year. It took me no time to decide that I was absolutely not mountain climbing material, and I knew in my heart of hearts that I would be content to just "hike, be there".

And I was there. Somehow, and I am not certain why; it was either the incredibly awesome, magnificent beauty of the solid walls of granite surrounding me, or else it was the fact that the high altitude had poisoned my brain, preventing any normal thought processes, but somehow I had undergone this phenomenal change of heart. I knew that just being there was not enough for me.

And, we had a plan. What is it about having a plan that makes an event seem deliciously irresistible? I don't know, why do people climb mountains? Because they have a plan.

Our plan was that the seven of us lunatics would begin our ascent at ten o'clock p.m. by the light of the moon, climb all night, and reach the top just in the nick of time in order to see the sun rise. This was a very nice plan in theory. Looking back upon it now, I know I was truly feeling the effects of the high altitudes.

We finally departed at eleven thirty p.m. with flashlights, snacks, layer upon layer of warm clothing, and total rapture in our souls.

Things were going fairly well, considering we had begun our ascent one and a half hours late, and the light of the moon was slightly dim, due to the fact that it had been one week since the showing of the full moon. It was a good thing we had flashlights.

The first leg of our ascent would culminate at one-thirty a.m. in the meadow. You probably don't need to know what the meadow is, as I had no idea, and I was climbing towards it, but briefly defined it was a lovely large grassy area which was flat- an important point- and had a cool stream running through it.

I believe it was at the meadow where I asked THE question. Some of you may already be asking THE question, and you probably have no intention of finding yourselves in the meadow.

The question in question, which I might add was asked much too late, is and was, "What is Mount Whitney?" Which was answered most eloquently by Joan, sister to my husband, woman with incredible strength, in short, an animal. "Liz", she adumbrated, "Mount Whitney is the highest elevation in the continental United States, it is the very highest peak of the East High Sierras, and the elevation is 14,495 feet."

What is it that causes me to enter into major events blindly? I don't know, why do people climb mountains? Because they are out of their minds with altitude poisoning.

What made a very strong impression on me was Joan repeatedly humoring, "Wait until the light of day when Liz sees what she is climbing on!" Being on the some what self-righteous side, I was not about to admit that I had possibly gotten myself into something bigger than I had ever seen before, and I wasn't seeing it THEN either.

I pressed on blaming the trail which was defined only by the large granite rocks reflecting their existence from the rays of my eveready flashlight.

We arrived at the base camp which completed the second leg of our trip, and it was four o'clock in the mountain morning, which did not include any sign of daylight.

At this point we had already discovered that we were the seven dwarfs and I was Grumpy. Fortunately, Sleepy, who had already passed out twice along the way, insisted on resting at base camp before completing our journey. After waiting an hour for Sleepy John to awaken, we finally aroused him by misrepresenting the time as six-thirty, when it was really five a.m.

The final leg of our journey began with more than one hundred switch-backs. I have to admit that before embarking on this expedition, this was a foreign word to me, however, after hiking over two hundred of them, I will never forget the word, or the experience.

Switchback is the traversing of the mountain trail from one side of the wall to the other, which is designed to soften the impact of the altitude on your body's constitution.

This worked very well for all but Dopey, who is respectfully given the title after purging the effects of the altitude upon the mountain side, and still was dopey enough to travel to the top. (I say this only with ultimate respect for Lisa, as she was able to negotiate the descent of the mountain faster than I under such adverse conditions.)

Finally, Sleepy and I arrived at the crest of the mountain at seven a.m.

After having completed the climb, but before descending, I must admit, I knew it was not worth it. I felt no sense of great accomplishment, I felt no incredible surge of power, I felt no person in his right mind would find himself on this God forsaken rock.

And I knew that I would have to wiber away on this rock until the good Lord was merciful enough to take my last breath and spare me from having to plunge to my death off the side of the fifty-third switch-back.

Finally after huddling against a tiny insignificant rock for two and a half hours, I realized that the other five dwarfs were already at the very peak of Mount Whitney 900 feet higher than I. This was only accomplished after climbing for another two hours. Upon realizing this, I knew I had to get off that rock.

So began the descent of Dopey and Bashful at 9:30 a.m. on Sunday morning, September 4, 1988. And now that I have seen what I had been climbing on in the light of day, I know I will never climb again.

And knowing that I made it down the mountain, and I am still alive, I know that I did feel a great sense of accomplishment, I did feel an incredible surge of power, and I still felt that no person in his right mind would find himself on that God forsaken rock. But all in all, I urge everyone to try it.

NEWMAN AT HARPER FOLLOWS AN 18-YEAR TRADITION

The Newman Association is a social, cultural, and service organization open to all Harper students. The Newman Association is not new to Harper College; it was renamed from Catholic Campus Ministries which began in 1976. The name was changed because of Newman's national recognition, many students are already familiar with Newman, and others were not clear on what Catholic Campus Ministries involved.

Events for this semester include the annual coat drive, information tables and displays during Hunger Awareness week and a special celebration event during Christmas. In addition, weekend retreats will provide a chance to get away and kick your shoes off between school and work. Interested students can just drop into the Newman office to chat.

This year the Newman Association will be looking for a member to represent Harper College at the National Catholic Student Coalition meeting which will be in Pennsylvania. Anyone interested in getting a good look at what is going on with people their own age across the nation should submit their name early for this position.

The Newman office is in A336b. For more information, contact Dennis Darby.

PHI THETA KAPPA

Attention all members. The Phi Pho Chapter will be having its first General Meeting at 2:30 a.m. on Wednesday, September 14 in the cafeteria.

SCIENCE FICTION CLUB

The Science Fiction Club's first meeting will be on Wednesday, September 14 at 2:30 p.m. in F334-b. Anybody interested in Science Fiction or the realm of fantasy is welcome to attend. For more information contact Dr. J. Hull at 397-3000, Ext. 2325.

NEWMAN

The Newman Association (formerly Catholic Campus Ministries) will meet on Wednesday, September 14 at 3 p.m. in D293. New members are welcome. Newman movie night is Friday, September 16. Sign up now for the September 24 canoe trip. For more information pick up a schedule of events in the Activities Office or see Dennis Darby.

BROTHERS AND SISTERS IN CHRIST (B.A.S.I.C.)

B.A.S.I.C. is discussing "Discovering My Identity" at weekly meetings on Tuesdays from 1 - 2 p.m. and Wednesdays from 2:30 - 3:30 p.m. in A336b. They are open to all interested students. For more information Paula Taber Student Minister for B.A.S.I.C., has office hours in A336b.

GEOLOGY CLUB

A series of brief organization meetings will be held to determine the clubs initial membership and specific interests.

Select one of the following times: Monday, September 12 at 11 a.m. Tuesday, September 13 at 1:20 p.m., Wednesday, September 14 at 9 p.m. or Thursday, September 15 at 9 a.m. All meetings are in D150.

If you are interested in the club but cannot attend any of the meetings, contact L. W. Knight in D140 at 397-3000, Ext. 2589 or P. F. Signera in D242 at Ext. 2726.

Circle K

Mt. Prospect Junior Woman's Club Scholarship

The Mt. Prospect Junior Woman's Club is offering two (2) $300 scholarships for the 1988-89 academic year.

The criteria for the scholarships are as follows:

Women, age 25 or older, enrolled at least half-time in a degree or certificate program. The student must demonstrate financial need. Scholarship may be used for tuition, fees, or books.

Application for these scholarships may be obtained at the Financial Aid Office, Building A, Room 364.

Deadline for scholarships is October 14, 1988.

Chicago Food Brokers Association Scholarship

The Chicago Food Brokers Association is offering three (3) $250 scholarships to students attending Harper for tuition, books, and fees.

The applicant must have at least one parent or the applicant him/herself who is currently employed in the food industry in the Chicago area. For the purpose of this agreement, the food industry shall be construed to include those companies actively in the sale and/or distribution of food products, non-food items, etc. in the metropolitan Chicago market. Applicants for scholarships must provide certification that a parent or the applicant is so employed.

Scholarships will be awarded to students enrolled in the curricula of Hospitality Administration and/or Food Preparation related courses.

The award shall be based on merit rather than financial need. But in the event of equally qualified applicants, need may be considered in selecting the recipient.

Deadline date is October 21, 1988.

Reggae Bayley

By Andrew Bolan
Entertainment Editor

On Monday, September 12, reggae rocker John Bayley will perform at the Ice Cream Social on the building A patio. Sundaes will be sold for 25 cents.

Bayley plays "Racca-Lypso"; a sort of reggae style called "Scatt", which combines pop, folk, calypso, and rock influences. He began performing in 1966 at the age of 13, playing at local clubs in his native Georgetown, Guyana.

After relocating to Kansas City, Missouri in 1972, Bayley began his career as a professional musician. In those early days he performed with such diverse acts as: Tina Turner, Lou Reed, Eddie Kendricks, Herbie Hancock and others.

In 1977 Bayley relocated again, this time to Colorado. It was during this period which he played with Jimmy Cliff, Taj Mahal, Richie Havens, B.B. King, Steel Pulse, and reggae legend Peter Tosh.

Today John Bayley resides at the foot of Pikes Peak in the "red rock forest", near Colorado Springs. Recently, he has even opened for AC/DC and .38 Special.

It has been said " Bayley's stage presence is both charismatic and unpretentious. Using his guitar as more of a melodic congadrum, he fiercely strums accompaniment with an erect thumb. His real drawing force is his incredible vocal range." His voice has been described as "honey laced with rum".

Reggae Rocker John Bayley, who is to appear at Harper, Monday, Noon, at the Ice Cream Social.

SUMMER RECORD RE-CAP

Part two of a two part re-cap of this summer's record releases.

By Steve W. Hill
Staff Writer

Here are more of Steve Hill's summer record reviews:

Crowded House, "Temple of Low Men"
Capitol Rec/Cass/CD

The sophomore effort from Neil Finn's hit-making trio is every bit as listenable and enjoyable as their first album.

The songs may not be as instantly memorable, but they are great nonetheless. "Sister Madley" is one of those songs that you could probably turn up real loud and not upset anyone...besides, it features a Richard Thompson guitar solo.

Just promise me one thing if you buy this album - if you don't like it right away, give it a few more chances. This is definately one album that has to grow on you.

Rating out of 5: 3.5.

Camper Van Beethoven, "Our Beloved Revolutionary Sweetheart"
Virgin Rec/Cass/CD

I have had mixed feelings about previous releases by this band, but my feelings are all positive on this one, which is their first album release under their new contract with Virgin Records.

I must admit that I got into Camper Van Beethoven after I heard that they were Michael Stipe's (R.E.M.) favorite bands. Now, with heavy MTV video play and frequent radio time, they may break through. This album, although not as odd and quirky as other Camper albums, deserves the praise it has been getting.

Rating out of 5: 3

Shriekback, "Go Bang!"
Island Rec/Cass/CD

Although Shriekback will never match the greatness of 1985's "Oil and Gold," they continue to put out material that blends quirky funk and smooth, calm lyricism (even without Dave Allen's presence on this album, but then Shriekback has always been mainly Barry Andrews any way).

Here they cover (gasp!) K.C. and the Sunshine Band's "Get Down Tonight" and cover it well. There are some very typical Shriekback songs, like "Shark Walk" and "Dum and a Shadow" and a song that they were doing in concert the last time they came around here, "New Man".

The biggest problem with this album is that it is only about 32 minutes long.

Rating out of 5: 4.

Blue Oyster Cult, "Imaginos"
Columbia Rec/Cass/CD

I bet you thought that these guys broke up a long time ago. Well, not really...it is just that their most recent albums have been ignored by CBS' Publicity Department. Their last album, 'Club Ninja,' just wasn't all that good.

Originally, this new album was going to be a solo outing for one of the band members, but the rest of the band joined in (including Allen Lanier and Joe Bouchard, who had not been on 'Club Ninja') and this is the result.

Although they are still on the border line of rock and heavy metal, "Imaginos" is much less on the metal side than "Ninja" was. They remake two songs from their classic "Secret Treaties" album ("Astronomy" and "Subhuman"), and finally tackle the Frankenstein myth in song. For B.O.C. fans who were disappointed with 'Club Ninja,' check this one out.

GRANDPA

By Peder Sweeney

Anytime I hear someone talking about how eccentric their old Grandpa is, I just have to laugh. Anyone who thinks their grandpa is a goody old coot because he puts catnip on his eggs or collects the urine specimens of the rich and famous doesn't know the meaning of the word eccentric. Eccentric doesn't necessarily mean colorful or kooky, it means a funny way of looking at things and that isn't always good. When I hear people talking about their nutty old Grandpa I always get the urge to tell them about my nutty old Grandpa.

I don't, of course--I wouldn't want to incriminate the old bird.

Grandpa's actually my dad. I've called him Grandpa since my son Jack was born ten years ago, but the truth is that he's always seemed more like a grandpa than a dad to me anyway. Always sort of distant--preoccupied--only attentive in brief spurts few and far between like a grandfather who's only around on holidays. The rest of the time he was mostly alone with himself, trying to untangle something or other, often something he had tangled himself for the sole purpose of untangling. That's what he liked to do, untangle things. He enjoyed learning things from the inside out and he was good at it--a little too good, some might say. He was always tinkering with something, secluded in his private little world unraveling the mysteries of anything that puzzled him.

The history of his self-education could be gleaned in archealogical fashion by entering his basement work area and digging through the shelves littered with his mechanical conquests. Once he had illuminated a particular gadget with knowledge he would set it down and never pick it up again, so the order in which he achieved intellectual dominion over any given thing relative to any other given thing could be assessed by gauging the relative thickness of the dust that had settled upon them. The geiger counter, for instance, had twice as much dust on it as the gas cooled by turbo ascending flutter valve housing, indicating that Grandpa had overcome his ignorance of uranium long before that of high altitude helicopter fuel mixtures. That's what he liked to do; overcome ignorance, just like doing a crossword puzzle. People who like to do crossword puzzles don't dwell on solved puzzles and neither did Grandpa. Once something was mastered, Grandpa would set it aside and move on. The main difference between Grandpa and someone who likes to do crossword puzzles is that the latter can enjoy other aspects of life. The former couldn't.

I was twenty when Grandpa's hobby first became something of a nuisance. I hate to speak of my own father in such condescending terms, but with Grandpa the choices are hasty or wicked, so I'll take hasty. Also, there may be certain legal considerations.

It was after I got home from my sophomore year at State that I first noticed a problem. Dad, as I still called him at the time, met me with a hearty handclasp and even noticed that I had had my braces removed. When I gently informed him that they had been off for four years, he smiled vaguely, shrugged and wandered away. I know that that doesn't sound like much, but it was the longest conversation we had had since I was eight and he took me to the basement for the birds and bees chat (about which I'm sure I knew more and which quickly turned into the dissection of a polaroid camera.)

I took my bags up to my room where I was immediately struck by the absence of my two gerbils, Mickey and Nikki. There was a special latch on the cage so that Whiskers couldn't make a meal of them and she had long since stopped trying. Fearing the worst, I sped down the steps in search of my relatively level-headed mother. I found her in the kitchen and when I asked her about my missing pets her entire frame sagged as if she were laboring under an oppressive burden.

Fearing that she had accidentally sucked them up in the vacuum cleaner (relatively level-headed) I hastened to comfort her.

"Well, after all," I said, "they were only gerbils. Rodents, you know. I was just wondering."

"Ohhh. . ." she wailed, "it's too horrible!"

"Two bucks each, really. I wasn't even that fond."

"Ooooh, I can hardly bear it!" she cried.

"Now that I think about it, I didn't even like them that much."

"He's a murderer!" she screamed.

"Shhh. . . what? Now, who is. Settle down now, Mom. Now, who's a murderer?"

"Ooooh," she went on dramatically. "Your father! He's a killer! He's insane! He murdered your little friends!"

"You mean Mickey and Nikki? My gerbils?" I asked her, amused by the notion of my perpetually distracted father committing gerbicide.

"The rats! Yes!" she sobbed. "He killed them!"

It seemed like it would be unkind to laugh, if not to my mother, then to the memory of Mickey and Nikki. "Why, Mother? Why would he kill my gerbils?"

She quit her sobbing, sniffled comprehensively and looked at me. "So he could repair them," she said.

I wasn't exactly wracked with sorrow over the loss of my gerbils--they were actually a bit annoying, always running around on that squeeky wheel and all--but I was concerned that if Dad wanted to study animals, that he should do it in a proper setting. I was going to suggest that he take a college night course in science where he could dissect clean specimens with the proper tools under the tutelage of an experienced professor. Otherwise, I was afraid he'd start searching through garbage cans and building excavations in search of mice and rats in need of "repair."

After the gerbil incident I had a long talk with him and thought we had ironed things out pretty well until a week later when Whiskers didn't answer her dinner bell. Fear and hope battled within me as I descended the steps to Dad's basement work area. I opened the door and nearly fainted. There was Dad and there was Whiskers. The only difference was that Dad was alive and his intestines and sundry other innards weren't dangling from every available projection--two statements that couldn't be applied to Whiskers with any degree of accuracy.

"Oh, dear Grd," I moaned, "what have you done?"

He looked at me with a victorious gleam in his eye and a bite-size heart in his hand. "It's all wrong, all wrong," he grumbled. "The pump's in the wrong place and the filters are too close to it. Look."

I looked as he set the heart into Whiskers, who, I now saw in more detail, was tied down on her back on Dad's workbench. Her legs were pulled outward by strands of copper wire and the long incision from her neck to her tail was held wide with fish hooks and fish line tied to roofing nails hammered into the bench. She looked like a future Gulliver all trussed up like that, the difference being that Whiskers wouldn't be waking up shortly and struggling against Lilliputian bonds. Her insides were out and there was nothing left in her gaping pink cavity except Dad's bifocals, which he was now putting his pockets for. Unable to speak, I pointed them out to him.

"Ah yes," he said, wiping the lenses off on his shirttail and putting them on. He then proceeded to build a better mousetrap. He showed me how a more centralized pump would wear down less quickly and how the intestines should run a wider circuit, allowing less constrained flowage. He was about to explain why fourteen startegically placed little stomachs would be far superior to one big one when I bolted up the stairs and emptied my own into the bathroom sink.

With Mickey, Nikki and Whiskers having been reduced to their basic components and subsequently disposed of (not shelved), there were no other lurry mysteries for Dad to unravel and, therefore, no need to keep him under supervision. We did not, however, let him out of the house alone.

A week after Whisker's funeral I had devised a fairly stirring sanctity of life speech, along with pat responses to all the possible arguments I foresaw my father raising. I strode down to his work area brimming with pro-life rhetoric and stepped confidently through the door. .

There's a fine line between eccentric, and insane, but it doesn't concern us here because Dad went bounding over that line like a jaguar after a gazelle. I stood in the doorway and watched as he inserted a large pair of pliers into his own mouth and tore out a tooth. He dabbed at the blood that filled his mouth and studied the newly formed hole in the mirror.

"My God!" I moaned. "Didn't that hurt?"

He stared at me for a long moment, genuinely confused. "Why on earth wouldn't it hurt?" he asked.

I shook my head slowly. "You didn't scream."

He pondered this.

"I meant to," he said.

I graduated and got married. My wife and I had a child, Jack. Mom died. Dad moved in with me and my wife and Jack.

In the years following my awakening to the fact that my father was a fruitcake I learned that there were two ways of dealing with him. One was to keep him institutionalized, the other was to keep him at home. The problem with keeping him institutionalized was that he had never done anything anti-social, so society wouldn't foot the bill. I had to. Another thing I found out was that Dad wasn't so much of a problem at home except when he needed a yet higher life form to dissect.

If we kept him locked up, like his doctors advised, I figured he would be unhappy and I would be unhappy. If, on the other hand, I let him stay with us and scrooped up the occasional roadkill to keep him amused, he would be happy and I would be happy. The roadkill, presumably, wouldn't mind.

The neighbors, however, would mind. They had their own ideas about Grandpa and I weren't too keen on having him around. Happiness and substantial savings, though, far outweigh pissed-off neighbors, and Grandpa stayed.

The downside of this plan, besides pissed-off neighbors and scrooping up roadkills, was having my son spend his formative years in the same house as Doctor Frahnkensheen. I didn't see any good coming of that.

Another problem with keeping him which, intrinsic to its nature didn't manifest itself until later, stemmed from the fact that Grandpa always had to have a greater challenge than the last. This was no problem when a box turtle could fascinate him for a month, but as time passed, it not only became increasingly difficult to find challenging new specimens for him, but he also came to master each more rapidly, causing an undesirable snowballing effect and forcing me to search for small animals in some very strange places. The mysterious rash of thefts from the children's petting zoo made the front pages but ended when the zookeepers started magnetically tagging their charges like library books and making patrons pass through sensory gates upon exiting. I found exotic little beasties like octopus and iguana at the ethnic markets and had a running lab at every pet store in town. Eventually though, as was bound to happen, Grandpa worked his way up the evolutionary ladder to his own species.

It was partly my own fault, actually. At one point, I was so proud of having gleaned a little monkey from an Argentinian grocer in the city that I foolishly gave it to Grandpa, midandy rocketing him past the two or three more years that we could have kept him busy with dogs, birds and small reptiles. After that it was very slow going. We stalled him with promises, only to bring him another monkey and cajole him into believing that it was a far greater challenge than the last. It took about two hours for him to lose interest in a new monkey and about two weeks for me to get another from the wholesalers with whom I now dealt directly.

Life is strange when you're an animal thief.

I spent many hours casually plotting ways to steal cows from fields and dolphins from the aquarium.

I took up birdwatching through a rifle scope.

I began reading promotions for the local rodeo with a most unsporting eye.

When I took Jack to the circus I spent the whole evening casing the joint, mulling over the possibility of coldcocking a clown and slipping away with a lion or an elephant. . . or a clown.

Then one night Grandpa came to me and said in a very solemn voice: "Son, I need a man."

Something not every son gets to hear his father say.

I couldn't give him a man, of course, so when Jack didn't answer his dinner bell one evening, I suspected the worst. I raced to Grandpa's third floor room but the door was locked. I banged on it loudly and called out Jack's name but there was no answer. I thought of calling the fire department to come and break the door down, then remembered that it was hollow and broke it down myself.

Inside the room I beheld a sight that will haunt me till the end of my days.

There was Jack and there was Grandpa. The difference was that Jack was alive and his intestines and sundry other innards weren't dangling from every available projection--two statements that couldn't be applied to Grandpa with any degree of accuracy.

"No, no, no," said a frustrated little Jack, both hands busily at work inside the gutted torso of his Grandpa, "this is all wrong."

Everything turned out all right. Jack got Grandpa working again and even made some design improvements which resulted in better circulation and reduced flatulence.

We're not sure whether Grandpa still has his urge to dissect or not since having been taken apart himself. He's been very quiet lately, so I was surprised a few nights ago when he came to me and said in a very solemn voice that he needed a woman.

I wonder what for.

Women's Tennis at Harper
coming up Aces

By Byron Blanchard
Sports Editor

Every program starts with a strong foundation. The beginning years of hard work, limited participation, poor facilities and the frustration of injuries can be the death of a weak new program. Sometimes though, these setbacks only fuel the fire for a strong program on its ground floor.

Kathy Chamberlain, the second year coach of our women's Tennis Team, seems to be the foreman who will oversee the construction of a winning team.

Chamberlin spent a decade at Fremd High School right here in Palatine, turning their team into a perennial conference power.

After struggling last year without enough players to fill a starting rotation (only five last year) she has almost doubled last year's participation total.

"...I think we'll be very strong" feels Chamberlin, "We were fairly strong last year with only five people but we have a real good top three people that are going to hold us in there."

The first doubles team of sophomores Lara Fermanis and Cheryl Piszczek should challenge for conference honors.

Piszczek and Fermanis were burning up the court last season before having only one conference loss going into the regional meet. Piszczek pulled a trip at regionals, bringing a strong season to an end.

Stephanie Gorecki and Conant Grad (my alma mater) Beth Kelby make up the second doubles team which should also be a force within the league.

Freshman Michele Garrillo, Margaret Ashwith Cane Heisler and Laura Krause are the new kids on the block. All are contesting for 5 and 6 singles positions and 3rd doubles team.

"Even though tennis is an individual sport we're still a team" feels Chamberlin."We're only as strong as our weakest link and everybody helps that person to get better."

As long as Cathy Chamberlin is in control of the maroon and gold raquet attack everything should come up aces.

THE DOG DAZE of football

By Byron Blanchard
Sports Editor

I am not a BEAR fan. I don't own a jersey with Walter Payton's number on it. I don't eat at Taco Bell and my nickname has nothing to do with any kitchen appliance. But, I AM a football fanatic.

Since I was in elementary school I have spent every fall weekend in a stupor shouting either obscenities or praise at a little plastic and glass box.

My stalwart companion, Sir Max, a ten year old greyhound, served me thru many gridiron wars. Max would answer my four-letter football commentaries with a bark of approval.

One day when Max and I were discussing the NFL's subtle switch from a pro-set offense to an I-back offense when the subject of Bear football came up.

Max said he disliked the Bears, further saying a Bear was a "stupid and tasteless animal whose primary function was only to eat and sleep." Max also stated that " the Chicago Greyhounds was a far more appealing name." The team could feature a chant, "Hound em!", since they could still bark on defense. The fans could then refer to the cheerleaders as Bitches. (We call them that anyway.)

Bits 'o Cross Country

By Chris Cotsilopoulos
Staff Writer

On Friday, September 2 only one-half of the Harper Cross Country team galloped to the Oakton Open. The race was a three-mile spurt.

Only three male members competed. Brian Kwitchoff finished fifth overall, third amongst the men. Tom Irons finished 19th. Chris Cotsiopoulos tallied in at 55th.

On Saturday, September 10, the tribe will compete in the Waubonsee Invitational at Sugar Grove, Illinois.

For the team to make the national meet in November, a full squad of five must attend each meet.

Good luck, guys!

Two vie for Business Senator

By Douglas Ray
Editor-in-Chief

The Student Senate election promises to be characteristic of past years with five candidates representing four of the six senate positions.

Students can vote by showing their student activities card to the ballot box supervisor on Sept. 19 and 20. There are four ballot boxes: buildings A, information desk; D-knuckle; F-media desk; and J-bea office.

The Business Division has two applicants, Kristin Brogan and Tony Messerges. Brogan read about the senate and found it was the "clear choice" to fit her interests. She planned on getting involved with student activities at Harper and the student senate will help her to take a "conscience effort to make college life at Harper more enjoyable and relaxing."

Messerges says the major qualification necessary for this job is a sense of responsibility and dedication." He was president of various high school clubs including the Junior Achievement Business Club. He also has knowledge of parliamentary procedure used at senate meetings.

Darlene Ivarson is running unopposed for representative of the Life Science and Human Resources Division. She was on the executive board for the Service Over Self (SOS) club and was also active in Students Against Drunk Driving (SADD).

Also running unopposed is returning student Patrick Ryan for Technology, Mathematics and Physical Science Division. Ryan has been very active in student activities through the last year. He held an executive position on the Program Board and was a regular guest at the Student Senate meetings.

The Special Programs and Services Division has one candidate, Michael L. Trippiedi. Trippiedi has had worked with legislature and written articles for the Daily Herald.

Faculty Negotiations update

By Douglas Ray
Editor-in-Chief

"If we are still far from settlement at the end of this session (Sept. 17), there may well be a strike authorization vote," Dave Macaulay and Roy Motta, co-chairs for the faculty negotiations support team, cautioned.

For the past several weeks the threat of strike has hung over students and administrators. The faculty still are negotiating for a salary increase, an increase in overload pay and substitute pay, and automatic promotion to professor.

By the end of the third negotiations meeting the board had upped their original offer of 4% salary increase to 4.8%, still a long way from the faculty's 7.3% request.

The faculty has scheduled a strike workshop for Sept. 24 to become prepared incase negotiations fail. They are also planning a second demonstration at the Sept. 22 board meeting.

Joliet Community College recently settled their outstanding contract after strike authorization vote with a 22% salary increase.

Registration and tuition on the rise

By Marc Balka
Business Manager and
Douglas Ray
Editor-in-Chief

This fall's registration was seven percent higher than in 1987. Next fall's registration is expected to be even higher.

Steve Catlin, Dean of Admissions and Registrar said, "Over the past four years Harper's enrollment has been growing." Catlin attributes this growth to its main feeder schools, Districts 211 and 214, Barrington H.S. and St. Viator H.S., as well as the general population growth in the northwest suburbs.

Harper's Board of Trustees recently approved its 1988-89 budget by a vote of six to one.

Catlin explained that this year's budget of $43.8 million is 7.85 percent higher than last year's.

One explanation for the increase is the State of Illinois' inability to keep up with today's college costs.

Also approved, by a four to three vote, was a tuition increase of $3 per credit hour (from $27 to $30 per credit hour) to begin next semester.

This results in the average full time student paying an additional $36-45 per semester and the part-time student paying roughly an additional $9-18.

The last time Harper raised its tuition was in the fall of 85. Enrollment was down and the increase was needed to keep up with expenses. Tuition was raised from $25.27 per credit hour.

The increase was originally suggested last year when Harper anticipated state grants to be insufficient to maintain the current level of "educational excellence". The state then informed Harper of an additional $600,000 they would be receiving.

According to Harper's Board of Trustees Vice Chair-person, Barbara Barton even with the additional funds from the state the school needs to prepare for the future by increasing the tuition.

Lawrence Moats, member of the board of trustees disagrees, "I think the school should be making it easier (for the student) not harder."

He feels the college is in good financial state and does not need the tuition increase, but according to Barton the tuition increase can not be reconsidered until next year's budget meetings.

Library chooses automation

By Michele Ostrowski
Features Editor

Good-bye old library, hello new! Yes, Harper's LRC is inviting students and faculty to the computer age with its recently automated system, which should be fully operational by January, 1989.

Ever since 1984, our library has planned for this computer automation in order to be on the par of sibling libraries in the community and to facilitate book tracking, circulation and over-due notice publishing.

For the past two years Linda Glover has had the title of Automation Project Coordinator because of her zesty interest in the project and because of her experience in reference, on-line searching and inter-library loan.

Glover and her cohorts, Mary Severs and Bob Thiede, wrote the systems specifications and headed the bid search last January/February, choosing CSLI Inc. as our library's supplier. Public libraries also use this firm.

With the goal of having the system operational by next semester, the LRC staff hopes to load the data base by Thanksgiving and complete bar coding over Christmas vacation for the library's 110,000 volumes.

This magnificently impressive system is designed to primarily hasten retrieval of information formerly kept on cataloged cards through the Online Public Access Catalog.

With the on-line catalog, a user could access the collection via computer by title, author, subject or any combination thereof and retrieve information from any of 30 indexed fields.

Glover also foresees printers for on-line units so that a user could have a permanent copy of those fleeting images on the screen.

The computer's subsidiary uses include quicker cataloging of new materials due to the eradication of waiting for book cards; automated acquisitions of new material; direct issuance of purchase orders, and keeping track of which faculty member ordered a book or a film.

Besides the 22-25 public access terminals, the library will have a program called Data Link at the reference desk that allows the librarians to call up other automated libraries' catalogs. This feature makes it easier for a student to find a book.

The computer also has the capabilities to tabulate statistics for the library's reports as well as to allow teachers to check the LRC's supply of supplementary learning material from home or office terminals.

In the future, Glover is looking into making the library card the campus wide identification card. In addition, she is looking forward to receiving two computer modules for periodicals and media booking.

Very proud of the system's accomplishments so far and anticipating more, Linda Glover sits among her Sequens, parallel processors, applications processors and laser readers in her makeshift office/training center at the back of the library.

"We're all committed to make this a smoothly working system," said Glover, beaming. "This [computer system] is the library's contribution to Harper's philosophy of the right of a student to succeed."

She also stresses that an automated library will be a plus for transfer students going to other universities with this type of system already in place - a type of preparation, if you will.

Glover summarizes her attitude towards the whole project as "We want to make each student's stay here the most it can be. We want to provide facilities so students can write the best papers and the best speeches; that's what we're here for."

Sex in the 80's is no longer simple. The proliferation of old and new types of sexually-transmitted diseases and the dangers inherent in various types of birth control methods have complicated all of our intimate relationships.

Individuals need to pick their way carefully through the maze of sexuality and choose appropriate paths.

The Price of a good education

By Douglas Ray
Editor-in-Chief

A three dollar per credit hour increase, multiplied by eight credit hours (the average student class load-my guess), multiplied by 20,000 students equals a hell of a lot of student money. Over a half million dollars. Where is it all going? During a phone chat with Ms. Barton, trustee member, I asked where the increased revenue was going. Into the capital (educational) equipment fund, I assumed? According to Ms. Barton the Board of Trustees would be meeting to decide where the money will go.

When I first heard about the tuition increase, I was sympathetic to Harper College. The figures showed that Harper was entering a period of financial stress and I had no reservations about sharing the burden. Harper hadn't had a tuition increase in four years and other colleges in the area were more expensive. At the time a tuition increase seemed logical.

Reviewing the facts though, I find that Harper is far from financial trouble, now or in the near future. So why is the board increasing the tuition? Perhaps for the same reason they can't pay their own faculty members a competitive rate with other schools in the area.

Lawrence Moats was the lead board member against the tuition increase. According to him the basis for the increase was eliminated when the state offered an additional $600,000 to Harper College. This was brought up during discussion before the vote was conducted but four out of seven trustees thought the school still needed the money.

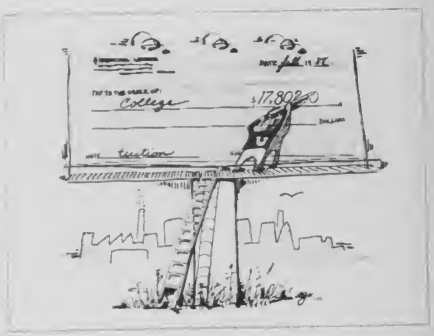

It makes me wonder what Ms. Barton means by "our first concern is to the student." Granted this increase won't make or break me. Nor will it probably break many other students in the area (face it, we live in the rich Northwest Suburbs) but it will make it a greater challenge. Some students may not be able to return to Harper next semester and according to Moats, "I think we should be making it easier (for the student) not harder."

Board member John Cost, also opposed to the increase rationalizes, "I didn't think we needed it because it was only going to raise a relatively small amount of money in relation to the $31 million budget." In addition he pointed out that the students were not being represented in the decision. Students are more than welcome to attend board meeting.

Although the student trustee has an advisory vote, she cannot vote one way or the other without input from the student body.

Once again the best advice I have is to let the board of trustees know how we feel. If the board realizes that the student body is not prepared to be taken advantage of they may consider retracting the increase during next years budget committee meetings.

I encourage letters to the editor. All letters must be signed. The name will be withheld upon request but I cannot print your letter if you don't sign it. Also write Laura Jacobson, Student Trustee. She meets with the board once a month to give a report reflecting student input. Send letters to A336 addressed to Laura Jacobson.

ICICLE WORKS-HOT! SUGARCUBES-NOT.

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

The Sugarcubes, "Life's Too Good"
Elektra Rec/Cass/CD

You've probably heard of the Sugarcubes if you are into the current music scene. A big deal is made out of the fact that they hail from Iceland, a country that is not exactly best known for producing popular music groups.

Their first album, "Life's Too Good", has been at, or near the top of the college charts for several months, and has garnered rave reviews from critics both here in the States and over the pond in Europe.

I, unfortunately, cannot give the album a rave review. Although there are some flashes of brilliance, such as the breakthrough song 'Birthday' and the current MTV-heavy rotation favorite 'Coldsweat', the album also has some tracks that, no matter how hard I try, I can't seem to enjoy, such as 'Sick For Toys', 'Mama' and 'Cowboy', which is one of the six extra tracks on the CD (without which the album is about 35 minutes long).

The vocal chords of Bjork are indeed awe-inspiring in their own way, and the drums are very different from most pop songs. For those interested, the band members are Bjork, Bragi on bass, Siggi on drums, and Thor on guitar. The other vocalist is named Einar Orn and his vocals are harsh and, well, Icelandic sounding, whereas Bjorks voice is unusual but there's not so much of a Germanic/Slavic tinge to her sound.

The song lyrics are very good and presented in the liner notes in a way that makes them seem like short stories instead of songs.

The songs on "Life's Too Good" are very uneven, as are the vocals of Einar. If you're curious, check it out, but bear in mind that the songs you may have heard from the album could very well be the best songs on the album. Reviewed on CD.

Rating out of 5: 2.

The Icicle Works, "Blind" Beggars Banquet/RCA Rec/Cass/CD

For a band whose debut album was hailed as the best first effort ever by some critics (well, critics in the UK, the album went largely unnoticed in the US), The Icicle Works have certainly been bettering themselves and their music...but if the first album was the best, how can they get better?

Well, for starters, Ian McNabbs vocals have become stronger with every subsequent album ('Blind' is their fourth). Also the songwriting, although excellent on their self-titled debut album, has become even more melodic and brilliant. Chris Layhe's bass and Chris Sharrock's drums round out this Scottish trios increasingly distinctive sound.

This record runs the gamut from perfectly crafted pop ('Blind', 'High Time') to soaring, uplifting melody ('Little Girl Lost') and all the way to up-tempo rock and roll on 'Shit Creek'. The Icicle Works even dabble with an INXS type funk sound on 'The Kiss Off'.

The producers of 'Blind' is Ian McNabb himself. The album was actually recorded way back in July 1987, not more than a few short months after their previous album was released, proving that the Icicle Works is a band that enjoys laying down new tracks.

For collectors, take note that the import and domestic versions are different. Contrary to common practice, the domestic CD contains a track that the import does NOT have ('Tin Can'). The import album has a cover with artwork that is completely different from the domestic release. The import also has a number 2 in the corner indicating that this is the second release of a series of three that began on April with the 12" EP "Numb" and concluded recently with the 12" EP "Trouble" that comes in a box that allows you to store all three items. Check a record store that specializes in imports like the Turntable, Wax Trax, or Vintage Vinyl for these 12" records or CD singles (as all three releases are also available on CD).

Going back to the actual music, I can't praise this album highly enough. At this point it is my favorite album of the year, and may finish the year at the top of the list. There's only one track here that I don't care for, 'Two Two Three' (named after the song length). But that two minutes and twenty-three seconds cannot diminish the strength, quality, and accomplishment of the rest of this album.

John Bayley is a crowd pleaser.

Monday, September 12, Kaccalypso singer John Bayley performed at the Program Board's Ice Cream Social. Bayley provoked a standing ovation by performing such crowd pleasing covers as "Red Wine", "Don't Worry, Be Happy", "LaBamba" and "Buffalo Soldier". As an encore, he played "No Woman, No Cry."

DREYFUSS IN 'PARADOR'

By Scott Neidt
Staff Writer

The enchanting story of "The Prince and the Pauper" falls into the category of "fractured fairytales" in the new release 'Moon Over Parador'.

It's a bizzare tale about actor Jack Nosh (Richard Dreyfuss) filming on location in the Caribbean, when circumstances manage to get out of control.

Parador's dictator dies of a heart attack and his chief advisor, Roberto (Raul Julia), forcefully persuades Jack to pose as the dictator. However, Roberto gets more than he bargained for when Jack starts making political decisions on his own. Likewise, Jack gets more than he bargained for when the people of Parador, including Madonna, the mistress of the deceased dictator, start to praise him for all he's doing.

Paul Mazursky ("Down and Out in Beverly Hills") directs this little satirical journey into Parador.

Other cast members include Sonia Braga (Madonna), Johnathan Winters, and a cameo by Sammy Davis Jr. (playing himself).

Dreyfuss did a fine job portraying a character that was a little off the wall to begin with. He could have had a role much more suited for his talents.

To begin with, the plot is nothing new to the film industry. Its type has been in movies such as "Trading Places" and "Big Business." However, the movie did have some entertaining moments from start to finish. Though not nearly as good as some of the other films by either Mazursky or Dreyfuss, if you're interested in the film, go see it.

Afterwards, go out and rent another Mazursky film ("Down and Out in Beverly Hills") or another Dreyfuss film (either "The Goodbye Girl" or "Stakeout") and see what they can really do when they're at their peak of performance.

STUDENT ACTIVITIES PRESENTS A CHICAGO CULTURAL EXCURSION

Harper College is sponsoring an excursion to view The Art of Paul Gauguin at the Art Institute of Chicago on Wednesday, September 21. The excursion will leave Harper at 8:30 a.m. in front of Building A and return to Harper by 3:30 p.m.

The Art of Paul Gauguin will present, for the first time since 1960, a comprehensive exhibition of Gauguin's greatest masterpieces of paintings, sculpture, ceramics, prints and drawings from collections around the world. During the past 20 years, Gauguin's life and work have been extensively studied and written about, creating a context that permits the re-evaluation of Gauguin's art and makes this exhibition possible.

The exhibition was co-organized by the National Gallery of Art, the Art Institute of Chicago and the Reunion des Musees Nationaux in Paris. It will be shown at the Grand Palais after closing in Chicago. The Art of Paul Gauguin will be the first special exhibition to be shown in the Art Institute's new South Building, which opens to the public on September 17. Included in this tour is a special lecture by a member of the Art Institute's Department of Museum Education.

The cost for Harper students is $12.50. A limited number of tickets will be available for non-Harper students at $14.50 each. The price includes transportation, lecture, and viewing of exhibit.

Tickets are available at the Box Office in Building J on a first-come/first-serve basis. Advance purchases are highly recommended as there are only 42 seats available.

Watch for other cultural excursions to the Chicago Symphony Orchestra and a special theatrical production.

Grand Rapids drown Hawks in opener

By Sandy Salvatore
Staff Writer

Will the real Harper Hawks football team please stand up?

Watching Grand Rapids beat the Hawks 20-17 Saturday brought tears to my eyes. One could not imagine that the Hawks finished 11-1 last year.

Harper's quarterback Al Snyder threw 11 passes out of 27 attempts with 5 interceptions, and was sacked by the Broncos three times.

The Hawks scored quickly when Snyder connected with halfback James Haywood, a Dundee Crown graduate who played minor league baseball for two seasons, on a 13 yard pass and run play.

Magnus Brannstrom made it 10-0 with a 25 yard field goal and Haywood finished off the first half with a two yard drive.

Harper's defensive team of Paul Claps and Tony Sutton each sacked the Grand Rapids quarterbacks twice.

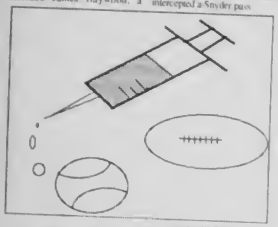

The three Grand Rapids touchdowns were the results of turnovers and Harper's punting. One was due to Broncos linebacker Hans Pechter when he intercepted a Snyder pass.

Pechter's interception allowed quarterback Corey Winn to connect with Willie Harris for a 21 yard touchdown to end the Harper shut out with 17:8 with 1:04 left in the first half.

The second was when Winn found Shemartan Robinson in the end zone for a seven yard pass late in the third.

The winning touchdown came off as a 25 yard pass from Winn to Harris (the extra point failed) with little time left for Harper to make a come back.

The Hawks will try to pick up the pieces as they visit Joliet this Saturday at 1pm.

Just say no to drugged out athletes

By Byron Blanchard
Sports Editor

Professional sport officials are in an uproar over how to handle the escalating drug problems. Call me narrow minded, but there should but there should not be an uproar or a problem. Those players found with any type of illegal stimulant or narcotic in their system should be penalized.

This is my three step plan for dealing with drug offenders in professional sports. First offenders will be suspended without pay for ten percent of their meets, games, or matches scheduled. Second-time offenders will be suspended without pay for 50% of scheduled events.

Second-time offenders would have to undergo mandatory rehabilitation. The 50% schedule suspension would serve as a base and may be extended depending of the progress of the athlete, but the athlete would be paid for the remaining 50% of the season even if he doesn't participate.

The fact that the athlete still gets paid will make professional teams look closer at their players when signing contracts, and better weed out athletes who already have drug problems.

This may be seen as overly harsh to the athlete, but that's too bad. This is a price you should have to pay for the privilege of being a professional athlete.

Third offenders are banned. No sob stories. No appeals. You're gone. Outta here. Vamoose baby. The one extenuating circumstance is, if your last offense was more than five years ago. Then, you are considered a second time offender. This is an optional rule to be used only by professional athletic organizations, who are too weak to stamp out drug abuse entirely.

Professional athletes are idolized by the young people of this country. If you ever pretended that you were Walter Payton, Chris Evenett, or Michael Jordan or if you ever imagined yourself running a touchdown, holding high the silver plate at Wimbledon, slam dunking in the NBA, you know how important pro athletes are to a child growing up. These men and women must live up to their responsibility to the public. They must know the kind of power their actions have over young people.

Parents need help raising their children, not to take them to school or to feed them. But, to show athletes as a positive endeavor with participants unspoiled by drugs or the effects that surround them.

All athletes on the professional level claim to have paid a price for their achievement. Avoidance of drugs should be added to the bill.

Winn interrupts Hawks' flight

By Byron Blanchard
Sports Editor

When you look at the numbers you'll want to scream. If you hold a team to 152 total yards, force 4 fumbles and allow negative yardage from the opposing teams running game you expect to win. All these things did not make a winner of our BRUISER BOYS on Saturday.

Everything started off great. Sophomore Al Snyder came out all guns a-blazin with a pretty touchdown strike to freshmen James Haywood to open up the scoring.

Things were looking up when Grand Rapids freshmen cornerback Steve Looney, who couldn't cover a piece of paper with Scotch tape, stepped on Looney had his trying to snare offensive star Bret Velde.

Although Velde had some problems picking up blocks on running downs, he was catching passes all around the clock.

The Hawks blew two scoring opportunities. One, a first and goal situation in the third quarter set up by a dropped pass in the end zone by Velde. The second came with a missed field goal after a drive that stalled inside the Grand Rapids twenty. Both were missed opportunities that cost the Hawks dearly.

After spending nearly two quarters of smashing Grand Rapids' starting quarterback Greg Hutchings into barely breathing, quivering flesh, freshmen Corey Winn stepped in to face the talons of the Hawk.

Unfortunately for the Hawks, Winn was wearing protective clothing. With his ability to get outside the Hawk pass-rush and find the open receiver, Winn spelled destruction for the Hawks.

Winn tamed the Hawks with three touchdowns and 144 yards passing in barely over two quarters. With Winn hot and Hawk Q.B. Al Snyder cold the second half Hawks tried to play keep away, a strategy that would have worked if not for Winn's broken play scramble and touchdown. It seemed like the same play they used to score there first touchdown.

The Hawks did everything to lose and G.R did nothing to win. The Hawk defensive was led by 'Mr.Inside" Paul Claps and 'Mr.Outside' Tony Sutton. These two totally shut down the running game, with Claps and Sutton accounting for two sacks a piece. Outstanding player of the game honors go to Claps.

The Harper College Cross Country team participated in the Waubonsee Invitational, the site of the first major meet of the season.

The meet turned out to be a preview of the season to come. Represented were all the mens teams in the NCA

Tom Irons and Brian Kwitchoff, harper's 1-2 Cross Country men, led Harpers team and each won individual trophies.

Tom Irons bustled to a second place finish and Brian Kwitchoff seated m at fourth. Leo Heinz breezed in to 34th; Chris Swierzbinski at 44th, and Chris Cotsilopoulos at 46th.

Harper team scored a total of 130 points, the total of all of their finishing places added together, which was good for fifth place. The top four places received team trophies.

The pack lead by Irons and Kwitchoff have faith they will qualify for the national meet in November.

The runnin' Hawks will go to the North Park Open on September 17th.

Faculty strike over?

By Douglas Ray
Editor-in-Chief

The Harper College Faculty may have a two-year contract by Friday, Sept. 30 according to faculty member and student liaison, Mary Jo Willis.

The faculty and the Harper Board of Trustees reached a tentative two-year settlement after nine hours of negotiating during their fourth meeting.

The agreement will be finalized today and presented to the faculty for approval during the week of September 26. The board must give the faculty two days to read and vote on the contract.

The faculty was originally asking for an 8.4% increase in salary, automatic promotion to full professor, better early retirement and sick leave benefits, and better overload pay.

The faculty made their first public show of concern by picketing the Aug. Board of Trustees meeting.

By the end of the second meeting the faculty were still unsatisfied with the board's movement. They began circulation of informational flyers to students. The flyer asked students to sign a statement of concern and turn it in to the president's office.

After the first three negotiation meetings the board and faculty were still far from a settlement. Concern about a faculty walk-out was growing as plans were made for a strike workshop to prepare faculty if matters did not improve.

Now, over four weeks since the faculty were originally working without a contract, a settlement may be coming.

IBM offers students 40% discount

By Barb Michelini
Staff Writer

The Harper College Bookstore, in conjunction with IBM Corporation, now offers a discount on IBM computers and computer products.

Eligibility for a 40% discount on selected items extends to any full or part-time Harper faculty member, staff, student or administrator. There is, however, a limit of one computer per person.

Since July 13, 1988 when the IBM purchase plan began at Harper, the bookstore has sent purchase orders at two-week intervals to participating IBM dealers.

An information packet and ordering form can be obtained from the bookstore office during regular hours. Included in the packet is ordering instructions, a sample order form, a disclaimer, and a list of authorized IBM dealers, as well as an optional computer needs self-assessment form and a complete product/price list of all available equipment.

Any interested member of Harper College should, upon attaining an information packet, choose a computer or computer product to suit his personal needs.

The form entitled Individual Computer Needs Self-assessment which is provided in the packet serves as a guide to choosing a computer. The guide is based on the user's computer knowledge, its intended use and the cost. The Academic Computing Committee prepares this form and provides a detailed list of reference material on IBM computers.

Prior to ordering a computer, an approved IBM dealer must also be chosen. There are 20 authorized venders located in the Harper district all of whom are IBM Certified Education Specialists. A list of phone numbers is supplied in the packet. Information on other approved dealers can be obtained from the bookstore office.

The sample order form in the packet should be filled out with as much information as possible before ordering the equipment. This includes necessary identification, the specific computer and dealer which have been chosen and the intended method of payment.

The bookstore will not accept cash. Only checks, money orders and certain credit cards will be accepted.

Upon ordering the equipment, the completed sample order form, along with proper Harper identification and payment should be presented. A disclaimer, relieving Harper of responsibility for supplying, delivering, shipping and servicing the computer must also be signed.

The equipment can be picked up about four to eight weeks later from the dealer.

$50 for Fest King

By Douglas Ray
Editor-in-Chief

For many years the Harper College Fall Festival Queen has gone unescorted. Not this year. For the first time Student Activities will sponsor the Fall Festival King.

To qualify for Fall Festival King candidates must be full or part-time students, active on campus and in the college community and interested in a $50 cash prize.

Candidates may apply individually or may be sponsored by a club. If a club sponsors a winner they also receive $50.

The royal couple will be individually judged on appearance, poise and personality, their interview with the selection committee, and participation in college and/or community activities.

Nominations for the queen were held through yesterday, but the deadline for nominations for the king will extend through Sept. 26.

Screening will begin Sept. 26-28 and the final selection will be made on Sept. 29. The king and queen will be announced at a Fall Festival activity to be announced.

For more information or applications see Susan McGinty at the Student Activities Office A336.

Astronaut scheduled to land at Harper Campus

Harrison Schmitt of Apollo- 17 mission to speak at Harper

By James Lambatos
Staff Writer

Hearken space enthusiasts, planet oglers and horizon expansionists.

On Thursday October 6 astronaut, scientist, senator Harrison "Jack" Schmitt of the Apollo 17 mission to the Moon will visit Harper College to give a free public lecture in building J room 143 at 1:00p.m.

Schmitt will talk about his experiences in the space program in a lecture entitled "America's Future in Space."

Following Schmitt's lecture, a fund-raising dinner will be held in his honor at Sage's in the Radisson Hotel.

The restaurant is located at 75 West Algonquin Road in Arlington Heights with dinner scheduled from 6:30p.m. to 10:00p.m. The donations of $50 per person will all go toward the new observatory which is being planned for Harper.

Schmitt trained as a geologist and scientist at the California Institute of Technology, as a Fulbright scholar at the university of Oslo and earned his Ph.D. at Harvard University.

He brings with him a host of other accomplishments besides his feat of being the last man to step foot on the Moon. The Apollo 17 mission was the final voyage to the Moon.

His studies of the Valley of Taurus-Littrow on the Moon in 1972, as well as his earlier scientific work, made Schmitt one of the leading experts on the history of terrestrial planets (those in the earth's galaxy).

Schmitt then went on to organize and direct the activities of the Scientist-Astronaut Office and of the Energy Program Office for NASA from 1973-1975.

In 1976, Schmitt won a seat on the United States Senate representing New Mexico. There he chaired the Senate Commerce Committee's Sub-Committee on Science, Technology and Space and the Senate Appropriations Committee's Sub-Committee on Labor, Health and Human Services and Education.

Currently he serves as a member of the Army Science Board and as consultant to the National Strategic Materials and Minerals Program Advisory Committee.

"Harrison 'Jack' Schmitt is a personal hero of mine and I'm really excited about his coming all the way to Illinois to visit our college," claimed Professor Paul Sipiera of the Astronomy and Geology Departments.

Professor Sipiera, who is heading the Harper College Meteorite Research Group and spearheading the drive to build the new observatory, believes the 30 minute lecture followed by an open question and answer format promises to be very interesting.

"It's going to be good," assured the professor, "we invite everyone and hope they will come."

"Most astronauts are military test pilots by profession who are then trained to do specific tasks for the space mission. Harrison "Jack"Schmitt, however, is unusual. He was the first and only person selected by NASA for the Apollo programs who was not a military test pilot.

Instead, he was a scientist by profession who then was taught to fly and pilot the Lunar Module for the Moon mission."

"This whole thing is great. Not only is Schmitt coming here to visit, but he's also helping us build our observatory," exclaimed Sipiera.

Sipiera is also promising to mount a very clever and unusual "Buy - A - Brick Campaign" to garner the rest of the money needed to finance the observatory.

The planned observatory, launched with the donation of a 12-inch reflector telescope by the Dupont family, will be a major coup for Harper College.

According to Professor Sipiera, "The telescope will be able to see all the way to Pluto and provide excellent detailed viewing of all the planets and the Moon."

This new facility will allow the college to meet the requests of a growing number of students who would like to add observatory experience to existing science courses. In addition, it would make it possible for the college to offer an advanced course in astronomy.

Harper would also be able to share its cosmic advances with other scientific groups in the Chicago area for research.

For more information about the lecture or to make reservations for the October 6 dinner honoring Harrison H. Schmitt, call Paul Sipiera at the college, 397-3000 ext. 2726 or 2375.

Sexual Responsibility Week Sept. 26-29

I thought it would never happen to me.

Have you ever been pressured into unwanted sex by a date, friend or acquaintance? Have you ever said "no" and had you protests ignored?

This is what's called aquaintance rape and studies show that it occurs more frequently among college students than any other age group. It can happen anywhere, at anytime, to anyone and the psychological effects can be devastating!

"Aquaintance Rape"
Monday, Sept. 26
1:00pm in A242

Gina Lumpkin of Northwest Action Against Rape will discuss "Aquaintance Rape," its prevention and how and where to get help when it occurs.

"It's Not Always A Sexually Transmitted Diseases
Wednesday, Sept. 28
9:00am in A242

Dr. Jeffrey Johnson, Gynecologist, will discuss various sexually transmitted and non-sexually related infections, their symptoms, cures and methods of prevention.

"AIDS: Facts For Life"
Tuesday, Sept. 27
1:00pm in A242
and again on:
Wednesday, Oct. 5
1:00pm in A242

There is one sexually transmitted didease for which there is no cure or vaccine--AIDS. A person infected with AIDS may have no symptoms but can spread the disease to both men and women through sexual contact. An estimated 1.5 million people in the U.S. are infected with the AIDS virus.

Jack Doherty will discuss these and other AIDS-related topics in his lecture.

"If You Care-You're Careful: Current Birth Control Methods"
Wednesday Sept. 28

You don't take chances if you care about your sexuality--you need to be careful, especially in you choice of birth control methods. The return of intra-uterine devices, new low dose pills, condoms and other current methods of birth control will be discussed by Barbara Michelin, Crossroads Clinic.

Letters to the Editor

Prison pen-pal

Dear Editor,

I am writing this letter in hopes that you will assist me in my unfortunate situation. I am currently serving a 12 year sentence for burglary and I haven't got any true friends left out there in the free world.

It seems as though the friends I did have only lasted as long as I could pay the tab for their friendship.

If it matters at all, I am a 31 year old Hungarian male with brown hair, brown eyes, 5' 7" tall, and weigh 165 pounds.

I have many interests and I try to take advantage of every opportunity to keep myself mentally afloat and to better myself.

It is in the area of morale that I am concerned with the most. Frankly, this place is unbelievable and at night when our mail is being passed out I find myself standing around waiting and wishing for a letter that never seems to arrive. Believe me, it becomes very disturbing after awhile.

I would like very much for you to print my letter. Perhaps I will get lucky and someone might decide to write. I will answer all letters as I truly want and need your friendship!

Sincerely,

Bill S. Santa

(If you are interested in writing Bill stop by the Harbinger Office and I will give you his address.)

Faculty vs the Board
(sheath your weapons)

Dear Editor,

The other day while dashing to my class, I was handed a news letter by a member of the Harper faculty. This news letter informed me of a possible strike. This of course would mean NO CLASS!!

Although a few unexpected days off in the middle of the semester would certainly be just what I need to recover from the initial shock of school starting, I realized that this issue is of a more serious nature.

Through the years Harper has developed a reputation as an excellent academic community college. The Harper teachers, board members, staff and the students each contribute key parts in making Harper College what it is. The idea of unity has been lost and a form of dictatorship has taken its place.

The dedication of each member of the Harper staff is unquestionable. Therefore a salary increase of 4% compared to salary increases of other junior colleges of up to 8% is most definately equivocal.

It is not the building itself that makes Harper College one of the best, if not the best community college in the nation. It is the dedication of the teachers and staff, it is the pride and school spirit of the students, it is together that we make Harper a benevolent academic community.

After speaking with a teacher who has been here at Harper for 21 years, I discovered that this is the first time this type of conflict has ever reached the intensity level it is now at.

Strange, isn't it? Here we are with a ten million dollar surplus, a new observatory being built and still not enough money to pay the faculty an equitable salary.

Because of the lack of cooperation, football players may lose possible scholarships. Students wishing to transfer for the spring semester or even for next fall will be behind in credits and therefore will be forced to postpone their future. Students who work full time who have arranged their demanding schedule in order to continue their education, have wasted valuable time.

Through negotiation, a reasonable solution can be devised. I hope that classes will not be interrupted because of the lack of cooperation. We are the future. Without the quality education that is now offered at Harper, the future is dark.

Sincerely,

Colleen Jennings
Biology major/pre med

Response

I am sorry to say that between myself and the Student Trustee only two letters were received concerning the negotiations. I thank you for your concern which I am confident many other students shared.

Fortunately, it appears there will be no strike. However, let's hope that the contract was not the only thing resolved. You touched on a very important topic. "The idea of unity has been lost..."

If the faculty and board can not unite and rededicate themselves to shared governance, I have doubts this college will uphold its reputation for "academic excellence". It will definitely be interesting to see what agreement they have reached!

Where would America be without electricity? I wondered this as I attempted writing without the benefit of it.

One wonderful thing about having your power go out, is that it gives you a reason to measure the value of it.

The only draw back to measuring the value of electricity when you don't have it, is that it takes so much longer to perform a basic task without electricity, one no longer has the time to ponder on such a question.

Actually, last point considered, one would think that with the golden age of electricity we would be realizing the period of enlightenment now as opposed to hundreds of years ago.

Alas, in this age of electronic glow, we are all but enlightened.

How valuable is electricity in the event of a power loss when one's top priority becomes getting it back?

And what are we willing to endure to get our power back? Calling the electric company.

It is at this point one discovers that the phone call (If answered) will use more energy than what is necessary to power one's household.

The process of answering your call is as follows:

1. After 5 minutes of hearing the delightful sound of the telephone ringing, your call will be answered by a computerized message which will inform you that your call will be handled by the first available operator.

2. After another 5 minute delay, the next response will come from a recording (computer operated of course) which will inquire if you are calling to report an interruption of your service. If yes, you are to press #1 on your touch tone.

It is at this point that you will realize that your priorities are completely out of touch because you will either find yourself praising the Lord because you have a touch-tone, or cursing the devil and his luck because you still haven't converted from rotary dial.

3. If you are blessed with the good fortune of having a touch-tone phone, you will be greeted shortly, 5 minutes shortly, by a real voice. Unfortunately this will only follow the computerized concerto of "I think I Love You" on the synthetic accordion.

4. The voice of the real person on the other end of the telephone will ask you if you are experiencing a loss of electricity, to which your answer is to be yes. Before you can even begin to wonder why you bothered getting all bent out of shape over your rotary dial phone, you will realize that you are hearing that same familiar chorus "I think I love you, so what am I so afraid of..."

And you know you are afraid that you may never get off the phone, have electricity again, or be able to get the droning sound of that confounded melody out of your mind.

5. After the passing of another 5 minutes, a frazzled voice materializes, and it seems to sound a little too much like Keith Partridge after a fight with Danny. (Do you suppose this could be some sort of brain washing tactic used by the electric company for the sole purpose of confusing people?)

Getting back to the process, the owner of this voice will request your name, address, telephone number, and report that the previous call had just informed them of the same power loss troubling your area-Thank you.

As you hang up the phone, one is still uncertain as to whether or not one's energy needs will be fulfilled.

My answer to this dilemma is that nothing is worth all this effort, although, I tend to believe that the average American could not survive without electricity, this columnist included, and we just can't afford to trash the whole system.

So, if you lose your power, just relax, kick back, and let some other responsible person become frazzled over it. This is the only chance the world gives you to stop, get off, and take a break--enjoy!

Rainmakers storm Harper

The Rainmakers.

The Rainmakers, with special guests, The Indigos and celebrity emcee Terri Hemmert, will appear at Harper College on Friday, September 30 at 8:00 p.m. in J143 auditorium.

Guitarist Steve Phillips, bassist Rich Ruth and songwriter Bob Walkenhorst found they shared common musical interests in 1983, after each had drifted from band to band. At the time, their Kansas City music scene was recovering from the remnants of an uninteresting "Urban Cowboy" fad. Survival meant cranking out Top 40 covers in bars and clubs in the area.

"We had been playing all this music we didn't like," the band recalls, "so we got together and said 'No More! We're gonna have fun if it kills us!' That was it, really. It was an attitude that we weren't going to take it anymore. We weren't going to quit and we weren't going to hate it anymore."

In 1984, the threesome, then known as Steve, Bob , and Rich, recorded a self-produced 10 song LP called Balls. It sold extremely well for a regional release, and received widespread national press.

In order to make the jump into the national Rock 'n' Roll limelight, the band decided two fundamental changes had to be made. The first was the addition of a sit-down drummer. (Up until this point, singer Walkenhorst was playing stand-up drums) The band turned to friend Pat Tomek on this count.

Second, an image to emulate: "We thought of water; everybody needs water," Rich Ruth says. " It can soothe you, satisfy a thirst, but sometimes it can be dangerous or threatening. That's up to the laws of nature."

With that, The Rainmakers were born.

On the band's self titled debut album, released in 1986, was riddled with such topics as government waste ("Government Cheese"), alcohol abuse ("Drinkin' On The Job"), suicide ("Doomsville") and job apathy ("Rockin' At The T-Dance").

Since 1986, The Rainmakers have released a second album, Tornado, which Walkenhorst called "somewhere between 'The Wizard Of Oz' and the wrath of god." It, too, was met with rave critical reviews.

Next Friday's show is to combine material from their first two albums with tracks they are planning to record in the near future.

INDIGOS OPEN FOR RAINMAKERS

The Chicago based band The Indigos will open for The Rainmakers Friday, September 30, at 8:00 p.m. in J143 Auditorium. Tickets are still available at the box office.

Singer/songwriter/guitarist David Kay, songwriter/bassist Dick Smith, drummer Bill Curtis(no, not THAT Bill Curtis), and Jay Whitehouse are riding a wave of success. In the past year, they have produced a demo tape, a video for their song "Union Station", then an album by the same title, have played such hip bars and clubs as Gaspar's, Metro, and Limelight. The band is even working on a half-hour video for Cablenet, which is to be released in February.

The band's repertoire ranges from old Beatles ("Please, Please"), to R.E.M. ("The One I Love"), and swinging to Midnight Oil and Smithereens ("Beds Are Burning" and "Blood And Roses").

"I think there's hit material on our album," says Whitehouse, who also happens to be the second in command of Alligator Records, the Indigos new found label. "It's just a matter of getting it into the right people's hands. You know when something's happening."

The Indigos are trying to get their record into people's hands, and are hoping that some of them will be Harper students.

The Indigos.

'Dream' is "Rocket's best"

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

Love and Rockets, "Seventh Dream of Teenage Heaven"
Beggars Banquet/RCA Rec/Cass/CD

This is not a new album. Last year Love and Rockets scored a big success with their third album entitled "Earth Sun Moon", so RCA, the wise profit-motived company that they are, decided that it was finally time to release the debut album from the band.

"Seventh Dream of Teenage Heaven" sees its first American release in a form slightly different from the original import-only version which was released first in 1985. To start with, the song order has undergone minor changes. Next, there is a previously unreleased track. Then there is a track or two missing (their cover of the Temptations' Ball of Confusion' was put on US versions of 1986's "Express", their second album, so it was left off of this one where it belongs). Finally, there is a shorter remix of 'Dog-End of a Day Gone-By'.

Confused? I am.

Now about the music... out of these three albums, this is Love and Rockets' finest. 'Dog-End of a Day Gone-By" has a driving, constant drumbeat that percussion fans will enjoy. The title track is a pleasant little song, but what follows is even better.

'Haunted When the Minutes Drag' is a perfect song; one of their best, ever. And just when you thought that it couldn't get any better, along comes the last track, 'Saudade', an instrumental that even a lover of classical music would appreciate. It's quite possibly the most beautiful instrumental ever heard on a rock album.

The other tracks (such as 'The Game') never approach the perfection of the final two songs, but they are all good nonetheless.

David J, bassist and vocalist, has a calm, quiet voice that blends wonderfully with Daniel Ash's, who also plays guitar. Kevin Haskins on drums rounds out this trio that started out years ago with Peter Murphy . . they were called Bauhaus, perhaps you've heard of them.

For Love and Rockets fans, seek out "The Bubblemen Are Coming", a 12" by The Bubblemen, who are actually Love and Rockets in disguise. Check a record store that specializes in imports. (It's available domestically, but harder to find.)

One final note: I prefer the import version of this album over the new domestic version. If you can find it for a comparable price, get the import. (Actually, it's worth it to get any version of this excellent album.)

HARPER HANDBELL CHOIR

The Harper College Handbell Choir has just returned from a 17-day concert tour of England and Wales. The group participated in the Third International Handbell Symposium at the University of Exeter with bell choirs from England, Australia, Korea, Japan, Canada and the United States. In addition to attending classes and performing for the other choirs, the group participated in an all-choirs concert under the direction of internationally known conductors.

Before and after the Symposium, the group toured England and played several concerts in various cathedrals. At Exeter Cathedral, where the 10 large bells in the tower are rung with ropes, the Harper Choir watched the ringers practice and were able to have a close look at the bells in action.

Between concerts the Harper Choir, under the direction of Shirley Hipwell, will be four years old this year. The choir welcomes students. Classes are also available for beginners, intermediate and advanced ringers. For further information about choir membership or classes, call the Continuing Education Office at 397-3000, Ext. 2591.

SHADES OF GRAY

Peder Sweeney

Dr. Thomas Olsen reclined on the well worn leather couch in his study, one hand slowly massaging his temple, the other holding the transcript from his phone call with the late Paul Atamian.

Dr. Olsen had just finished reading the transcript for the hundredth time, desperately searching between the lines for something he didn't know what some minute detail that he had missed before, some missing piece that would allow him to finally put the events of November 17th into perspective.

He told himself that he was searching for the truth, but in his heart Dr Olsen knew that it wasn't truth that he was looking for. Paul Atamian had given him more truth in one evening than most people endure in a lifetime. Dr Olsen wanted his comfortable illusions of morality restored to him. He wanted to return to a world where life was sacred and death was evil.

Black and white. No exceptions. No shades of gray.

TRANSCRIPT OF CONVERSATION BETWEEN PAUL ATAMIAN (DECEASED) AND THOMAS J. OLSEN M.D. (DEFENDANT, CASE #MA83352YW008) APPR. RECORDING TIME 0215 TO 0530, 11-18-1987. p.1 of 42

Dr. Olsen: Hello.
Atamian: Is this Dr. Thomas Olsen?
Dr. Olsen: Yes, who is this?
Atamian: My name is Paul Atamian.
Dr. Olsen: That name sounds familiar to me. Do we know each other?
Atamian: No sir, my name has been in the news recently regarding the murder of my wife, Martha.
Dr. Olsen: Oh yes, they just arrested the men suspected of that crime. I'm sorry. young man, I remember from the news that the circumstances were particularly tragic.
Atamian: Doctor, I have one of the men who killed my wife with me right now. I killed the other about thirty minutes ago.
Dr. Olsen: What! What did you say? I don't know what kind of joke this is Mr Atamian, or whoever you are, but Atamian: The men were released on bail at 4:30 yesterday. I followed them and as they came out of a bar I shot one in the back of the head and abducted the other. He's with me right now.
Dr. Olsen: Oh my God. . . is this true? Have you killed a man?
Atamian: That's just the beginning, doctor. Please listen closely, if you get off this line, or make any effort to signal anyone or in any way stop me, I'll kill this man immediately. If I even suspect that you are trying to prevent me from what I am doing, this man will die.
Dr. Olsen: I. . . I don't understand any of this. Why are you calling me? What are you doing?
Atamian: Do you understand what I said? If I even suspect that you are trying to stop me or trick me I'll kill this man.
Dr. Olsen: Yes, I understand.
Atamian: Listen to me, doctor, listen to my voice. You believe that I'll kill this man, don't you?
Dr. Olsen: (pause) Ye. . . yes.
Atamian: This man's life is in your hands, doctor. I don't care what happens one way or another.
Dr. Olsen: Good God, man! Think about what you're doing! You can't just take justice.
Atamian: Save the clichés doctor, I'm a very tired man. Please listen carefully. I'm standing in the emergency treatment room of your private clinic right now. I broke in and overrode the alarm by punching in the digits 5531721. The man who killed my wife is tightly strapped to your operating table. He looks very frightened, but then, he should be. He knows what's about to happen to him.
Dr. Olsen: How did you get my alarm code? I'm calling the po.
Atamian: Do as you wish doctor, you know the consequences.
Dr. Olsen: What do you want from me, Mr. Atamian? What is this all about?
Atamian: I apologize for the position I'm putting you in doctor, but I am going to ask you to instruct me in a medical procedure as I perform it. I am going to surgically paralyze this man from the neck down. Irreversibly. You will talk me through the procedure. I understand that it may be impossible for me, with no medical training and no assistance, to do this successfully, but we're going to try. Either this man will die or be paralyzed. I don't much care which it is and I don't know his preference, but I know what you must do -you must do everything in your power to help this man live. I swear to you that the only way to insure that he has a chance is to cooperate with me.
Dr. Olsen: God Almighty! Mr. Atamian, please listen to me! I understand what you must be going through. You and your wife were newlyweds I remember. You must be in a great deal of pain, but please listen to me. This is not the answer! I remember seeing a picture of you and your wife in the paper. I remember thinking what an attractive couple you made and how sad it was that such a senseless tragedy had befallen you. The whole community felt your anguish, Mr. Atamian. But that does not justify what you're doing. Please stop it here. Just put down the phone and go. I won't call the police until you've had time to get far away. Please do as I say, Mr. Atamian. Go, now, before this gets any more horrible.
Atamian: No senseless tragedy befell my wife and me, doctor. Two men entered my home and killed Martha. Worse, they left me alive. Now I intend to punish one of them. It doesn't help my pain and it doesn't do Martha any good, but I feel I must.
Dr. Olsen: Mr. Atamian, you could still have a life. Turn yourself in to the police and with a good lawyer and a sympathetic jury I think you'll see very little jail time. Then you could start again. You could build yourself a new life, a new family. I know it sounds impossible now, when the pain of your loss is still so fresh, but please believe me, with time the pain would recede and the prospect of putting the pieces back together wouldn't be so unthinkable.
Atamian: I appreciate what you're trying to do, doctor. I believe that you're a sincere, caring person who's trying earnestly to be helpful. I'm afraid, though, that you can't quite appreciate my point of view. I'll try to explain it to you. Maybe with time you'll come to understand the type of person I am, maybe not. I feel that for what I am going to ask you to do this evening, I owe you at least a small explanation.

I'm a very straightfoward person. I don't believe in God or try to trick myself into thinking that life is more than it is. Life doesn't actually depress me so much as it fails to amuse me. While I never saw much reason to continue my life, nor did I see any reason not to. Martha became my reason. She completed me. More accurately, she and I fused into a single entity greater than our sum. Love is a stupid word--maybe it once meant something, but creatively bankrupt poets and songwriters have reduced it to a backseat open sesame. I didn't love her with diamonds and chocolates and flowers, I loved her with my entire essence. She wasn't my perky little valentine, she was my redeemer, my blessed saviour.

My law practice suffered because I couldn't focus on it, it just meant time away from Martha--time being unamused instead of happy and whole. I quit my practice so we could be together. I've always had a feel for the market, so money wasn't a problem. That's where my life was when, one night, a couple of fools broke into my home and destroyed Martha.
Dr. Olsen: (long pause) The grief must be unbearable.
Atamian: There is no grief, doctor. Martha is no longer alive, which isn't any more terrible than anything else. Very soon I'll probably no longer be alive also. By destroying Martha, these men gave me what I had never had before, a reason not to go on.
Dr. Olsen: You can't possibly be as cold and rational as you sound. Only a machine or an insane man could mean what you're saying.
Atamian: It's possible, of course, that I'm insane, but I don't care if I am so let's not pursue it. I haven't meant to engage your sympathy by explaining all this to you. I simply realize that my worldview is rare and I thought you deserved some insight into the master in which you'll play so large a role.
Dr. Olsen: No, Mr. Atamian, I won't do it! I won't take part in this madness! I won't help you butcher a human being out of vengeance!
Atamian: I understand, doctor. On the count of ten I will accept that as your answer and hang up the phone. One. . . two. . . three. . . four. . . five. . . six. . . seven. . . eight.
Dr. Olsen: Stop! Dear God Mr. Atamian, I beg you not to do this. Let our legal system deal with this man. I understand that justice may be slow in coming but that's the way America works and we have to trust it. As a lawyer, you must understand that one man cannot make this kind of decision. The punishment you propose to inflict is monstrous! It's inhuman! I understand an eye for an eye and all that, but this is insane. Please don't do it Mr. Atamian, please. . . .
Atamian: An eye for an eye is an absurdity as a punitive rule of thumb, doctor. It rolls pleasantly off the tongue so people don't see the gross injustice of it. Is it all right for me to cut your hand off simply because I'm willing to lose my own? Is it all right for me to kill you because I don't wish to live anymore? Certainly not! It's preposterous! Both hands, both feet, both eyes, genitals and tongue for an eye! There's your rule! If you want to infringe in any way upon the happiness of another, prepare to pay dearly for it. Plan to spend every second for the rest of your life regretting it. Good citizens have no need for justice, doctor, only criminals do. The criminal justice system in America doesn't deter crime, it supports it. This man I'm with would spend around seven years in prison at the most. Can you imagine? Seven years of being clothed and fed and then free again. That's not punitive, it's a reward! Well, America accepts it, but I don't. I killed the other man because he was just a follower and didn't deserve worse, but this man will spend his life wishing he was dead but unable to die because medical people like you think that death is the worst possible thing that can befall a man and that it must be opposed at any cost. It's just another in a long line of ironies that I'm entrusting this man's lifetime of misery to the medical profession. That same ridiculous exaltation of life is what has kept you on the phone and why you will tell me how to sever this man's spinal cord.
Dr. Olsen: (twenty eight second silence) What will you do when this is done, Mr. Atamian?
Atamian: I'll be leaving the country directly from here, it's all planned.
Dr. Olsen: But your future. . .
Atamian: I haven't determined that I have one. Those men destroyed what Martha and I were together, do you see? Martha was just an ingredient in this ineffable whole, just as I was. The fact that I am alive and she's not is just a technicality. One that can be corrected.
Dr. Olsen: Mr. Atamian. . . Paul, is this what Martha would want? What would she say if she knew what you were planning to do to this man?
Atamian: She would cry for me. . . just as I cried for her. She and I understood each other, doctor. She would say that I was the true victim, that death had spared her the sorrow. That the agony of going on alone was the true tragedy. . . that's what she would say, doctor. . . she would cry for me.

(The remaining two hours and twenty five minutes of dialog deal primarily with surgical procedure.)

Everything had gone the way Paul Atamian had wanted. If the surgery he performed hadn't been the work of a practiced hand, it also wasn't vital to the outcome that it should be. It was enough that an ambulance had gotten the man to the hospital in time to stem bleeding and save his life. The damage to his spinal cord was irreversible.

The body of Paul Atamian was found on the divan in Dr Olsen's office.

Dr Olsen was at the clinic by the time the police arrived and was, after brief questioning, arrested for his role in the mutilation. Also at the clinic was an attache case left by Paul Atamian. It contained several items including a cassette recording of the phone call between himself and Dr. Olsen, a signed full disclosure and confession, and the name of a law firm that Paul Atamian had paid to provide the doctor's defense.

The case also contained Paul Atamian's wedding band.

Harper: 30

Confucius says: Good things come to those who wait.

Yes, wait ...until the fourth quarter when Harper (1-1 overall ,1-0 in conference ) scored three of their four touchdowns.

Quarterback Al Snyder completed 7 passes out of 18 attempts for 80 yards and one touchdown.

Harper's first touchdown came in the first quarter on a 4 yard run by Bill Kerstein. Kicker Magnus Brannstrom's extra point attempt failed. "It was a low snap", said Jeff Wright, "it was hard to get a hold on it, and we couldn't get it off in time."

The Hawks were silent until after half time. Defensive tackle Joe Belcher's 3 recovered fumbles led to 16 of Harper's 30 points. Belcher snatched the ball away from Joliet halfback Dave Cobbs for his second recovery on the Wolves 18 yard line. This led to a 24 yard Brannstrom field goal. This allowed the Hawks to fly carrying a 15-9 lead with 9:07 left in the third quarter.

Belcher's third treasure allowed the Hawks to set up a Kersten 1-yard touchdown blast resulting from a 31-yard, 7 play drive. Brannstrom's extra point put the Hawks in front 16-15, early in the fourth.

The spark came in the fourth quarter on a 9 yard Snyder pass to James Haywood.

The Hawks' final possession ended in a 1 yard touchdown by Todd Tesch. The Hawk's leading rusher (38 rushes ,for 86 yards) Tesch was a freshman, carrying the ball ten times on a drive which chewed seven minutes off the clock to seal the Hawks first win.

The Hawks' will greet Rock Valley Saturday 1pm on Harper's football field.

Volleyball Rebuilds

By William A. Steele
Staff Writer

The Harper college volleyball team is rebuilding slowly but surely. " We are looking on building." says Julie Elfson- Kuehn." I see us improving in every match, improving in teamwork.

She has to get over the great difference in the turnover of players and the high level in competition, especially in the NC4.

Janice Ward, the team captain, is a returning player. Her attitude, experience and talent really pull the team together. The rest of the starting lineup includes: Anne Thayer, Carla Bender, Sharon Ahern, Nicole Hollingsworth, Kim Nooner, Linda Haud, and Jennifer Stasch.

Jennifer is currently on "injured reserve" with a collarbone injury for at least four weeks. It is possible that she will be out for the season, but is expected to return.

Any girls still interested in playing volleyball should contact Julie Elfson-Kuehn at 397-3000 X246. Their next game is Thursday September 20th at Harper against the College of Saint Francis.

HAWK OF THE WEEK

After losing a match they should have won Kathy Chamberlain racquet-slingers invited the Trojans of Triton to a gun fight..The first two bullets in coach Chamberlains gun were the most potent .They came in the form of Cheryl Piszczek who dogged her opponent 6-0,6-0.The second was Lara Fermanis who devastated an overmatched Trojan 6-0,6-1.This Dynamic Duo of Doubles must also be reckoned with in the singles game.There dominating play (24 sets won to 1 set lost ) has earned them both Hawk of the Week honors.

There will be an important meeting for all potential wrestlers October 6 at 2:30pm in M-bldg in front of the wrestling room.

Station Manager, Tony Laramie and DJ's Peter Soby and Jim Hoffman relaxing in the WHCM office before the show.

By Richard Nozol

WHCM Manager, Tony Laramie and his staff of over 30 personnel may feel that they have high expectations to meet.

Last year WHCM was the object of much praise for their radio shows and change in style. In the early stages of the year, however, the staff that WHCM Community as Mary Jo Willis director of the play, "A Servant of Two Masters", President Thompson, and Phil Stewart, the Faculty Senate President.

The "And Now You Know" segment offers strange but true facts. This feature actually originated on the morning announcements Pete used to do at Barrington High School and is still going strong at Harper today.

Other shows on WHCM worthy of mention include "Innovation Creation, the Obsession with Progression" and "The Steve & Chris Happy Hour".

Many hope the Innovation Creation, the Obsession with Progression on Monday afternoons from 4-6:00pm

"The Steve and Chris Happy Hour" greets the morning on Tuesdays at 8:00am, an evening show with Chris Grezlak on Tuesdays from 6-8:00pm and the "Johnny Flair Show" from noon until 2:00pm round out WHCM's programming.

WHCM's music format has also taken an impressive change, headed by Music Director, Steve Hungsberg.

Steve says the format this year is "a combination of album rock and college-oriented rock." This is evident when one takes a look at the recording artists who are in heavy rotation at WHCM: Crowded House, Robert Palmer, INXS, Erasure, The Bible, Hothouse Flowers, Aztec Camera, and the Escape Club.

"This combination gives the listeners the popular songs they recognize, as well as satisfies the desire most college students have to hear the latest new music," Steve adds.

High Expectations? A big challenge? No problem. This year's crew at WHCM is on its way to presenting next year's staff with some serious goals to meet.

Signs of a new parking policy

By Michele Ostrowski
Features Editor

What category is our college? You've got it - it's a COMMUTER college!

That means the total student body, faculty, staff and administrators come to Harper by way of motorized vehicles. A logical problem, therefore, would be the availability and convenience of on-campus parking.

Last August 15, the start of the fall semester, Supervisor of Public Safety, Kevin King, implemented a much needed renovation of the parking system.

No longer do Harper cars brandish pink and checkered stickers for students and grey and checked stickers for faculty; now cars are color coded to the lots.

The parking regulation program changed to the new system in order to facilitate the "where" and "when" of parking.

Before, the 12 college lots were not clearly marked for anyone but faculty and medical permit drivers.

Secondly there were no directories stationed on the outer drive for advance warning of prohibited lots.

Lastly, the old system harbored an increasing number of "deadbeats" during the five years it was in operation.

Apparently faculty/staff stickers fell into the hands of those who didn't deserve to have them, according to Supervisor King.

Students obtaining the faculty stickers could park in faculty lots when they actually had no authority to do so.

King's new system maintains a tighter control over the distribution of faculty stickers. Unlike the old system's procedure of receiving faculty stickers through divisional offices, the new system distributes these stickers.

Teachers and staff must now report with their ID cards to building B for their stickers. Requests are double-checked against master name lists of approved individuals.

The cost of the overhaul ran about $3000. The price included the individual lot signs posted on the light posts, the outer drive directories as well as the renovated stickers. Financing was provided by the Harper General Fund.

King credits the improvement of his system to color coding. The ease of matching a sign's letter and color to your sticker's letter or color makes the system less confusing to visitors and students.

In addition, this method of parking avoids trouble with motorists who have trouble seeing written signs or reading English. Not all of Harper students are native English speakers.

Letter A is for administrators whose color is blue, faculty and staff have red B stickers and students are assigned green 'C' stickers.

When asked how the system is doing presently, King stated "[the system] is a lot better than the old but there are always complaints."

Patterned after the mother system at NIU, Harper's parking system has an added feature. Parking Ticket Complaint forms are given to ticketed individuals who find no justification for the ticket.

Since the complaints are now written out, a file can be created documenting the number and types of complaints.

"We then review them at the end of the year and use them as the basis for future planning changes in the parking system. It's a much more effective way to handle complaints [rather than an oral debate.]" stressed King.

HPPO offers toddlers toys and trips

By Michele Ostrowski
Features Editor

Every once in a while a Harper student can see them. Not very often mind you. Those who glimpse those little people may wonder where they come from or where they go.

These young children come to Harper for the same reason you do - for school, preschool to be exact in building 1 room 123. Harper's Child Care Program uniquely blends teaching and learning in its Child Learning Center.

The center offers a four program preschool; the first session is Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings from 9:00-11:30am, the second is Monday, Wednesday, Friday afternoons from 1:00-3:30pm, the third on Tuesday and Thursday mornings from 9:00-11:30am and the fourth on Tuesday and Thursday from 1:00-3:30pm.

Preschool is open to children of Harper students, faculty, and staff as well as the children of the community. The fee for the three day program is $336 per semester and for the two day program, $224.

The three to five year old children of the program have a daily schedule which encompasses group discussion, free choice time, story time, snack time, music and movement as well as outdoor time for large motor activity.

Each of the four preschool sessions has a capacity for 22 children at a time.

In addition, the Child Learning Center has a program only for children of Harper students, faculty and staff called the Child Care Service. This program admits children years two-and-a-half to five with the provision that the child is toilet trained.

Child Care Service has flexible hours, open from 7:15am-4:45pm, and allows its facilities to be utilized for a maximum of five hours a day per child. This program's fees are $2 a day per child.

The parents of the children who attend Harper's Child Learning Center programs are very impressed with the available facilities and have organized a parent's group in support of the programs.

The Harper College Preschool Parents Organization (HPPO) is sponsoring a fundraiser every Thursday and Friday for the whole month of October beginning October 6.

Because of the amount of traffic sustained by the program's equipment, the money raised will be used to purchase new classroom supplies including housekeeping tools, stoves, art supplies and perhaps an Apple II E computer.

The fundraiser will be in two parts lasting from 9:00am to 3:00pm on the first floor of J building. The "Sails" portion of the event will entail different vendors selling toys, books and puzzles.

On October 6-7, Book Fair Inc. will offer books, puzzles and stickers for half price. October 13-14 brings Discovery Toys. On October 20-21, Child's Garden of Books will provide high quality soft and hard cover books, cassettes and books for parents.

As a finale Lauri Puzzles will sell special heavy duty rubber puzzles, blocks and toys on October 27-28.

Part two of the event will include a drawing for great donated prizes. Every person contributing $1.00 or more to the Preschool Foundation Fund will receive a chance in the raffle for such prizes as: two round-trip tickets to Frankfurt Germany, an "Endless Weekend" for two at Nordic Hills, a French meal for two at the Portico, a champagne brunch for two or a Discovery toy, Marbleworks.

The children of the preschool will draw for the winner at their Halloween celebration.

HPPO President Barb Cohen is ecstatic over the progress made by the organization. When asked about her efforts for the preschool, Cohen gleefully replied, "You've hit upon one of my favorite subjects!

"It never ceases to amaze me what small investments of time can do for producing such substantial results - really concrete, solid results."

For more information about the sale or about the Child Learning Center, call the Child Learning Center at 397-3000 ext. 2262.

Math Anxiety: 1,2,3..Aughh!

By Alisa Chitlund
Staff Writer

Do you hate to balance your checkbook? Do large numbers make you nervous? "Do you sweat when you hear the word "MATH?" Do you feel like no matter how hard you try you will never understand math problems? Well, if you experience any of these problems - YOU AREN'T ALONE!

According to Phil Troyer, student development counselor, approximately 95% of all women eliminated themselves from 80% of their career options due to math anxiety. The original research conducted by Sheila Tobras, 10 years ago, still holds true today.

"Our culture seems to dissuade women from going into math related areas...women had permission to stop learning math earlier than boys," says Troyer.

As a result, they lack the basic skills needed to get along in our math - oriented world. They become math anxious and many women avoid math at all costs.

Math anxiety affects mostly women. But it is not exclusively a female dilemma. Troyer believes that anxious men exist but are more reluctant to seek help. He believes that some men feel that "their maleness is being attacked" if they ask for help.

Math anxious men and women can now join together and receive help dealing with their anxieties, without fear or embarrassment.

Starting October 7 the Math Lab Faculty and Student Development Personnel will offer a self-help group for any Harper student or member of the community who is afraid of math. The person does not need to be currently enrolled in a math course.

The group, led by Phil Troyer, Math Lab Assistant Val Bagraum and Associate Professor of Math Margret Scott, will meet on the first and third Fridays of October, November and December from 12:30p.m.-2:00p.m. in D106.

This support group is not a lecture or tutoring group. It is intended to help individuals overcome their anxieties in mathematical situations.

Topics to be covered during these sessions will include: What feelings do students have about math anxiety?, What triggers those feelings?, How do I control those feelings of insecurity?, What techniques are there to deal with math anxiety?

The group leaders will share their own experiences of math anxiety and facilitate participant interchange about their own experiences.

The members will find out they are not alone in their fears and that help is available. There is no charge to join the sessions and students can join at anytime.

Groups such as this one have been successful at community colleges and four-year schools throughout the United States.

An example of a success story is "We beat it, so can you!" videotape 3438 available in the LRC media circulation desk.

For more information about math anxiety, Troyer recommends these two books: Mind Over Math by Stanley Kugelman and Joseph Warren and Math Anxiety by Sheila Tobras.

If you have any questions or need more facts please contact Margret Scott @ ext. 2401, Val Bagraum @ ext. 2395, or Phil Troyer @ ext. 2208.

Making a REAL radio station

"If we did get it (a transmitter for WHCM) I would enjoy it. It would be more like a REAL station. I think it would be better for the DJ especially (those) that plan to DJ in the REAL market," says Larry Merkel, DJ for WHCM.

I have always wondered why WHCM was not broadcast on the dial, either AM or FM. Why, in fact, is WHCM not broadcast outside of building A? (It is only in the cafeteria on the first floor, the lounge on the second floor, and the pool table room on the third floor.)

It is generally accepted that the DJs want a transmitter. For the past many years the topic of getting a transmitter has been pondered by the general manager.

So, I asked Tony Laramie, general manager of WHCM. His greatest concern was the loss of freedom for the station and the individual DJs. "He ('Morty', news director and production coordinator) has told me that it would hurt the station more than help it. We would lose the freedom." He explained that the DJs would not be able to make their own song selections for their show and timing would be much more strict.

Jeanne Pankanin, director of student activities expressed a similar concern, "With increased listeners off campus comes administrative safeguards." And these safeguards would restrict the freedom of the DJs.

Of secondary concern was the cost of the transmitter. Usually this concern is disregarded because there are numerous methods of funding a transmitter.

Finally I talked with Morty, general manager last year. He explained how WHCM now would actually offer more training and experience than if the station acquired a transmitter.

"DJs learn how to mix music," Morty said, so WHAM isn't played after Zepplin. They also get experience reading live announcements and filling out program logs. Morty feels if WHCM gets a transmitter, the administration would set guidelines eliminating hands on experience for the DJs. In Morty's opinion WHCM is a REAL radio station!

Also, the WHCM management would have to do much more work. If the transmitter is received the paper work would increase. An FCC license would have to be applied for and all kinds of applications filled out.

It comes down to: the employees want it and the managers don't. (Being a manager I can sympathize with Laramie and Morty.) I propose expanding the number of buildings to which the station broadcasts.

Approximately 10 years ago, WHCM was broadcast to every building then on campus. But it was broadcast too close to the classrooms and offices. Consequently it didn't take long for the complaints to roll in.

Of course? I agree. Don't transmit WHCM right next to the classrooms; play it in the lounge in building J near the box office, in M building and (a personal request) in the Harbinger office.

While investigating the transmitter possibilities it occurred to me, Harper has no radio curriculum--virtually no radio classes! We have programs for Refrigeration and Air Conditioning; and Park and Grounds Operation Management but have no radio program.

Vice President of Student Affairs Bonnie Henry says, "No demonstrated need has arisen." So it looks like if you're interested in radio show some interest or Harper may never carry any radio courses.

Harper has restricted WHCM to building A and offers an education for someone interested in pursuing a career in radio. What's worse is they have no intention to change anything unless we say something about it!

REAL MOMS DON'T DO DRUGS--THEY DO SARAH LEE

BY Liz Brousseau
Staff Columnist

Many people consider a mom to be something other than human. I do not mean to infer that I believe people other than moms consider moms to be INhuman. It is just that there are a lot of misconceptions about what a mom is supposed to be.

To begin with, I would like to pass on some mildly interesting facts about moms.

1. Real moms don't do drugs, they do Sarah Lee.

2. Real moms don't enjoy cold food; they only feel obligated to eat it because people are starving in Africa.

3. Real moms don't worry about things they cannot change; they only worry that they worry too much about ANYthing.

4. Real moms believe in Santa Claus, the Easter Bunny, the Tooth Fairy, and Master Charge.

5. Real moms of the '80's are not lost in the '70's fashion-wise; that was just the last time they bought clothes larger than kids' size 6x.

6. Real moms are not flakey, they only appear that way when they have a larger influx of data penetrating their memory than that which can be contained in your average IBM.

7. Real moms don't enjoy saying no, it is just a good habit they have developed.

8. Real moms enjoy a good food fight in someone else's home, when they are not around.

9. Real moms are everything you think they are, plus a whole lot more, and even a whole lot less.

10. Real moms sometimes wake up in the morning and wish they were not the mom.

The trouble with real moms is they have nowhere to go. There are youth centers for drop-in teens who can't hack their real moms anymore, half-way houses for adults whose real mom couldn't hack them anymore, and AA for real moms who really couldn't hack it anymore, but there is nowhere for the real mom who just basically can't hack it sometimes.

Why is this? Is it because this particular type of mom doesn't present enough of a threat to decent society, or maybe there is an ambivalence toward the notion that real moms basically can't hack it sometimes, or maybe we moms need to be more unified?

Whatever the reason, we need a place to go a respite, a relief, a substitute for K-mart. We need a halfway house for moms. We need to have a place where there are no kids, no phones, no barking dogs, no snide-remarking service-men, no men, no husbands, no doorbells, no kitchens and no unreal moms who would enjoy a kitchen.

Sorting out the real moms from the unreal moms would be simple. Both moms put their makeup on in the morning; the unreal mom still has hers on after 3:30 p.m. The real mom wears evidence of what her child had for breakfast; the unreal mom does not. Both moms carry copies of her children's birth certificate in her purse, but the unreal mom can find it upon request.

Anyone fitting the description of the real mom will be admitted immediately. The unreal mom will probably not show up because she will be at home keeping her house immaculate.

Anyone knowing the whereabouts of such a place is required to contact the Harbinger office immediately. Those who have access to such information, and are found to be retaining it, will be forced to babysit for the rest of us indefinitely.

Look out, Mrs. Cleaver, we know you're out there somewhere

Dead Ringers die young

By Scott Neldt
Staff Writer

Every once in a while I leave a movie with the incredible over-riding feeling of "HUH?" That was the way I felt leaving the theatre after viewing the new Orion Pictures release, Dead Ringers.

Dead Ringers is the story of a set of twins, Beverly and Elliot Mantle (Jeremy Irons) who have had an interest in the medical and science fields from early on in their childhoods. While in college, the Mantle twins invent a surgical apparatus called "the Mantle Retractor". Later they go into business together by opening a fertilization clinic for women.

The twins share everything together, emotions, patients, women, etc.. One woman in particular is the cause of major changes between the twins. A movie star, Claire Niveau, comes into their clinic to see if she is capable of having children. Elliot decides to do some unethical experimentation on his own, telling Claire that he is his twin brother Beverly. Bev then moves into the scene claiming to be himself, and ends up falling in love with Claire.

Now here's where the confusion starts. Claire manages to get Bev addicted to prescription drugs. Ellie then decides to put Bev on a personalized de-tox program, so as not to jeopardize the clinic.

After Ellie becomes unsuccessful he decides that the only way for things to work out is for the two of them to get back into sync with each other. So Ellie starts to get himself addicted to prescription drugs. Make sense?

Jeremy Irons gives a very strong performance as the twins. He takes the very challenging job of playing the two characters with individual personalities. Yet, as much as they have different personalities, they are very much the same.

Here are a couple of the drawbacks involved with this film: First of all, our leading lady, Claire Niveau, speaks with an accent, some of the time.

Next we have the story (if there was one). Two full hours (it seems longer when you're sitting there watching it) of pointless, non-stop blathering. You sit there waiting for some sort of plot to emerge and, God be praised, it's finally over.

David Cronenberg (director of The Fly) really disappoints his audience with this bizzare journey into the not-so-fantastic. It is my opinion that he should have just left this one alone and concentrated on his next work, The Fly II coming out late this fall.

Jeremy Irons in Dead Ringers

To summate, Dead Ringers is not necessarily an apropos title. Dead fits, but it never rang any bells for me. So let's just call it, Dead Lingers (like a bad taste in your mouth).

Banshees' Peep – show a treat

By Ian Lamb
Staff Writer

Siouxsie and the Banshees have at long last released their ninth studio LP, Peepshow. With the exception of their 1987 single, "Song from the Edge of the World", Banshee fans have heard no new material since the LP Tinderbox.

The first song to be released from the new album, Peek-A-Boo, left many listeners wondering what Siouxsie could possibly be up to. As it turns out, the song is just another gem in a jewelry box of treasures. The album is more varied than Tinderbox and the strong differences between tracks reminds me of her 1982 release, A Kiss in the Dreamhouse.

Siouxsie's voice is soft and lilting on tracks such as "The Last Beat of My Heart", but the raw energy of her early releases has not been forgotten. The LP's final track, "Rhapsody", is quiet and haunting in the beginning, but by the end it turns into an inspired, breathy performance. Other tracks, such as "Ornaments of Gold "and "Turn in Stone", explore the Moorish textures of earlier works.

Production credits are shared by The Banshees and Mike Hedges, who produced a number of their earlier LPs. The mix is stark and bare in some places, while lush and thick in others. As with earlier albums, Siouxsie's vocal tracks are very prominent. There is a lot of stereo movement and depth throughout the album, but it is not overproduced.

The import CD (on Polydor Records) gets high marks for appearance, and the sound quality is superb. It has a warm feel, with wide dynamics and high end, but suffers from a small amount of digital noise between individual tracks. On the other hand, the domestic CD (on Geffen Records) is nothing short of appalling.

In order to eliminate the digital noise, I believe Geffen has used some form of compression on the master. The entire album suffers as a result. Some songs fade out too quickly, and the high end sounds muted. Where the import sounds lively, the domestic is simply dull. You may pay more for an import copy of Peepshow, but it is definitely worth it.

For those people who have never listened to Siouxsie, this album is a great entry point into a series of fine albums. Moreover, if you are already a devoted Banshee fan, Peepshow will be quite a treat.

Harper's Food Service Club sells cookbooks to raise funds

The 1988 Harper Food Service Club's "Food for Thought by the Harper Community" Recipe Books are now available from club members or Lou Buchenot (A140, Ext. 2578) for only $4.

As promised, however, anyone who contributed a recipe may purchase the book for $2.

Because Harper's Food Service Club is the junior branch of the National Restaurant Executives Association, the club raises funds to attend National Restaurant Executives Association dinner meetings and conventions.

The club also donates money to various charities, such as Toys for Tots, the Salvation Army, and a home for the elderly.

In addition to selling the cookbooks to raise funds, they sell concessions at Harper's home football games.

If enough money is raised this semester, the club would also like to sponsor a dinner for the National Restaurant Executives Association and another dinner for members' parents.

The Food Service Club is open to all Harper students. Anyone interested in becoming a member should contact Mr. Lou Buchenot.

POLITICAL SCIENCE CLUB HOSTS CAR WASH

Harper gouges Illinois Valley

By Sandy Salvatore
Staff Writer

Harper's football team dominated the first half Saturday afternoon and came away with a 61-12 victory over Rock Valley, in which they set a school record for points scored.

Hawks' quarterback Al Snyder, who was ranked fourth among NAC passers going into the game, completed 9 passes out of 17 attempts with 3 touchdown and 103 yards.

Harper opened the scoring quickly when Snyder connected with former Deerfield High School standout Bill Kerstein for a 5-yard touchdown. A 2-point conversion by James "Speedy" Haywood made the score 8-0 early in the first quarter.

Four minutes lateron Harper's next possession Hawk quarterback Al Snyder found "Speedy" in the endzone for a 40-yard touchdown making the score 15-0.

The Hawks left the Trojans standing in awe before the half by scoring 4 touchdowns.

Linebacker Bob Caldwell's fumble recovery from Rock Valley allowed Snyder to connect with Jeff Dudas for a 6-yard touchdown.

The third came as a surprise to Rock Valley when Haywood zipped between two key blocks made by Kerstein and Tim Oshinski for a 75-yard kickoff return. "When I saw those two blocks," said Haywood , "I knew I was gone."

The Hawks finished off the first half when Lamont Calhoun ran into the endzone for a 12-yard touchdown to make the score 41-6.

Second string quarterback Jeff Wright took control in the third when he handed off to Todd "Ironman" Teso for a 15-yard touchdown.

The final possession for the Hawks' ended in a 4-yard touchdown run by Rod Latham.

The Hawks defense allowed Rock Valley just 175 yards compared to Harper's 413. Rock Valley after trying to heel their wounds from their loss by St. Ambrose last Sunday, scored on two major plays.

The first Trojan touchdown was a Terry Gulley interception off an errant Snyder pass in the second quarter for a 80-yard touchdown, the second was a James Crudup 89 yard touchdown run in the third.

The Hawks will try to keep their winning streak as they visit College of DuPage Saturday at 1 pm.

The ladies' tennis team was absolutely devastated 9-0 by Illinois Valley.

Kathy Chamberlain, head coach of the Hawks, (4-2, 5-1) said " we're playing good this year, we'll bounce back!" She also said that the team's 4 returning sophomores, Cheryl Pivarzeck, Lara Fermanis, Margaret Ashworth, and Stephanie Gorecki, are "holding the line" and are keeping the team's morale up this season. The Lady Hawks will greet the Joliet Wolves on home turf today at 3:30 pm.

September 24th was the lone "overnighter" for Harper's Cross-Country team. The team traveled to Danville Community College, approximately 30 miles east of the University of Illinois.

Harper's team saw its most competitive opponents of the season. Teams from Danville, Spoon River, Waubonsee, and Vincennes, Indiana were on hand.

Once again, Tom Irons and Brian Kwitchoff proved why they deserve to represent Harper at November's national meet to be held in Idaho.

Tom Irons ran the five mile course in 27:26 which placed him eighth.

Kwitchoff came in at a 28:06, for a 21st place.

Chris Swierzbinski ran 31:05, finishing 50th, while Chris Cotsiopoulos was timed at 35:26 for 55th.

Coach Theberge spurred his runners on by competing along side the team.

On Saturday, October 1, the Rumm Hawks will go to the Raider Invitational at Niles West High School. Coach Theberge is hoping for a full team and first place at Niles West.

FACULTY APPROVES CONTRACT

Faculty votes 151 to 46

By Barb Michelini
Staff Writer and
By Douglas Ray
Editor-in-Chief

Harper College faculty approved the contract proposed by the Board of Trustees, ending a long two months of negotiations.

The faculty voted 105 to 46 for the proposed settlement Wednesday. Approximately 89% of the faculty showed up to vote and only two votes were disqualified.

The settlement offers a 5.75% salary increase for the first year. Because the contract does not provide for retroactive pay, the increase is actually 5.02% for the first year.

The contract provides for a 6.97% increase the second year (based on 15.75% the first year).

The Board of Trustees, according to the settlement, will be paying for the 70% of additional insurance premium costs.

The Faculty agreed to an increase of 1.03% for teachers with longevity instead of the faculty suggested automatic promotion to associate professor.

The contract originally met with considerable criticism by the faculty members at its presentation by the negotiating committee last Thursday.

The major grievance about the settlement was that the increase was not large enough. In addition, all the full-time faculty did not find the contract equitable.

Mike Brown, a strike committee member simply stated, "Generally, most people were not happy about the contract."

Dave Williams, vice president of academic affairs, believes this was one of the tougher negotiations because it dealt with tougher issues.

Fall Fest Queen Susan Kritchevsky and her King, Eric Kline, [illegible] Harper College [illegible] Thursday, 8 p.m.

[illegible] Harper College will celebrate Fall Festival, its equivalent to Homecoming, week, on October 10 through 15.

Fall Festival is just a sense of trying to give students at a two year school the feeling of being at a four year school," said Michael Negman, Coordinator of Student Activities.

"Every four year school has a Homecoming game, so we wanted to try to give our students an atmosphere the same that they would get at a four year school," added Negman.

Fall Festival Chairperson Jennifer Hiergesell said, [illegible] and court gives school officials a chance to meet the royalty and other guests such as Negman and Hiergesell who contribute to the success of Fall Festival.

The Fall Festival theme "[illegible] was picked at [illegible] you know that day against Morton College Court Over-out [illegible] theory."

The fund, which is a concert Saturday evening at 8 p.m. in J114, by the Chamber Blues Featuring Corky Siegel and the Consortium String Quartet.

Chamber Blues is a whole new concept. It's like a meeting of blues with classical music. Sort of like Mozart meets Muddy Waters," says Negman. For tickets information, contact the Box Office at 397-3000, ext. 2547.

Negman and Hiergesell are excited about this year's Fall Festival. You can make a difference. Attend Fall Festival 1988.

Thompson, up close and personal

By Michele Ostrowski
Features Editor

He is a man who could halt your education by not settling a faculty strike or he is a man who could make Harper the best college experience in your educational careers.

Assuming James Mc Grath's position, Dr. Paul Thompson is Harper College's new president.

Thompson will attempt to "gather feedback [from business] and be more responsive to the community as well."

Already confronting and helping to resolve a faculty strike soon after receiving his new employment, Thompson shows promise for walking the line between angering faculty and students and upsetting the board and management.

Dr Thompson has been married to Doriann, for 29 years.

His wife has just completed her second bachelor's degree this time in Anthropology; her first degree was in elementary education. She now wishes to pursue graduate level work in Anthropology.

He also has three children, two girls and one boy. The oldest, child Julie, is married to a General Electric engineer and is currently living in Albuquerque New Mexico.

Her son, Michael, Thompson's "pride and joy," turned four years old two weeks ago.

The second oldest daughter Sara, resides in Bellevue Washington and was married last July.

David, Thompson's son, is enrolled in Evergreen St College located in Olympia Washington. He is a declared creative writing major and enjoys school very much.

In his spare time, Dr. Thompson enjoys reading good books but has no favorite author or volume. "I like all kinds," concedes Thompson.

Since his recent debut in the Palatine area he has also not decided upon a favorite restaurant, nevertheless he was taken by Washington's salmon cuisine and hence prefers fish dishes.

Due to his impending move from the present furnished rental home in Schaumburg to the Shores of Inverness in November, Thompson is not ready for any pets. He has had both dogs and cats in the past, "they're [pets] are fun but not now."

Before interviewing for the position at Harper, Thompson was president of Bellevue Community College in Washington state.

The school is about half the size of Harper with 12,500 total students 4500 full time. Bellevue is suburban to Seattle and becoming a city in its own right.

It has a booming economy and is a center for developing business and industry, according to Thompson. He worked in correspondence with business in Bellevue in order to serve the need for the market there.

"I really believe that the community college is the most responsive and most significant force in all of higher education."

Thompson perceives that Harper is in a similar situation -

Straw man invasion

It's pumpkin time!

Ghouls and goblins may be part of this time of the year but this fall St. Charles Visitors Bureau would like to welcome you "into a wonderful world of whimsy, fantasy and creativity known as the St. Charles Scarecrow Festival."

The festival on October 8 and 9 features a contest, open to all, for the winning scarecrow creations. The prize, more than $1000 goes to the scarecrow that will be picked by visiting adults and children during their tour of the town.

Popular votes determining three winners will be cast in ballot boxes around Lincoln Park. New this year is the "most creative" category which will be judged by a panel of art experts.

Both resident and out of town entries last year numbered 75 scarecrows that were propped against the local bridge, sitting in store windows and and abundantly strewn about town.

Past winner scarecrows included a Liberace straw man accompanied by a piano and candelabra, a headless horseman scarecrow as well a a Dalmatian dog on a fire pole.

If entering the contest doesn't interest you then there are many other amusements. A visitor can make his/her own crow in the designated sculpture area, can shop for door ornaments or decorative scarecrows or can listen to scarecrow story tellers.

In addition the festival includes audio-visual entertainment. Buck's Stove and Range Company musical group will star at the Gazebo beginning at 6:30 p.m.

Other groups entertaining around St Charles will be Northern Prairie Drifters, Running Fox Blue Grass, Morning Star and Fox Valley Blue Grass, magic show groups, acrobats and dance troupes.

Moreover, culinary delights such as chicken and dumplings, fudge and seasonal treats will be available in the Country Cuisine Tent and at the scarecrow display.

Rounding out the available options are pig races, an arts and crafts show, a childrens' fun fair, carriage/pony rides as well as riverboat rides on the St Charles Belle and Fox Valley Queen.

The Fair begins on Saturday at 9:00 a.m. and ends at 10:00 p.m. On Sunday the activities proceed from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. For more information, contact the Visitors Bureau at 1-800-777-4373.

Quayle who?

Although the coverage of the Olympics has dominated the media in the past few weeks, there is another important issue at hand. Oh, you remember, they do it every once and awhile. That political crap again. It's the appointment-er-election of that guy. You know, the chairman-er-president guy.

Yes, I know exactly what election it is and who is running and how important it all is. I'm very interested as this is the first presidential election in which I will be voting. It is for this reason that I waited until this semester to take my Political Science course. I thought it would be the most exciting time to take it with all that is going on. It would give me the opportunity to learn even more about the race because I would literally be forced into knowing what is going on.

I had some trepidations about going to the class for the first time. I thought, this is college, there are going to be all these people in there that know about all these treaties in Euguanda somewhere that I should know about and I am going to look like an idiot. My second feeling was "this is going to be great". there will be all these people who will have some real opinions on some issues. Maybe I can find some more people to go to my little protests with and we can all not buy gas at Shell because they support Apartheid. Yeah! Cool man, peace, make love not war!

The first day of class didn't prove to be so inspirational. I didn't need my usual four cups of coffee to wake up that day. I was rudely awakened by the number of realities that sat behind the desks.

The teacher began the class by asking "Do you think Bush should drop Dan Quayle as his vice-presidential nominee?" Not a bad question considering all the hoopla surrounding Quayle at the time. The shocker was not the question but the answers given. Most went something like this "Well, um, I really don't know enough about the issue to comment at this time". What they really meant to say (and you could just tell) was: "Who in the hell is Dan Quayle, and if Bush just picked him why are they talking about dropping him?" Okay folks, we are not talking about a treaty in Euguanda here, we are talking about possibly the next Vice-President of The United States!

I'm getting a little excited here. I now know what all those teachers and parents were harping about all those years. Now, not only do you have to take this crap from "those people", you are getting it from your peers also.

Some friends of mine and I were having a bit of an argument. One said that he was not registered nor did he plan on registering because, "I don't feel I know enough about the issues or the candidates and I think that it would be wrong to vote not knowing anything about it". Sound familiar? It should because only 38% of the adult population must feel educated enough to get to the polls.

My suggestion to my friend's dilemma was this: SO GET EDUCATED!! Watch the news, watch the debates, read the paper, read some magazines! The reply? "Well, I simply don't have time". Bzzzt' wrong answer! This friend forgot who he was talking to. I work 50 hours a week outside of going to school full time and I know who the hell Dan Quayle is and why Bush might have considered dropping him!

I found that I would have to make some sacrifices. Instead of reading Omarr to see how my day would be astrologically (at least I'm not making any political decisions this way) I decided that on my break at work I could maybe read (gulp!) the news page? And along with the Cosmopolitan magazine I always seem to have time for I could maybe fit in a Newsweek or Time? Guess what? I found that I really enjoy finding out about all these decisions being made for me. I've found that political cartoons are now funny because I get them. I've found that I enjoy having something to say when people are having a conversation on a political subject and they are less informed than me. I've found that this happens more and more. I've found that the more this happens the more concerned I am.

I was concerned enough to write this. It won't change the world, the country, or maybe not even anyone on campus. I look at it this way, it's my column this week, it's my opinion, and because The United States is my country you are reading it right now. Will you be in years to come? It's up to you.

Off her Rocker

with our mom

By Liz Brousseau
Staff Columnist

I received an informative phone call this morning from my old friend Maudie Higginbottom in Sauerkrauten, Indiana. She was a little concerned about how she will vote in November.

I asked her if she had made any decision yet, and she told me, "Well I sure did. I'm gonna vote for that fun-lovin' George Bush fellow and that cute little runnin mate of his from right here in my own backyard - you know that one who looks a little like Robert Redford - Senator Quayle. What a smart way of gettin the women's vote, pickin' a cutie like him, that Bush is just a genius!"

Well it seemed clear enough to me that her mind was made up, and so I said that it was good to hear she had made a decision, and then I wondered what her concern might be.

"Well, I just don't know if my friends and family is gonna go for that laser show he wants to put on, I mean, I am all for laser shows, but a lot of people around here just don't want their taxes bein' raised to fund this thing."

I for one was baffled. "What laser show are you talking about Maudie?" I implored.

"Well you know, that big one he was talkin' about at his debate. That one that's gonna have that thousand points of light and everything. I really think it's a great idea. keepin people occupied with something to entertainim', so's they won't be worryin 'bout things all the time. I think it's about time some of them high-ups got to thinkin about gettin some control over our entertainment, that way our kids won't be watchin all that kiddie porno stuff like what that democrat Dukakis is so fond of."

"Maudie, Mr. Dukakis is not fond of child pornography, and I don't think George Bush meant to imply that he was going to host a laser show."

"Well sure he is, why else would he say it, he aint gonna be makin false promises, you can tell that because he's a real family man, and he eats pork rinds, and hangs out with those good ole boys from Texas, and he stopped that Panama guy from pushin' his drugs all over the country, so you can just be certain he's a man you can trust."

But these are not issues that indicate anything of substance Maudie, they are visual props that his campaign strategists invented to help improve his public image. You can't base your vote on things like a man being shown on t.v. with his family as opposed to joining his camp at the convention, or if he eats pork rinds so the democrats will stop calling him a wimp, and..."

"Well of course he's not a wimp, there isn't a wimpy man alive that eats pork rinds, only a real man eats pork rinds, and I'm votin' for a real man this time."

"Maudie, it doesn't really matter what he eats, the president of the United States needs to have an ability to understand the issues and concerns of the American people, and to work toward resolving them, and a laser show is just not what it takes. Besides that, a laser show is not what he had in mind when he talked about a thousand points of light."

Oh really smarty-pants, well why don't you just tell me what he did mean if you think you're so smart."

Well, I'm not certain Maudie, I thought maybe he was, uh, er, uhh."

"See, you college people just think you are so smart tryin to explain everything with your fancy talk, you just got to learn to look at things more simple-like, and stop makin' such a fuss of everything. George Bush is just like any other good ole boy he says just what he got on his mind."

You know, maybe Maudie was right. After searching relentlessly for substance of issues along this campaign trail, perhaps a good laser show is the answer. In fact, after this bloody battle is over, I might even be willing to foot the bill.

ELVIS LIVES

In the new film "Heartbreak Hotel"

By Scott Neldl
Staff Writer

You're in a little town in Ohio. The year is 1972. A time when Richard Nixon is in his first year in office, Rock 'n' Roll is in transition, and you know that Elvis is still alive.

This is the setting for the latest Touchstone Pictures release, Heartbreak Hotel.

The story of a teenager, Johnny Wolfe (Charlie Schlatter),who changes the lives of his family and community. Johnny decides to kidnap Elvis Presley.

Mirie, Johnny's mother (Tuesday Weld), is in a major depression. Johnny wants to cheer her by getting her a date with her favorite celebrity. Elvis Presley (David Keith). So Johnny hops into the pink Cadillac convertible and sets out to persuade the "King of Rock 'n' Roll" to come to visit his mother.

Things go beyond Johnny's control when the King pulls a gun out. Johnny is then forced to use ether and bring Elvis forcefully.

When Elvis wakes up he finds himself in the hotel belonging to Marie, and decides to leave. Johnny has to stop him, so he tells Elvis that he is losing track of the roots that made him so great. This question bothers Elvis, so he decides to stay.

In one week, Elvis not only teaches Johnny about love, defending himself, and music, but he also learns how to be King once more.

David Keith really makes you believe that the King is still alive and ready to entertain for years to come. Not once did I sit back and think, "That's nothing like Elvis."

Charlie Schlatter definitely is a strong performer on this Rock 'n' Roll fable. I predict that he will become the next Michael J. Fox in the film industry. He has a lot of potential to become an extremely talented actor.

The mixture of a strong cast, a powerful soundtrak (including many Elvis greats, long forgotten), and a well written script, all under the direction of Chris Colombus, makes this film very entertaining. It's an hour and forty minutes of sheer enjoyment.

Huey Lewis once wrote, "the heart of rock n' roll is still beating..." In the case of Heartbreak Hotel, rock n' roll will continue to pulse through the hearts of millions.

Aural Pleasure

By Ian Lamb
Staff Writer

Ultra Vivid Scene
"She Screamed"

Ultra Vivid Scene's debut single, She Screamed, has been released by Britain's 4AD label. This band has obviously been influenced by the Jesus and Mary Chain, but where the JAMC is loose and laid back, Ultra Vivid Scene is tight and controlled, much in the same way as pre-1980 Wire releases. The 12" and CD single contain a version of Patsy Cline's "Walkin' After Midnight" that has to heard to be believed.

The Sugarcubes
"Birthday"

The Sugarcubes have re-recorded Birthday with the Jesus and Mary Chain. The warm tube amp buzz fits perfectly with the stark feel of the original Birthday. The 12" is a limited-edition double-groove pressing. Instead of cutting one track after another, the tracks are cut side-by-side at the same time. You'll never know for sure which mix will play when you drop (heaven forbid) the needle.

Pet Shop Boys
"Domino Dancing"

Domino Dancing was recorded in Florida during March of 1988, but it has just been released. In the past, the Pet Shop Boys' singles have had a touch of irony and sarcasm, but here they sound like they are taking themselves seriously. Cuban influences are felt on this single, but they don't save Domino Dancing from becoming pure dreck. Good dance music if you're not really listening.

The Wonder Stuff
"It's Yer Money I'm After Baby"

The Wonder Stuff is a strong contender for best new band of 1988. This single is taken from their debut LP "The Eight Legged Groove Machine". The Wonder Stuff's performance is simply excellent. This single is an example of what good guitar-pop can be. Come to think of it, the lyrics are pretty damn funny too.

House of Love
"Destroy the Heart"

House of Love is the other contender for best new band of 1988. They are Creation Records closest thing to genius since the Jesus and Mary Chain (there they are again!) left the label in 1985. "Destroy the Heart" is not available on their self-titled debut LP. This song has an infectious chorus and melody, and there is some nice wah-wah guitar buried in the mix. This song is another excellent piece of guitar-pop.

B.A.S.I.C. AT HARPER COLLEGE

Brothers And Sisters In Christ (B.A.S.I.C.) is an officially recognized student organization at Harper that is under the direction of Paula Tabor, B.A.S.I.C. Student Minister. Although B.A.S.I.C. is sponsored by the Southern Baptist churches anyone who is interested, of any denomination, is welcome to participate. It does not matter whether you are a student, faculty, staff, or non-student.

The main purpose of B.A.S.I.C. is to network students who are serious about their personal, social and spiritual development and provide them with a sense of belonging on the Harper campus, something which is often missing in a community college environment.

B.A.S.I.C. brings interested students together with weekly meetings to pursue Christian studies, monthly parties, informational lunchtime sessions, seminars on leadership, and weekend retreats. Tabor believes that these activities help students develop their personal and spiritual development because they guide students to look inward, or take an "inner journey," as B.A.S.I.C. refers to the process.

B.A.S.I.C. also encourages students to look beyond themselves and become involved with others. This "outward journey" is done through participation in hunger relief projects, serving meals on street people at an inner city church and being part of a puppet team.

Anyone wanting more information about B.A.S.I.C. can contact either Tabor Burdette, President, at 529-7089 or Paula Tabor at 358-3562. Tabor can also be reached through the Student Activities Office at 397-3000, Ext. 2242.

Faculty contract

committee member, did not believe the negotiations would end in a strike. She stated, "the contract isn't bad. It's the best we can get under the circumstances."

Willis, as many faculty members and administrators would probably agree, "we need to re-commit ourselves to a spirit of cooperation and respect that has been missing."

Dave Williams, vice president of academic affairs, feels this is one of the tougher negotiations because it dealt with tougher issues.

Thompson

providing courses for retraining, advancement and careers in local business.

Apparently in Washington, funding was controlled solely by the state legislature with no local tax in district such as Harper has.

Thompson finds that such in-district tax is easier for financing college needs making them more stable and predictable due to a reliable source of funds.

With such a background, Thompson decided to interview for Harper because it has "a high reputation among community colleges."

"I had been in Illinois for 15 years prior to going to Washington and maintained a high regard for the Illinois community college system ...Harper is a fine place to be!"

When questioned as to the largest obstacle he had to surmount in his quest for becoming our president, Thompson replied "probably recognizing that there were many capable people who were interested (in applying for president at Harper) in the first place."

He emphasizes that he was "warmly received" when he met with students.

"Just being chosen out of the group of capable finalists was a difficult hurdle."

As the "new kid on the block," Thompson feels it is too early to get a good assessment of how he is being accepted by students, faculty and staff.

"Harper, with its mission statemept, has made the commitment to serve as a comprehensive institution in the best sense...I am really committed to fulfilling that mission."

He emphasizes that he was "warmly received" when he met with students involved in Phi Theta Kappa and WHCM. He has judged that his "exposure is not general enough [and hence is] looking forward to being with them [students] more."

Thompson has also implicated a "get to know me" program for Harper employees. He has already had three sessions which entail a group of 20 or so mixed employees personally acquainting themselves with their new president.

In regard to his future plans for Harper, Thompson intends to "become more familiar with the people here and make an assessment of the available talent in order to decide where it should be directed."

"[I'm] looking forward to being with them [students] more."

For long range plans, Thompson wants Harper to get involved to developing business.

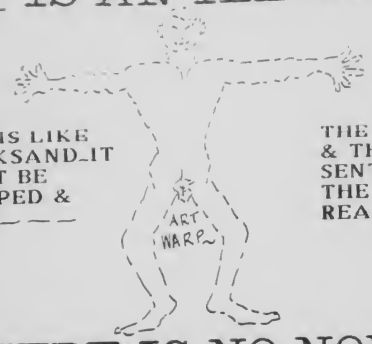

Still conceding that Harper's main thrust is for its transfer program, Thompson will attempt to "gather feedback [from business] and be more responsive to the community as well."

Thompson would like the Harper Community to know the following: "I really believe that the community college is the most responsive and most significant force in all of higher education."

..Harper is a fine place to be!", stressed Thompson.

"Harper, with its mission statement, has made the commitment to serve as a comprehensive institution. In the best sense...I am really committed to fulfilling that mission."

Harper slips noose on Dupage

By Sandy Salvatore
Staff Writer

Just by listening to the football victory song you can tell that the Hawks were weary, but thankful that they beat the COD Chapparals 24-23 for a first place tie in North Central Community College Conference.

The biggest play of the day won't show up in the box score, but it might show up on the head of Chapparals head coach Bob MacDougall as gray hair.

With 1.03 remaining in the game and COD at Harpers 42-yard line, Chaps quarterback Curt Miller thru a strike to Lance Lewis where unfortunately for Lewis, he met Harper's linebacker Jeff Topel. Topel knocked the ball loose and Steve Turzynski recovered it at Harper's 25. "I saw him (Lewis) catch the ball," said Turzynski. "Jeff Topel tackled the guy; he flipped him over and the ball came loose. I jumped on it."

Cod first score came on their second possession when Tarry Williams kicked a 39-yard field goal with 3:20 on the clock in quarter number

The Hawks' snapped into place in the second when Al Snyder put the lid on COD's lead when he connected with James Haywood for a 25-yard pass touchdown.

The Chaps finished off the first half with a Phil Sevier 7-yard touchdown run, and a Williams 50-yard field goal to give the Chaps a 13-7 halftime lead.

Harper unleashed Bill Kerstein on a run for 7 giving Harper a 14-13 lead after a Miller blocked punt by Harper's defensive back Scott Miller.

COD retaliated with a touchdown of their own when Miller connected with Lewis for a 45-yard pass. A 2-point conversion by Miller made the score 21-14 to put COD back in the lead.

The Hawks' tied the game up at 21-21 early in the fourth when Snyder handed off to "Speedy Haywood for a 6-yard touchdown.

Harper's final possession was a Magnus Brannstrom field goal with 3:51 left in the fourth.

The Hawks' took 2 delay of game penalties and ran the ball out of Harper's end zone, giving the Chaps a safety and a 1-point deficit. "We were trying to avoid a safety, " said Snyder. "They had us covered 3 on 2 on our receivers . We tried to get them out of it and avoid that (a safety)."

The Hawks' will travel to Olgesby, Illinois to take on the Illinois Valley Apaches Saturday at 7:30 pm.

Let the White Sox walk

William A. Steele
Staff Writer

Well, once again our glorious Chicago White Sox are in the news. This time, WFLD-32 television, through its parent company Fox Television Network, is , would you believe this, suing the club for being pitiful?

Now, I feel this suit is founded, however, this is as a result of the action of Mayor Sawyer and our lawmakers in Springfield , rather than the team. Channel 32 can't sue the city; therefore they're going to sue the team.

All the station wants is to break the contract [illegible] games [illegible]

1. [illegible] people [illegible] to watch [illegible]

2. The advertisers don't want to pay for [illegible] time anymore because nobody will see the commercial.

3. Let's face it, the only reason Fox network wants to spend what will be a great deal of money suing the Sox is that instead of paying the team, they could get other shows that people will watch, and advertisements that will make the station money.

Now, I really don't blame the Sox for being so bad. Hey they are in the Major Leagues, How many other teams can say that? No, I blame all the bureaucrats in Springfield, and the residents of Illinois for having this team here in the "Last" Place!!

Yes, all you wonderful people [illegible] people.

Maybe we should ask them "What have you done for me lately!"

Smithsonian educates the public

Smithsonain lecture and seminar program

By Trudy Herbst
Staff Writer

Staged at colleges, universities, libraries and museums throughout the country, the Smithsonian Institute's Lecture and Seminar Program brings the institute to the people. The Smithsonian National Associates Lecture and Seminar Program arrives in the northwest suburbs October 20-23.

Each seminar is designed to complement local interests of individual communities as well as to appeal to a variety of ages and family groups.

Cosponsors responsible for the development of this series include Harper College, Arlington Heights Memorial Library, Roosevelt University, and Forest View Education Center.

Each sponsoring organization assigns a liaison person who assists with publicity, provides program space and audio-visual equipment. Harper's liaison, Dr. George Voegel, eagerly anticipates the forthcoming series. "This is a culmination of almost two year's effort," said Voegel.

National corporate sponsors play a major role in the feasibility of the entire program. Airlines provide reduced fare tickets; hotels offer complimentary accommodations.

In addition, non-profit organizations, which also share the Smithsonian's educational goals, provide funding.

For four days, the Smithsonian has the opportunity to acquaint their local membership and the general public with their research programs and collections. Harper benefits too. This is an opportunity to introduce the many educational options available to the community.

Combining somewhat opposite ends of the spectrum Harper's programs include on Thursday, October 20 at 7:30PM, Exploring Microspace: More than Meets the Eye and on Saturday, October 22 at 2:00PM, Art in Public Places.

Before and after the art lecture, student members of Phi Theta Kappa will be available for tours of the extensive art collection in this public place. Both lectures will be held in Building 'J' Room 143.

During the past thirteen years the Smithsonian National Associates Lecture and Seminar Program and local cosponsors have worked together to expand their commitments to public education and scholarship through informative and appealing programs for all segments of the American community.

Dean of Educational Services, Dr. George Voegel, contends it will be a coup for Harper if the community participates! Tickets for the series and reservations for the art walk will be available at the door on a space available basis. Information on other programs is available by contacting Dr. Voegel at x 2260.

LECTURES

Thursday, October 20

Exploring Microspace: More than Meets the Eye
Jeffrey Post, Geologist, Department of Mineral Sciences National Museum of Natural History

Under the powerful eye of the electron microscope, even familiar objects take on spectacular new shapes. For geologist Jeffrey Post and his colleagues, these revolutionary instruments have yielded exciting new insights into the world of minerals, explaining such phenomena as the iridescence in opals and the fibrous nature of asbestos. Join Dr. Post as he explains the surprisingly simple operation of these high intensity microscopes in a lecture highlighted by dramatic photographs of mineral crystals, whose delicate beauty can be appreciated only through the magic of electron microscopy.

Saturday, October 22

Art in Public Places
Virginia Mecklenburg, Curator-In-Charge, Department of Painting and Sculpture, National Museum of American Art

Across America today, monumental sculptures by artists such as Alexander Calder and Louise Nevelson enhance urban landscapes and encourage lively debate over the place of art in public spaces. Virginia Mecklenburg will discuss the controversies surrounding public art in a lecture illustrated by slides of noted sculptures, murals and fiberworks by some of America's finest artists.

One-man art show highlights many sculptures

By Jeff Freebus
Staff Writer

The Arts Committee of th Harper College Educational Foundation held it's first one-man show of Richard Hunt's sculptures on Tuesday, October 11.

Sally Farnweather and Dr. Martin Ryan, two associates of the art committee, were responsible for obtaining Hunt's sculptures on a temporary basis.

"Sally Farnweather and Martin Ryan approached me with the idea (of bringing the sculptures to Harper)," said Hunt.

The committee gave Hunt a tour of Harper's current sculptures.

"Harper has a sculpture program and I was able to see their sculptures," explained Hunt.

Hunt's sculptures now temporary join Harper's sculptures. Thirteen of his pieces are in and around building A: one at the entrance, four in the college center, four others on the north patio, and two at the peninsula on the lake.

"While it is a temporary exhibition it looks permanent and the pieces look like they were made to go in the various spaces," Hunt announced at the reception.

"The two larger pieces were done by me not only in my studio (in Chicago) but in the Jensen Fabricating Company in Wisconsin," added Hunt.

The sculptures are made of aluminum, bronze or corten steel and date from 1968 to 1988.

After Richard Hunt held his first one-man show in 1958 he received many national and local honors, teaching posts and commissions, and participated in many one-man and group exhibitions.

Leonchik chose Nigeria for peace

By Mona Iso
Staff Writer

Believing in a strong international humanitarian movement, former Theater Manager Nancy Leonchik traded the Chicago suburbs for the Sahara Desert in Africa.

Today nearly 6,000 volunteers are serving in third world countries; Nancy Leonchik extended her hand and heart to Niger as a member of the Peace Corps.

Niger located in the midst of the Sahara Desert in Africa, was Leonchik's "home" for nine weeks. When asked why she joined the Peace Corps, Leonchik responded with determination.

"I wanted an adventure that was completely different from anything else - I wanted to help humanity."

With this objective, Nancy applied to become a Peace Corps Volunteer. The only qualifications required for admissions are to be eighteen years or older and to have a skill; Leonchik's skill is the ability to communicate.

Nancy transferred to Philadelphia to begin her commitment to the corps. There she underwent a week long "psychological preparation".

"You just didn't plunge into the Peace Corps. This might not have been what I really wanted to do," added Leonchik. And yet, apparently it was.

Recognizing her limitations, Nancy ventured on to Niger where she spent three months in a village called Hamdallaye located outside of Niamey, the capital of Niger.

"This wasn't any ordinary village, it was in the "Bush" or the desert, remarked Nancy.

With other Peace Corps volunteers like herself, Leonchik studied and learned the French language and exchanged the culture ways with the Nigerians.

Each volunteer was then sent to an area according to the skill in which he/she excelled. Some volunteers went into nutrition, forestry or education.

Nancy worked with the students at the University of Niamey where she taught English as a second language.

The host countries who accept the Peace Corps volunteers see many advantages in having volunteers who would live in the same manner as their African counter-parts.

These ambitious volunteers concretely show their counterparts through their skills that they care and want to help.

In return, the volunteers fulfilled the three goals of the Peace Corps:

-promote an understanding of the United States to the host country.

-teach a skill to the host country.

-promote an understanding of a third world country to the United States.

Leonchik worked diligently in aiming at these three goals. Enduring the Niamey weather which reached 102 degrees and a ghetto apartment, Nancy educated the Nigerian students.

Although limited in supplies, books and air-conditioning, she managed to teach and communicate with her Nigerian students.

During her days of teaching at the University, Leonchik found that a limited number of individuals were put through school - due to the lack of money.

"The enrollment diminishes as each individual goes to a higher level of education because of their need to support their families," observed Leonchik.

By providing more teachers, the Peace Corps has given hundreds of third world children the chance to go to school.

Despite enrollment paucities, Nancy formed special bonds between herself and her students. Leonchik stressed that the students were always eager to learn.

Schooling in Niger is a rite of passage into the modern world. The students opened to the possibility of change, of different approaches and of a better life.

"If I had the money, I would bring the Nigerian students to America," stated Nancy. "They are such good students."

While in Niger and between teaching periods, Nancy had a chance to explore her surroundings.

Poverty-stricken people lined the streets everywhere; beggars, lepers, malnutritioned babies, diseased individuals were among the myriads.

"Life was dirty, ragged and dusty," quoted Nancy, "it was absolutely miserable."

Leonchik stressed that volunteers renewed emphasis on the basic human needs such as food, water, education and shelter for the poorest peoples in the world (other people often take these items for granted).

"Americans are truly blessed people," added Leonchik.

One aspect that Nancy and the Nigerian students agreed upon, was that "human nature is universal." Human beings are basically the same regardless of their status quo or economic level.

"There are your greedy human beings and your ignorant human beings, yet there are also your wonderful human beings," stated Leonchik.

Coming home, Nancy had to face the process of readjusting. Besides increasing in half a shoe size and going through physical examinations, she is as vivacious as ever.

"Peace Corps was a positive influence and a lifetime experience that one can hold on forever," remarked Leonchik.

Currently, Nancy is looking for a job with a humanitarian company. Leonchik's determination to help improve the welfare of mankind has left her with dreams and hopes for the future's outlook.

Peace Corps is tough work! Yet Leonchik points out that volunteers join the Corps to teach, influence and to...leave something behind.

In short it is an experience in which a fairly ordinary American has the opportunity to exchange ideas, skills and cultures with fairly ordinary third world peoples.

HARBINGER GRAPHIC DESIGN CONTEST

PRIZES

First Place
1 year membership at the Woodfield Fitness Center

Second Place
5 sessions at the Bahama Sun Tanning Spa

Third Place
Dinner for two at Swensen's Ice Cream/Restaurant

Fourth Place
$10 Gift certificate at Chili's Hamburger Grill & Bar

The Harbinger needs a graphic logo to represent the paper. The graphic should fit in a 2"x2" square and would be added next to the paper's name on the front page. Five judges will award prizes to the four best drawings based on creativity, representation of the Harbinger, and originality.

Entries will be accepted through Friday, Oct. 28 (one entry per person). Results will appear in the Nov. 3 issue of the Harbinger. Entries should be turned into the Harbinger Office, A367, with artist's name and social security number.

The Harper College logo and the Woodfield Fitness Center logo are examples of what we are looking for.

Olympic dreams of average heroine

Features Editor

"When I was lying on my back, my shoulder was lying next to my jaw."

Hit broadside by a car coming out of a gas station, champion bicyclist Patti Albrecht-Mariotti flew to the double yellow line of a four-lane throughfare.

On that day in February, Mariotti (currently a nursing student at Harper) was training on a 4.7 mile loop on Lake Street in Bloomingdale.

After that startling impact, "I was history in my books. It was absolutely unbelievable that there were no cars coming," recalled Mariotti.

Inflicted with a dislocated shoulder, Patti was immediately taken to the local hospital, and then transferred to Evanston Hospital to be examined by her own orthopedic surgeon.

"It (the shoulder) just popped out of the socket-- everything was torn out."

Mariotti, daughter of a professional San Diego football player, began in interest in speed skating when she was eight.

Her father loved to speed skate and since Mariotti, "Had no brothers and met lots of friends--I just got in the groove!" In her teens she adopted bike racing as well and turned to her second sport exclusively at age 20.

Ranked first in the State of Illinois since age nine, Mariotti has an impressive record of bike race wins.

She has been competing for approximately 18 years, winning her first spot on a national team at age 15.

Patti has been on so many world and national teams that she confesses that she "can't remember how many. I really enjoyed it!"

I wouldn't trade it (the experience) for anything," Mariotti adds, "It's been fun."

Albrecht-Mariotti had her eye on the gold in the Seoul Olympics for the 2000M bicycle race before the accident.

Three shoulder surgeries kept her from the Olympic tryouts which were two weeks before the games. In four weeks Mariotti is scheduled for a fourth operation.

Eight months into recovery, Patti is still not sure if she will compete again. Shoulder pain prevents her from training now and the possibility of another accident before she fully recovers is overwhelming for Mariotti to face.

"The accident really did a number on me," admits Albrecht-Mariotti. "My sister quit her job when I got hit--we didn't know what the outcome or damage was at the time.

The accident took not only a tremendous physical sacrifice but a mental lax as well. "Even driving makes me paranoid now.

Embarking on her future, Patti, now 27, has enrolled this semester as her first at Harper. She's working to become a nurse but still entertains the idea of racing again--"I don't know, I probably will."

You just can't pick up like that (in superb training form) again. "I'm so far out of shape." She is determined to take one season at a time.

When asked what advice she would have on adversity, Mariotti explained "I went to a plastic surgeon to get the scar removed. I'm a girl--I'm vain."

"When he said, 'we can't do it because the scar was too deep or it would become worse' I just sat there. I was so upset."

"Then, I saw this lady who had both legs and her fingers amputated, and I thank God I walked away from it (the accident) with only a shoulder injury."

"You have to consider where you've been and all that you've accomplished. Everything I've touched was a success--so many never have the chances (that I have had)."

"No matter what others say it doesn't bring back those feelings (feeling, that you're invincible that you can do anything). Sure, I've got problems, but others have it worse."

"There is always someone less fortunate. Some only dream of things that I've done." Mariotti encourages each person to "find his/her own talent and excel at it."

Although Patti Albrecht-Mariotti has had her picture displayed across the covers of such magazines as "Sports Illustrated", she would prefer to walk down the corridors and sidewalks of Harper as just another student.

"I'm just the same as everybody else. I just ride around in a circle on a bike. I'm no different than the next person and I'd like to be treated the same."

Somehow, just talking to Patti, I don't get the feeling that she's just like everybody else.

Someone you know could need your help: a friend, a classmate, even yourself!

Substance abuse can affect anyone, and those who suffer from it, seldom recognize or admit the dangers.

"Just saying no to drugs" won't solve the substance abuse problems facing many college students and local communities.

For the northwest suburbs, the dilemma of substance abuse has hit close to home. Over the past three years, more than 5,000 people have been arrested for drug and alcohol (DUI) offenses within the Harper College school district.

In an effort to educate and train faculty and students, Harper's Health Service implementing a two-year, federally-funded, Drug, Alcohol and Wellness Network (DAWN) designed to counsel, inform and peak awareness about substance abuse.

Analyzing student needs, establishing a Student Health Advisor Program and identifying community resources and referral programs are among the objectives of DAWN.

Services provided by DAWN are free to Harper students, faculty and staff. Individuals seeking further information or assistance are strongly encouraged to contact Phyllis Zabrocki, DAWN program coordinator or Rosemary Murray, supervisor of health service on extension 2626 for prompt attention. All inquiries will be kept in strict confidence.

Students can learn more about substance abuse by reviewing films and listening to speakers during National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week scheduled from October 17-21 (See related article in Health Corner).

"In order for DAWN to be successful, student and faculty involvement is essential," said Murray. Students interested in participating in a training program should contact Health Service.

Introducing the King, Queen and their Court

By Alisa Chiaiuud
Staff Writer

The fall festival committee selected the first king and his court in history to reign beside the queen and her court. The '88 Fall Fest Court consists of Queen Susan Krutzler, King Tony Laramie, first runners-up Michele Ostrowski and David Meyer and second runners-up Gina Graziadei and Edward B. Wallace.

According to Fall Fest Chair-person, Jennifer Hiergeist, the queen position was applied for by eight women and the king by four men. Participants of the contest were permitted to nominate themselves, or be sponsored by a club or organization. Hiergeist was happy to see such a good turnout of candidates for king and queen, however, she did notice a decline in the number of queen applicants which she attributes to lack of promotion and advertising.

The student body was not given an opportunity to vote for the king, queen, and their court. All applicants were interviewed and screened by a four person committee:: Michael Nejman, coordinator of student activities; Jennifer Hiergeist, fall festival chair-person; Laura Jacobson, student trustee; and Steve Hungsburg, music director of WHCM radio station.

The committee based their selections on appearance, poise, personality, participation in college and community activities, scholastic and personal goals as well as overall opinions of the applicants. Hiergeist stressed three factors which the court needed to have: involvement, interest and enthusiasm. "We do not look at the person's physical beauty We actually look into the person. We were looking for people who could represent Harper," said Hiergeist.

Queen Krutzler, 18 years old, is a biology major and president of Harper's biology club. She will transfer to Loyola for a biology degree upon graduation here at Harper. Currently Krutzler is a phi theta kappa candidate with a 3.87 GPA. "I didn't expect it. I had nothing to say. I just couldn't believe it," said Krutzler about her selection.

King Laramie, also 18 years old, says, "I'm planning on transferring to Western next year after I get my associate's degree." "I want to go into some branch of the FBI or the secret service after I graduate," added Laramie. Laramie ran on the track team last year and has been active in the Program Board. Last year he was a DJ for WHCM and this year Laramie is General Manager.

"I think it's a great honor and I hope it starts a tradition for future kings," said Laramie.

Ostrowski will transfer to a four-year college majoring in medicine. She boasts a 4.00 GPA while remaining active in student activities. Last year Ostrowski was a student senator, student ambassador and volunteer for the Lutheran General Hospital. This semester she is the Features Editor for the Harbinger.

Meyer, 36 years old, would like to attend Columbia with a theater major and communication minor. He has achieved a 3.85 GPA while aiding Mike Brown, set designer, on set construction for many of the Harper theater productions. He has also been in a number of plays both on campus and in the community.

Graziadei plans to transfer to U of I in Champaign majoring in business and to go on to law school to become a corporate lawyer. She has a 3.35 GPA and enjoys both dancing and singing. Graziadei says, "I thought it would be a real nice opportunity to represent the school.

Wallace is a finance major transferring also transferring to U of I in Champaign. Sponsored by the Political Science Club, he is also an active member of the Young Corporate Achievers. He has a 3.0 GPA

Monitor the goings-on around campus and off

By Barb Michelini
Staff Writer

Six new Student Activities' monitors were installed to replace the two LED display systems which used to be in building J near the Box Office and building A in the cafeteria.

The project was allotted $15,000 from the Student Activities budget, $10,000 of which has already been spent. Director of Student Activities, Jeanne Pankanin, hopes to purchase an additional six monitors with the remaining funds.

The old LED system was a class gift back in 1981. Since then, the company producing them went out of business. The cost of new LED signs would be nearly as much as the new monitors and would not offer as many options.

The monitors feature current news, sports, cultural arts information, health service updates, weather, stock reports and trivia questions.

The campus information is entered with a personal computer in the Student Activities Office by Terry Karow, events information specialist. The news, weather, sports and other assorted off-campus information is transmitted from Target Vision, a New York based company.

The monitors are very similar to the tvs found in AV and lecture halls.

They display standard graphics which are general designs for news, sports, weather, etc. and custom made designs made for specific topics. For example, a picture of actress Marlee Matlin was submitted to Target Vision and now appears on the screen advertising her appearance here Oct. 27.

The monitors are located in building J lobby, building M second floor, buildings F and D first floor and in the cafeteria and lounge in A building.

Speech team places first vs other community colleges

By Tari Vaughn
Staff Writer

After nearly two months of hard work and preparation, the Harper Speech Team traveled to Illinois State University for the first tournament of the season on October 7 and 8. Competing against thirteen other colleges and universities, including some of the top teams in the nation, such as Bradley University and North Central College, the Harper team rated first against other junior colleges, seventh overall.

"I was very happy. I think the students are very competitive this year, and as the year goes on the team will be winning a lot more," commented Marcia Latrenta, Harper's speech team coach.

Linda Lang, a second-year member of the team, won a second place trophy for her Communication Analysis on Jesse Jackson's speech at the Democratic Convention. Lang also placed well in Informative Speaking.

The other students competing for Harper were Wynn Grippe in Poetry Reading and Extemporaneous Speaking, Peter Lindstrom in Persuasive Speaking, Cathy Machalski in Informative Speaking, Cnsann Morgan in Novice Prose Reading, Scott Neidl in Prose Reading and Duet Interpretation, and Tari Vaughn in Program on a Theme, Prose Reading, and Duet Interpretation.

The next tournament the team will travel to is in Decatur on November 11 and 12. For more information, contact Marcia Latrenta at extension 2944.

Letters to the Editor

Quayle is... Dukakis isn't!

Your managing editor is right. It is very important that we all become educated about the political scene this year. This is the most important election we have faced in 30 years. This election will shape our future as we head into the 1990's and beyond.

Now let me answer another question. Who is Dan Quayle? Dan Quayle is the vice presidential nominee for the Republican Party and is currently a senator in our neighboring State of Indiana.

Before he was a senator, he served four years in the House of Representatives. He sits on the powerful Arms Services Committee as well as being a member of the Labor and Human Services Committee. He authorized a bill to help train and re-train those who are out of work; he supported everything that President Reagan stands for.

This election will decide whether we will move ahead under the leadership of George Bush or slip into "Midnight in America" under liberal, inexperienced Governor Michael Dukakis. If the "Duke" is elected, he is prepared to do to America what he did to Tax-achusetts.

As Governor of Massachusetts, every time he had a problem with money he simply raised taxes. He raised taxes three times and now the state has the highest property tax of any state in the Union. Dukakis claims that He balanced budgets for ten years straight. The fact is that the State of Massachusetts has a law on their books that says "there must be a balanced budget every year, otherwise you could be held in violation of law and prosecuted."

How can you trust our National security to a man who has only met one international leader and has never really done any type of foreign relations work? In an article that appeared in a September 1988 edition of THE NEW YORK TIMES, world leaders were asked whether they would like to see Bush or Dukakis as the President. Their answer was that they trusted Bush as President and would rather deal with the experienced Republican leader.

So, there you have only a few facts that are not intended to do anything, except educate you about the election scene. I hope I have been helpful and that you consider all aspects before you vote on November 8.

Bush:Sept. Bombing?

Is Reagan's memory lapse contagious?

I was relieved to read Robyn Davis' editorial (Harbinger, Oct 6) about political ignorance on campus. After listening to both debates (Presidential and Vice Presidential), as well as seeing interviews from both campaigns, I have two compelling reasons to urge undecided voters to register and vote for Micheal Dukakis: 1.) George Bush, and 2.) Dan Quayle.

First, George Bush. My initial reaction was, well, I'm employed and not at war yet, and Reaganomics hasn't hit the fan yet, so, why not a republican administration? Then George Bush began to talk, and ruined it all.

The man says he stands for anti-bigotry and anti-semitism (somewhere in Argentina, 3 80-year-old Nazis are still giggling).

He referred to the anniversary of the bombing of Pearl Harbor as Sept. 7. This would be a very patriotic thing to do if the the bombing occurred on Sept. 7 (But then again he was only 3 months off).

He keeps referring to Dukakis as a "card carrying member of the ACLU". Silly me, I always figured any group whose sole purpose was to uphold the constitution and civil liberties was to be applauded.

Then I discovered the most frightening aspect of a George Bush administration. Three justices of the Supreme court will be over 80 when the new president takes office. All three are considered liberal judges.

Right now the court is considered balanced. Do you think someone who spits out the word Liberal like it was liver & onions will appoint any liberal judges if/when it becomes necessary?

The second most frightening aspect to a Bush administration is the possibility that sometime in the next four years we might be saying "President Quayle". The man apparently has no concept of what a Vice President does( much less a president (beyond the fact that he gets to travel a lot).

I have never voted in a Presidential election (in 12 years of eligibility because of the electoral system, but I am not only going to vote in this one, but I'm going to work for the Democrats. I don't want this to be my last free choice.

Off Her Rocker with our mom

By Liz Brousseau
Staff Columnist

It looks like winter is nearly here, and snow is just around the corner. I can always tell when winter is on the way by the shift of interest in my home.

A fire has been blazing in the fireplace for at least a couple of weeks now, hot cocoa has become a permanent addition to the weekly shopping list, and children have been bustling with mom over whether or not oatmeal really sticks to their ribs and keeps them warm on the way to school.

Mom lost the battle when she couldn't come up with an explanation for why she wasn't eating it for breakfast as well.

Another tell-tale sign includes the bruise Mom has on her shin from attempting to brave the ascent into the attic at 8:00am, before the coffee has kicked in.

Meanwhile, the bus was honking out in front and in hopes that the children would keep mittens and hats intact while going to school (even though it probably did look dorky).

Where do these children get their ideas from anyway? When I was a little girl, children didn't worry about looking dorky--at least as best as I can remember, that far back.

The biggest telling sign around my house though, is the sights and sounds of that massive machine. The one which threatens to make me a widow in the prime of my life. That deadly grueling, dangerous necessity, the snowmobile.

Last weekend when Dad had been missing for two days, I discovered him beneath a mass of broken skis, rusty chains, and dilapidated engine parts.

"I am going to get this baby ready!" He exclaimed. He was not kidding either. She was riding around on the concrete not five minutes later. Sister just wanted to know if this was indeed a snow mobile, and if so, why was Daddy driving it around on the driveway?

"Well honey, Daddy is getting her ready," I explained assuredly as I wished I knew what that was supposed to mean. I had thought she was ready after she was freshly painted in April, and in July, and again in September.

After watching my husband go through several cans of rust-proof spray paint, I am convinced that he believes that if he releases enough fluorocarbons into the atmosphere, it will cause premature snow fall.

I really thought she was ready when she began receiving her 9:00 p.m. battery charge every night, religiously, since August. Just in case--don't you know.

Even though she received new skis in June, she still is treated to a lovely cruise across the dry pavements of our driveway every Sunday--if that doesn't constitute ready, I don't know what would. In my mind, that baby isn't only ready, she's burnin' with anxiety.

Must be winter.

"Imagine John Lennon" - now you can

By Robyn Davis
Managing Editor

John Lennon was a huge and controversial public figure. He still is. In reviewing the newly released documentary on his life, "Imagine, John Lennon", it becomes increasingly difficult to critique without editorializing as well.

"You know, you went to see those movies with Elvis or somebody in it when we were still in Liverpool, and you see everybody waiting to see him. And I'd been waiting there, too. And they'd all scream when he came on the screen. So I thought, 'That's a good job'."--John Lennon.

It sounds so simple. He founded the Beatles, a slightly successful band, as well as being singer, songwriter, artist, poet, peace-activist, husband, and father. I think more than anything, John Lennon was a realist. Note that "saint" is not included on the list. He never claimed to be. It's as if he were running for an election. Because someone is in the public eye, there is a tendency to denounce his/her professional credibility by scrutinizing their personal lives. My God, he was divorced. He admitted that he did drugs. And look at his wife, you would think with all that money he could buy--or have some opinionless model-type.

Lennon realized he was in the public eye. He used it as a tool. He possessed an incredible amount of power through his music and words. He knew he had to be careful but that he could also do some good by it.

Ironically enough, "Imagine" is directed and produced by the same people as "This is Elvis", also a documentary theatrical feature.

Producer David L. Wolper has made over 500 films which won more than 150 awards, including 2 Oscars, 40 Emmys, 7 Golden Globes, 5 Peabodys, and recognition through retrospectives at the world's great film festivals.

Wolper states simply, "I'm really not an expert on any of the subjects I did". He admits "What I am, is an expert on knowing how to make the film."

It was because of Wolper's expertise and the fact that he didn't particularly know much about John Lennon that Yoko Ono approached him about doing a film about her late husband's life and career.

A filmmaker herself, Yoko didn't do it in an effort to keep the film as objective as possible. For this reason, Yoko turned over rights to never-before released original music written, recorded and filmed by Lennon, over 200 hours of film and videotape from their personal collection as well as granting the filmmakers total creative control over what went into the film.

Producer/Director Andrew Solt was contacted by Wolper to collaborate with him on the project as he had done in "This is Elvis"

Reviewing a documentary is a bit different than looking at your average feature film. A large part of a critique revolves around cinematography and plot. Well, much of the footage came from "home movies" and as for the plot--that's a given. What is vital then, is the manner in which the information is compiled and edited.

One of the most incredible things about the film is that Lennon himself narrates. This was possible because, from those films and video tapes, and from various interviews, they could extract the thoughts and feelings of the artist as well as facts about his growth both physically and professionally.

The result is fantastic, almost spooky. Unfortunately, it is also difficult to articulate. It's as if you are watching his life progress, watching him grow up, all the while, he's telling you about it. When he talks about doing a song and what he was feeling at the time, the audience gets to be there while he's writing it and recording it.

Perhaps I, a "post-Beatlemania baby", seem to be glossing over Lennon and the movie a bit. I see it as a combination of two things. The first is that the same magic that allowed Beatlemania to happen must still be there. Secondly, my view is simply testimony to the fact that the film is excellent. They won. It worked. Whatever.

The result of the "get acquainted with John" format is that the inevitable ending becomes that much more disturbing. It's as if, just at that moment, you realize, actually realize, that this remarkable human being was shot down in cold blood. He's gone. It's all over. That's all he wrote.

John Lennon

The most disturbing part in the movie comes as you are watching and he's at a "renaissance" period in his life. You are hearing him say things like: (about the future) "I'm full of optimism knowing that there's other people around who I can agree with. I'm not alone you know. The Woodstock, Isle of Wight, all the mass meetings of the youth is completely positive for me. The sixties was just wakin' up in the morning, and we haven't even gotten to dinner time yet."

What really sucks is that there's going to be an empty place at the table

Birth of the "Story Lady"

Her characters come alive through the use of dramatic vocalizations, exaggerated facial expressions, and animated body language.

Torrence's favorite tales are the scary ones. She always tries to include a scary story in her repertoire.

This performance was no exception. Torrence told the story of Tilly, a frightened young girl who was afraid of the dark. Tilly had to climb eight stairs before reaching her bedroom door. Torrence used a breathy voice and wide-eyed expressions of surprise as she told her stories.

"Tilly, I will get you Tilly, I'm on the first step ..Tilly. I'm on the eighth step. Tilly, I'm coming in." For a few moments the audience was silent.

The audience, however, was not silent during most of the performance. It was interspersed with mentally disabled children

Although Torrence admitted having a little trouble concentrating amid all the distractions, she never missed a beat.

Torrence was a storyteller with stories to tell and, by god, she was going to tell them. However, she did not always feel this way.

Torrence began her storytelling career in 1972 by accident. She was a reference librarian at the High Point Library in North Carolina. She loved the reference department and

Corky Siegel Plays for Harper

By Scott Neidl
Entertainment Editor

If you enjoy rhythm and blues, I suggest you keep this Saturday open. During Fall Festival Week Harper is presenting a live performance of Corky Siegel, a very talented and well know R & B musician. Siegel will be appearing on Saturday October 15 at 8:00 in J-143.

The basic concert format Siegel has planned for Saturday is one half completely new material, with the remaining half being new arrangements of some of his favorites. Approximately 50 percent of his performance will include vocals.

Siegel has been performing for close to 25 years with such organizations as the New York Philharmonic, the Boston Symphony and the National Symphony at the Kennedy Center. Siegel also recieved invitations from the London Symphony, the Tokyo Symphony and the Philadelphia Philharmonic.

He plays a unique combination of blues and classical music that he calls "Symphonic Blues". He came across this combination when playing at a small club in 1967.

Seiji Ozawa, a famous conductor, was in the audience one evening when Siegel was playing his traditional blues. Ozawa fell in love with the style of music Siegel was performing and decided to blend the blues with the classical.

Symphonic Blues was first performed with the Chicago Symphony at Rivinia in July 1968.

Siegel's music is currently influenced by the early classics. "I find classical music very uplifting, with blues being extremely emotional, not sad, but emotional", says Siegel.

Although the idea of 'Symphonic Blues' originated from Ozawa, Siegel really used it as his medium after his attempts to emmulate the blues masters had failed. He started to develop what he was capable of doing rather than what he wasn't capable of.

The recording history of Siegel and his bands is one of very solid stature. He has at least sixteen recordings, "with many, many re-releases" Siegel adds. He has recorded under the Deutsche Grammophon label, a prestigious company that produces exclusively classical music. Siegel has also made five recordings for Vanguard, and another five recordings for RCA records. His latest record is, "Siegel-Schwall Reunion Concert" which is under the Alligator label, a label reserved exclusively for Blues.

Siegel has been interested in the Blues profession since he was at least 21 years old. His main influences included such greats as Howlin Wolf, Muddy Waters, Jimmy Reed, Roland Kirk, Billie Holiday, and many of the R & B artists of the 1950's and the 1960's. His talent extends between piano, harmonica, and saxophone, to composing and song writing. "I learned to play rock 'n' roll sax from listening to rhythm and blues vocals, and then learned to play harmonica from the saxophone" states Siegel.

The band for ensemble for the more distinguished title), the Consortium String Quartet consists of four major members.

The first violinist for the quartet is Arnold Roth. Roth has been the concert master with the Chicago Opera, the Ballet Chicago, and the William Ferris Chorale.

The second violinist position is filled by Florentina Ramniceanu. Ramniceanu hails from Romania and is a major international violin competition winner. She toured most her life with the European Symphony Orchestra as a guest soloist. She was also the principle violinist with the Chicago Opera Theatre and the Ballet Chicago.

The only violist in the quartet is Daniel Sirbu. Sirbu is extremely in demand and has free-lanced with the Chicago Symphony.

The last member of the string quartet is Felix Wurman. Soloing with the Chicago Symphony at age 14, Wurman is one of the two students that study under Jacqueline Dupree.

The one person left out is the accutic percussionist, Bruce Carver. Bruce will be playing in about one third of the material performed on Saturday. He plays the publa and the dumbec.

Siegel summed up our interview by saying, "These are classical musicians, highly trained and highly skilled ...the best in Chicago. The important aspect of performing to them, is to put intense love into every single note that they play and have fun with their music. I am a blues musician and I feel the same way."

didn't care anything about working with children.

One snowy day, however, Torrence was asked to substitute for an ill storyteller.

"Telling stories was the last thing on my mind but I had enough respect for my boss to say 'Okay--I'll do it'," admitted Torrence.

The children loved her. Torrence began telling stories that she knew. When she got to an unfamiliar spot, she would embellish the story.

Before long, Torrence became the library's official storyteller. In her free time Torrence even began telling stories professionally.

"We have many young millionaires in High Point," said Torrence. "After they go through the gambit of the clowns for birthday parties, magicians and whatever else there is, they need something else so they said 'Ok, let's have a storyteller.'"

Torrence began storytelling at birthday parties for $35-$45. One day she received $95 for telling tall tales at a birthday party for a set of twins. Before long, she was accused by her boss 'of using the library to get my business'.

By that time, Torrence realized that her true passion was storytelling.

In 1977 Torrence had an opportunity to perform at the National Storyteller Festival, sponsored by the National Association for the Preservation and Perpetuation of Storytelling. "I booked about 50 performances and I haven't done anything else since then," informed Torrence.

Jackie Torrence took her show on the road. She has performed in schools, libraries, professional meetings and festivals. Her talents were showcased on two award-winning shows. She was co-host of "The Teller and The Tale". Fourteen of her works are contained in a one-person dramatic trilogy called 'Confused Images." Torrence's stories can also be heard on Earwig and Weston Woods records.

Torrence describes her road to the top: "It was a buckboard. Somebody threw a rock and spooked the horses. It took off. And all I could do was hold on. And it hasn't stopped yet." says Torrence.

Torrence believes stories are very unusual. "They often have deep meanings. Children need to hear stories when they're young so they can understand the stories when they grow up.

For example, you have to hear the Goldilocks' story. She went into the bear's house. She wasn't supposed to. That was not her home. She tasted their food. She wasn't supposed to. She sat in their chairs. She wasn't supposed to. She ate up the food, broke up the chairs, and then went to bed. You're not supposed to get into anybody's house. And when you do you get punished. You get the shit scared out of you like she did.

Okay, then when you get to be a big person you know that you just don't walk into somebody's house. What happened to Goldilocks is symbolic," said Torrence.

"I'm an entertainer," said Torrence. "I'm not here to moralize. But if you found something of value in something I said--you were educated by it. If you were turned or in any way I'm glad."

STUDENTS OFFERED CHICAGO CULTURAL EXCURSION

Harper students have an opportunity to experience one of the nation's top symphony orchestras at substantial savings as part of the cultural excursion programming by Student Activities.

For only $9.50, Harper students can attend a performance of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra on Tuesday, October 18, with Sir George Solti conducting.

The performance of the Chicago Symphony includes Schubert's Symphony No. 5, Schuller's Concerto for Flute, Beethoven's Symphony No. 8, and Walfred Kujala, Flautist.

The ticket price includes bus transportation, leaving the front of Building A at 5:30 p.m. and returning at 11 p.m.

Tickets alone for the Chicago Symphony are normally $32, said Student Activities Coordinator Michael Nejman. "Students will also save on tolls, gas, and parking. It's a tremendous savings."

Tickets are available at the Box Office on a first come, first served basis; only 43 seats are available.

A third cultural expedition is planned in December for Harper students to see Steppenwolf Theatre's production of "Stepping Out" by American Richard Harris.

For more information about these events call 397-3000, Ext. 2547.

HARPER SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CELEBRATES 21ST SEASON

The Harper Symphony Orchestra is celebrating its 21st season with a subscription series of six concerts featuring outstanding soloists and a wide variety of music.

The concert schedule for the 1988-89 season begins with a salute to Beethoven.

This is the fourth season that the Harper Symphony Orchestra is playing under the dynamic leadership of Musical Director and Conductor Frank J. Winkler, who has conducted the orchestra of Illinois and the Grant Park Symphony and who has performed with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

For additional information, call the Box Office 397-3000, Ext. 2547.

"THE SERVANT OF TWO MASTERS"

Rehearsals are underway for the Harper College Theatre's production of "The Servant of Two Masters," an 18th century Italian farce written by Carlo Goldoni.

Production dates are November 11, 12, 13, 18 and 19. Tickets go on sale at the Box Office, Building J, X2547, beginning Monday, October 17, 1988. Cost is $3 Students/Staff; $5 for the public.

The popular Dinner Theatre Package is available for the November 19th performance. An Italian buffet will be served beginning at 6 p.m. in the Cafeteria, Building A, followed by the play at 8 p.m. -- book early.

Based on the "commedia dell' arte," a type of comic theatre which flourished in Europe for hundreds of years, 'Servant' tells the story of two sets of young lovers who, for a variety of reasons, cannot work out the difficulties which separate them. It is left to their rascally servant, Truffaldino, to finally bring them together. 'The Servant of Two Masters' is comic farce at its very best.

Twelve Harper students make up the cast for the production. They include: Todd Davidson (Schaumburg), Brendan Foley (Arlington Heights), Dana Legsdon (Arlington Heights), Dan Dudych (Des Plaines), Tony Kortas (Buffalo Grove), Harold LeBoyer (Prospect Meadows), Curt Phillips (Hoffman Estates), Margie Rathke (Arlington Heights), Kirk Sanders (Rolling Meadows), Jennie Sartore (Palatine), Duann Squires (Inverness), and Maurice Stone (Palatine).

"The Servant of Two Masters" is under the direction of Mary Jo Willis. Set designer is Michael Brown, lighting designer is Barry Taylor. The 18th century costumes are being designed and constructed by Joan Lakeshol and Carla Satchell. Fight choreography for the play is under the direction of Randy Meyer, Columbia College.

BUDDIES

By Peder Sweeney

I always swore that I'd kill myself before I'd do time in a prison. Tough words. I've been eating state food, wearing state clothes and cursing state bars for almost a year now, but still I don't kill myself. I don't have the guts.

I wish to God I did.

This is where I'll spend the rest of my life. Doing nothing more with my days than approaching--with agonizing slowness--death by natural causes. A few hundred days of it behind me, how many ahead? Eighteen thousand? Twenty thousand? Each one insufferable. An eternity of seconds and minutes and quarter hours and half hours and hours without meaning, amounting, when a day has finally passed, to nothing more significant than a tickmark on the wall. So far the little ticks cover about twenty square inches. I can cover them with my hand. When I die, which, with my luck, won't be for quite a while, an area eight feet across and four feet high will be covered with ticks. Figuring that out helped ten minutes to pass. How did my life get this terrible?

I'm here for murder, of course. It's hard to pull this kind of sentence for anything else. They say I killed my own best friend, Eddie Hart.

I did.

But not in a way that I should be in prison for. It wasn't my idea to kill him, it was Az. That's a hard thing to get people to believe. He made me kill him, he tricked me into it. Eddie was a tricky guy.

And Eddie is the only person whose testimony could spring me.

Dead Eddie.

I bring all this up because I heard from Eddie today. It's the one year anniversary of the day I killed him, so I suppose he thought it would be a good time to clear a few things up. I'm telling you, Eddie was a tricky guy.

When I got back to my little gray cell after working all day on the Grounds Beautification detail, I found a small package sitting on my bed from the day's mail delivery. It was wrapped in brown paper and had no return address. I tore it open and found one of those small cassette players like reporters carry. There was a tape in it so I hit the play button.

"Hi, Tony. How ya doin', buddy? It's me, Eddie. Would either of us have believed a few years ago that we'd end up like this before we were thirty? I mean, you in prison and me dead? God, we had it all. Funny how things can turn on you."

When I heard those first words I got so dizzy and confused I had to shut it off and try to think. I had spent much of the last year thinking about the death of the person who was now addressing me. Reliving again and again the exact moment when I came around the corner and saw him. It had always haunted me that he had smiled at that exact moment when I shot him. And now to hear his voice . . . as if he were standing in the same room with me. . . . it was too much to handle and I staggered drunkenly to the commode and regurgitated my dinner. There was a cold, thin sweat beading on my brow and vomiting had done nothing to alleviate the nausea that was spinning my head like a slow motion yo-yo. I took deep breaths to clear my head and picked up the tape player when I got my breath back. I rewound it to the beginning and hit the play button but I had trouble working it and didn't hear anything for a while. I was still nauseous and I was beginning to think the whole thing was a joke or that I had imagined it when Eddie's voice picked up where it had left off.

"Yup," he went on, "it's funny how things can turn on you. One day you're on top and everything looks great and the next day you're down and the whole world hates you. I bet you've had a bad year, Tone. I bet prison life doesn't agree with you. I bet you don't like the food or the walls or having large, humorless negroes make love to you. That's the jailhouse jargon for it, isn't it Tone? Making love?" Eddie laughed here, as if it were funny. The next words he spoke brightened my mood considerably. "Well, it's about time we got you out of there, buddy. One year has been long enough, don't you think? How about a full confession from me? Would that help? Well, that's what this tape is. I will explain all the details of how I tricked you into killing me and you'll be back on the streets in no time."

Elation coursed through my every fiber! Could it be true? Was this excruciating nightmare finally over? If Eddie had been alive and beside me I would have kissed him!

"One thing I might suggest is that you play this tape to yourself first, in private, for reasons that I will explain later. Do as you wish, of course, but I think you'll find a private first listening a wise move.

"The first thing that you must want to know is why I set you up to kill me. You know that you were tricked into it, you must be dying to know why. Have you spent the last year thinking that I was so distraught about those funds you so craftily relieved me of that I gave my life to send you to jail? Or that my grief over Gwen's infidelity drove me to mortal despair? That's what you must have thought. What else? (It's strange speaking to a man a year in the future who is going to kill me tomorrow.) Well, I was never a healthy person, as you know, and I have just found out that these migraines that have been getting worse and worse are the symptom of something larger and very terrible. When the doctor informed me of what the CAT scan revealed, he spoke in very somber tones of the pain I would suffer in my last month. Even as he spoke I could detect the underlying meaning of his words. He knew what was in store for me and if he could have, I'm sure he would have prescribed suicide. That was yesterday and that last month has begun. After a very long, very painful night I have decided two things; one, I don't have the courage to kill myself; two, I don't have the courage not to.

"That's when I thought of you. . . buddy."

I stopped the tape again. That much of what he said made sense. He was always in and out of hospitals for one thing or another, asthma, allergies, respiratory infections, a peptic ulcer, a crooked spine. He was a sickly little dude. He also had the worst headaches I've ever seen anyone have, at least for the last few years. They were ruining his life. Whenever he felt one coming on he would have to try to get somewhere where he could spend the next several hours doubled up in searing, mind-bending pain. I was with him once and he made me tie my leather belt around his head and pull it much tighter than I thought was safe. Finally, a few months before he died, he stopped going anywhere, just stayed at home so that when the pain came he would be right there in his own bed, with his nurse and family nearby. He was always amazed when the pain stopped and he was still alive. Whatever it was that that doctor told him he had, I don't blame him for wanting to commit suicide if it meant a month of those headaches and then death anyway.

How could he know all this and sound so happy on this cassette which was obviously made shortly after his final trip to the doctor?

He was smiling when I shot him, for God's sake!

"I figure that a year in prison is fair for what you did to me--stealing Gwen and the money I mean, not killing me. Having you kill me was just a means to several desirable ends: locking you up for a while and, of course, my death. I can't be sure, but I'll guess that Gwen isn't standing faithfully by you during your ordeal. I'll also guess that those funds are quickly running out. Lawyers cost a lot of money and you must be very intent on regaining your freedom, being innocent and all. I could have had this tape held for more than a year, but spending a year locked up for a crime you didn't commit as your resources are steadily running dry and the threat of life incarceration becomes more and more real seems quite satisfactory. Of course, there's the other thing, but let's not get into that just yet."

I stopped the tape. What other thing? I stole his money, I stole his wife and I killed him, what else could there be? He was right about Gwen. She blew me off before Eddie was even cremated. I guess I was just flattering myself that a woman disloyal to one man would be true to another. Any woman you can take ain't worth taking. He was also right about the lawyers. I was almost through the small fortune I had taken from him. I had a team of attorneys busting their asses, or so they told me, to get me an appeal based on the fact that Eddie tricked me into killing him.

You can see the problem there.

Hearing Eddie's voice so accurately defining my predicament almost made me forget that he had been dead for a year.

What other thing?

Me and Eddie had been friends since we were twelve. Good buddies since the seventh grade. We met when you escorted a pair of sisters to a dance. Their parents insisted they stay together. Eddie and I hit it off right away, clicking immediately into the relationship we would always have; he the smart but sickly runt, me bigger, more athletic and more popular. We took the sisters to a garage where schoolbuses were repaired near the school where the dance was being held. I had a bottle of vermouth I had stolen from my father's wetbar and we all sat around drinking it and having a good time. There was a lot of necking and squeezing and groping as I recall. It was Eddie's first female conquest. We stayed good friends after that.

We went through high school together and he went off to college for four years. When he finished I looked him up and we picked up where we had left off, drinking, chasing skirt and making big plans for the future. Eddie's family was loaded and due to a few well timed deaths, he was due to come into a wad of money on his twenty-fifth birthday. I knew about his inheritance for years and now I realize that I had always planned to steal that money from Eddie somehow. It was almost like the only reason I hung around with him was because he had money coming. Not that he wasn't a good guy, just that, subconsciously, I always counted his fortune as mine. I wonder if, subconsciously, he did too.

When he was twenty-four he married Gwen. He never had any difficulty making women fall for him, he had a lot of charisma. He never kept them long, though, and Gwen was no exception. She wanted it all. She wanted the comfortable lifestyle and the love that Eddie offered, but she also wanted the passion and freedom that I offered. She wanted it all and she got it--before their first anniversary, Gwen and I were meeting several times a week at local motels. Once, she asked me what was wrong with Eddie.

"I don't know what you mean," I replied.

"Can't you see it?" she asked. "He's boiling inside, like he's on fire or something."

"Eddie?" I said incredulously. "Eddie's the sweetest guy I've ever met. He likes everyone. He's always happy, except for the headaches, of course."

"You just don't see it," she argued. "It scares me sometimes, like there's something eating his insides, taking him over. It's like he's full of hate but he's trying to fight it."

I laughed to ward off her seriousness. "Awww, your just feeling guilty about you and me so you're imagining things. Eddie's no monster." I laughed some more, but I wondered what it was she saw in Eddie.

As Eddie's tape continued, I was euphoric to hear him deliver what he had promised--a full disclosure. It would get me out of this hellhole for sure. It confirmed everything I had been saying all along. I was surprised to hear Eddie admit that he had saved a tape from his answering machine from over a year before his death. The tape had been a crucial piece of evidence against me. It was found in his answering machine as if I had just called and left it that night. "Hey Eddie, c'mon on over as soon as you can. It's important!" It showed premeditation, said the prosecutors. I knew that Eddie had saved it from the past, but the significance of that fact only dawned on me now as I listened to his recorded message. He had planned to have me kill him for over a year! He knew then what his condition was! He always knew!

Poor little bastard.

But that somehow didn't sit right. There had to be something more.

There was.

The day I killed Eddie, he phoned me. He was crazed. He screamed his hatred for me and for Gwen. He swore that he would avenge himself. He was insane with anger. I could barely make out his words through his screaming and snarling. He was rabid! I couldn't believe it. The last thing he said to me was that he had bought a gun and that I would be dead within the hour. He swore it! Then he hung up.

I had a gun of my own, as he well knew, and after his horrifying call I loaded it and chambered a bullet. It was then I heard the first sounds from outside. Could he have arrived already? There were other houses but I wrote them off as my own fear. When I heard the tinkling of broken glass though, I knew it was not the wind. I raced downstairs and found a pane of glass broken from the back door, but it was still securely locked. That meant that he was still outside. I went out after him.

It was a cool autumn evening. Dry leaves rustled as a stark white moon shone from a velvet black sky. He was out there, I knew it. I held the pistol cautiously in front of me. I just wanted to talk to him, but I wasn't going to let him kill me. He had sounded insane. I crept slowly around the house in search of him. My breathing was ragged and I was very careful not to make any noise. I remember the cool night air chilling my sweating skin. When I came around the front of the house he was there. He sprang at me and landed a few feet in front of me and I fired out of instinct. I saw the hole the bullet made in his face and I remember that he didn't look crazy at all. He looked happy. He was smiling.

Well, it was an easy day for the prosecutor's office. They had the tape from Eddie's answering machine with my voice urgently inviting him over, and they had Eddie's dead and unarmed body lying across my front porch as if he had popped over for a visit and I had jumped from around the corner and killed him.

I had nothing but an unlikely and unprovable story about the universally beloved Eddie screaming blue murder and threatening to kill me within the hour. A story my attorney hadn't even bothered presenting. He had tried a plea of temporary insanity which is probably still giving the jurors a chuckle.

Murder one. Life. No parole.

BUDDIES

But it was over now. Joy swam through me at the thought. The nightmare was finally over! Eddie's testimony would exonerate me entirely. I was so elated I forgot about that other thing he had mentioned.

I fumbled with the little tape player trying to flip the tape. After the part where Eddie actually provided the details of his roundabout suicide, he resumed addressing me directly in warm familiar tones. I felt myself missing him.

"Well, Tone, I guess that should just about do it. Tomorrow you'll be a free man with the rest of your life to look forward to. How does it feel, buddy?"

"Great!" I answered jubilantly.

"Of course," Eddie's voice continued, "there is that other thing I mentioned. Maybe it's a small thing that I just blew out of proportion. I'm not sure, and that's why I gave you a chance. Let me explain. Remember the night we met, at the junior high homecoming? Remember those girls we were with? Debbie and Peggy Lambert? Long time ago, huh? You had only just met Debbie, but I had been madly in love with Peggy for three years. That was the biggest night of my life. I saved my allowance for six months to buy that suit and it took me over a month to work up the courage to ask Peggy to the dance. She was all I ever thought about. I worshipped her. And then finally, the big night comes and her parents spring it on me that Peggy has to stay with her sister and her date all night. I was so damn mad, but I got over it. I was with Peggy and that was all that mattered. Remember what we did that night? We went to that dirty old garage and drank that vermouth you said you had bought at the liquor store. You thought you were so cool. I hated you so much it made me shiver. You were ruining my night with the girl I had dreamed about for years. Do you know what years means to a twelve-year-old kid? So here I am with Peggy and her sister and her idiot boyfriend. I wanted to leave you guys, but Peggy wouldn't disobey her parents who, I guess, hadn't told her not to go to a garage and drink vermouth all night.

"Well Tone, you started stupid and just got stupider as you got drunker. You were laughing like a fool and grabbing the girls in a way they didn't think was funny at all. And then . . . do you even remember what you did then, Tone? You started tickling me. You were so much bigger than me there was nothing I could do. You kept doing it until I was screaming, but you still wouldn't stop. Peggy and Debbie were telling you to quit, but you were just having too much fun. You kept tickling me until I couldn't stand it anymore and I wet my pants. Do you remember that, Tone? Huh?

"The biggest night of my life. A date with the girl around whom my life revolved and some drunken jerk makes me wet my pants in front of her. I've never forgotten that night, Tone.

"Well, now it's my turn to tickle you back . . . maybe. I'm giving you a chance. If you disregarded my earlier advice and played this tape before a trustworthy witness, or if you played it in a different cassette player, you'll get the freedom you want. Or, if at any point in the tape you rewound to hear something again, than you already know what I've done and you've taken steps to preserve what you could. That's the chance I gave you. Otherwise, I think you'll find that this machine has completely erased the tape as it played . . . buddy."

Is there no-one here to challenge me?

By Byron Blanchard
Sports Editor

The Olympics are over. There are so many things to talk about. Everything from disqualifications to surprise superstars, but the biggest story had to be Florence Griffith Joyner.

FloJo, the fastest woman on this planet(or any other) is the most dominating Sprinter ever to live. Not only did she win the 100 & 200 meter dashes and ran a leg on the gold medal women's 400 meter relay, but she ran the anchor leg of the women's mile relay.

The mile relay is considered the guts and glory event of the day. It is always the last event run on the track. The teams participating usually gather around to watch the team's four men or women run their hearts out.

Usually the big stud on your team anchors(runs last). It does'nt matter who's ahead in team standings if you lose the mile relay, you leave the station with a bad taste in your mouth.

American and former Olympic record holder Valerie Brisco is on the mile relay team. She doesn't anchor. They bring in FloJo who hasn't run a competition quarter since 1984 in to anchor. What does she do? She runs the fastest leg on the team.

The team destroys the American record and erases the World record by nearly half a second. Oh Yeah, they lost by 33 hundredths of a second. Only when Joyner could not run down Olga Bryzquina, the Olympic gold medalist, at 400 meters (which in case you didn't know) is the distance covered by each leg in the mile relay.

Joyner did what no other athlete in modern history has done. She competed in and gained medals at the three flat sprinting distances of 100,200 and 400 meters. Incidentally, Flo had already run 4 heats of the 100 meter dash, 4 heats of the 200, three heats of the 400 and broken two Olympic records before turning it on for the mile relay.

Perhaps she'll concentrate on running a quarter mile next year, after all, being the best by such a margin must be boring.

The big sting

By Byron Blanchard
Sports Editor

One year ago I wrote a story called "Who can beat Mike Tyson?" In the article, I basically stated no one could. I told you that Carl "The Truth" Williams had a chance but that no one else could touch him. Well, I would like to apologize for that. I was wrong. A force more powerful than any before it raised it's pretty face and struck Tyson with all the disarming venom of her charm. When Robin Givens married Mike Tyson over 8 months and 20 million dollars ago. The end of their marriage was imminent.

Let's look at their relationship from a military view. After all, everything's fair in love and war (an old cliche but effective none the less).

Givens alienated Tyson from all his friends and loved ones. Militarily we call this divide. Then Givens thought to convince Tyson he was emotionally unstable and she could not live with him. Conquer.

If we view the plan(make no mistake it was a plan)from the beginning we see it was a masterpiece of simplicity. Look at the timeline of events. These are listed how I see the situation looking thru Robin Givens brain.

1. Get the oaf to fall in love with me. I'm pretty, he's a boxer, no problem....

2. Have sex with him once ,then claim I'm pregnant. Shotgun wedding.

3. Get married.

4. Convince him to buy my mother expensive gifts, cars, houses, etc. that way the court can't take them into account when I put step 11 into effect.

5. Pretend I lose my non-existent baby.

6. Convince the oaf that his friends are cheating him. Leaving him with nothing but sweet old me.

7. Say Mike beats me.

8. Tell the world Mike has emotional problems.

9. Tell Barbara Walters Mike is crazy (manic depressive).

10. Make Mike blow up in public, then leave him.

11. File for divorce for 20 million. I'll take home about 10 Oh, well.

12. Laugh all the way to the bank.

As we all know the person being victimized is always the most blind. Wether it be a man cheating on his wife or a woman marrying for money. At least Mike will learn the joys of pre-nuptial agreements and the value of advice from his elders a bit more. Face it, we've all been stung by the Robin Givens of the world. But our battles rarely cost 10 million dollars in reparations.

Time is no longer an obstacle to earning your degree.

A degree may be exactly what your career needs. But it's probably the last thing your schedule needs.

Fortunately, there's one college that offers degree programs designed for working adults that considers the time available to working adults.

They're the Field Experience Programs of National College of Education, offering unique ways to complete your degree while keeping your life in balance. National College classes meet just one night per week. And you learn skills and apply them directly to where it helps you most...your career. With two years transferable college credit you can finish your Bachelor's in as little as a year. What's more, you may earn credit based on learning from your work and life experiences. If you already have a Bachelor's Degree, your Master's Degree will only take about 15 months.

National College's Field Experience Programs are efficient and practical. Because it makes good sense for your schedule. And even greater sense for your career.

Hawks get juiced up, sneak by Illinois Valley

By Sandy Salvatore
Staff Writer

If you stopped and asked a Harper football team player who his hero is, one would expect him to say Jim McMahon or Walter Payton or maybe someone else. But after their win against the Illinois Valley Apaches last Saturday, he would probably say James Haywood.

The Apaches got an early break when Todd Testo fumbled and Rob Kelly recovered the ball at Harper's 46. Testo's fumble allowed the Apaches an unsuccessful 40-yard field goal try by D'Alasio thanks to Harper's Rod Lathem block.

The Hawks' scored their first touchdown of the game when Al Snyder(14-of-22 passes for 137 yards) capped off a scoring drive with a hand off to Todd Ironman Testo for a 3-yard run. Magnus Branestrom's extra point left 6:25 left on the clock.

Illinois Valley finished off the first half when Troy Gray intercepted a Snyder pass. Gray's interception led to the go-ahead for a touchdown on an 8-yard pass from Kenton Carr to Kevin Jones, which took 7 plays and 42 yards to make the score 13-7 Illinois Valley.

Superhero "Speedy" Haywood brought the team back to life in the second half after sitting out the entire first nursing a bruised kidney.

Haywood's comeback allowed the Hawks' to dominate the second half scoring 3 touchdowns ,and only allowing Illinois Valley a touchdown.

Harper took a 14-13 lead in the beginning of the third when Haywood ran for an 8-yard touchdown. The drive went 21 yards in 3 plays which was set up by a Lathem interception.

Harper made the score 21-13 when Haywood went sky high for six from the Apache 2-yard line with 13:36 left on the ticker. Haywood's touchdown was the result of Lathem's second fumble recovery.

The Apaches final possession of the game. Half-back Jim Turczyn went untouched for a 23 yard touchdown run. Illinois Valley's 2-point conversion attempt went incomplete thanks to Harpers D-line.

The Hawks' wrapped up the night when Snyder found split end Velde for a touchdown with 3:11 left in the fourth. Velde's touchdown was the result of a 65-yard, 10 play drive in which 4:30 was eaten off the clock.

The Hawks' will go for 5-1 against Moraine Valley Saturday at 1 pm for Harper's Fall Festival game.

HAWK OF THE WEEK

By Byron Blanchard
Sports Editor

When the Hawks entered the third quarter trailing a spunky Illinois Valley team 13-7, Harper coach John Eliasic sent in James "Speedy Gonzalez" Haywood. Haywood, who sat out the first half due to an injured kidney, proceeded to "get a little stupid" carrying the ball 16 times for 113 yards and two touchdowns. Propellin' the conference-leading Hawks (4-1, 4-0) over Illinois Valley 28-19.

With DIAL the operator can give more help to the callers. The person calling will not have to hold for great lengths of time or worry about a busy signal.

In the last few years, Paula has had many salesman approach her about implementing such a system. It took three years to get people to listen to Paula and then look into new additions to the telephone system.

[illegible] the off-campus caller needs a touch-tone telephone. If the caller has a rotary telephone he or she must wait for the message to be completed and then the switchboard operator will answer and assist them by making the connection to the extension they are calling.

If the off campus caller does not know the extension number but has a touch tone telephone they would wait for the operator to assist just like the rotary telephone caller.

The message on DIAL will be a verbal menu one thru five, to immediately transfer the incoming caller to the most asked for extensions or to another menu leading the person closer to the extension he or she needs and 0 for the switchboard operator.

For further information about the new automated call processor, call Paula Blacker at 397-3000 x2200. Please feel free to call 397-3000 any time on October 21 and listen to the new DIAL system.

"Smoking in Designated Areas Only"

By Alisa Chinlund
Staff Writer

"No Smoking," "Smoking in Designated Areas Only," "This is a Smoking Area," these signs are posted in accordance with Harper College's smoking policy, yet, some people at Harper are not aware that Harper has a smoking policy.

"The policy was developed almost two years ago by a subcommittee of the Environmental Health and Safety Committee after all the staff and some students were surveyed regarding where smoking should be allowed on campus," said Rosemary Murray, supervisor of health services.

A large percentage of those surveyed agreed that smoking should only be allowed in designated areas, added Murray.

Smoking is allowed in the designated lounge area in most buildings, private offices, and any places displaying a smoking sign.

Smoking is prohibited in building M, a physical education building where individuals are concerned about their health and fitness. Smoking is also prohibited in building [illegible] the [illegible] building. Building [illegible] ventilation is not set up to [illegible] the effects of the smoke.

Other non smoking areas include: classrooms, laboratories, hallways, and [illegible] [illegible] offices or work areas, reception areas [illegible] rooms, and any place where meetings are in session.

No one is prohibited from smoking on campus, they are just limited as to where they can smoke.

"There are a lot of people at Harper with health problems, they can not tolerate the smoke.

It's very dangerous for them to walk into a smoke filled [illegible]," said Murray.

"Imagine a woman living in a house with a pack or two-pack [illegible] a day smoker. It's like she smoking several cigarettes herself. The second-hand smoke she's inhaling is [illegible] dangerous," said Murray.

The second hand smokers at Harper College are no different. Some of them are physically [illegible] by the smoke.

Murray concluded the issue by saying, "We need the support of everyone to make the smoking policy work. We are not denying the smoking the right to smoke, they just need to be considerate of the non smoker."

Harper joins health kick

By Michele Ostrowski

Trick or Treat STOP!

Just before the candy holiday begins, the Chicago Heart Association (CHA) Sweet 'N Low and even Harper would like to remind you to eat right not too much sugar, low salt and all the rest.

Fortunately, they're attempting to make the health kick more palatable.

First on the CHA's list is the yogurt option. Since yogurt comes from milk it is a good source of protein and calcium but also fat and cholesterol.

In order to avoid the last two ingredients, select low fat or skim milk varieties. The Heart Association suggests adding vanilla extract and fresh fruit to plain yogurt instead of eating high - sugar flavored kinds of yogurt.

Considering that low fat yogurt has five times less fat than sour cream and 2 times less fat than mayonnaise, the Association suggests substituting yogurt in place of mayonnaise and sour cream in salad dressings and other recipes.

The American Heart Association printed such a dressing recipe in its fourth edition cookbook.

Yogurt Dressing (2 1 cup)

2 teaspoons lemon juice
1 tablespoon oil
1/2 cup plain low fat yogurt
1/8 teaspoon paprika
dash Tabasco
1/2 teaspoon garlic powder

Mix all ingredients together in a blender on medium speed for five seconds.

Per Tablespoon: 8 Calories; 1.5 gm fat; 1 mg cholesterol; 1 mg sodium

If yogurt is not your thing, then you can still get the benefits of calcium in recipes by drinking skim milk while limiting fat consumption.

The Chicago Heart Association sponsored its Metropolitan Chicago's Heart Healthy Cookie Recipe Contest and chose Dolores Tarenskys Oatmeal Cookies as the winning recipe.

Lori Yelton R.D., Chairperson of the Food Fest exclaimed, Health eating doesn't mean you have to give up everything that tastes good.

Oatmeal Cookies (6 dozen)

11 2 cups margarine
1 cup brown sugar
1 cup white sugar
6 egg whites
2 cups rolled oats
11 4 cups flour
1 teaspoon cinnamon
2 teaspoons baking soda
1 cup pecans (if desired to be low fat)

Cream margarine and sugars. Add egg whites. Mix. Add remaining ingredients. Take rounded teaspoons of cookie dough. Roll in sugar. Put on greased cookie sheet and press with floured fork. Bake 375 degree oven for 12 min. Cool.

Optional Icing
1/4 cup skim milk
1/4 cup margarine
1 lb package powdered sugar

Put all ingredients in bowl. Beat with electric beater until smooth and creamy. Frost.

Per Cookie: 90 calories; 4gm fat, 0mg cholesterol; 60 mg sodium; 5 mg saturated fat.

Sweet 'N Low published a brochure outlining "10 Healthy Eating Tips for the Harried College Student." So for those who come very early to class, stay late for class or just need a snack during class - read on.

1) Consume a healthy, substantial breakfast.

2) Choose the following if you must: for your fast food choices: pizza, plain hamburger, roast beef sandwich or a salad.

3) Keep healthful snacks within arms reach to stave off the chocolate beasty.

4) Eat plenty of calcium-rich foods.

5) Don't crash diet, loose only 2/3 lbs per week if you NEED it.

6) Use sweeteners instead of sugar.

7) Choose leafy greens and low calorie dressings at the cafeteria.

8) Keep in mind that Alcohol has no nutritional value.

9) Drink plenty of water.

10) Prepare your own foods and snacks.

In keeping with rule #1, here is a bright and early breakfast idea.

Sunrise Breakfast Shake (two servings)
Alice Norris
Graceland College, Iowa
8oz plain yogurt
1 cup skim milk
1 frozen banana
3 tablespoons powdered nonfat dry milk
1 envelope unflavored gelatin
2 packets Sweet 'N Low
1/4 teaspoon ground cinnamon

Combine all ingredients in a blender. Blend at high speed 1 min or until banana is pureed.

Per serving: 210 calories; 32gm carbohydrate; 16gm protein; 2gm fat; 10 mg cholesterol; 166mg sodium.

Lastly, Harper wants a seat at the table.

"Cholesterol and You will be the topic of the October 27 breakfast sponsored by the Harper College Department of Industry Services. This meal will be served at 7:30 a.m. in the faculty dining room, building A (behind the fireplace).

The complete breakfast will be labeled as to nutritional information and presided over by Donna Gavin, R.D., a member of the Board of Directors of the Heart Association of North Cook County. She will speak to the breakfast-goers following the meal.

In addition, the attenders can take a tour of the Harper College Human Performance Lab for first-hand information on cholesterol monitoring, stress testing, body composition measurement and cardiovascular monitoring.

The fee is $10 payable at the door; call the Northeast Center at 537-5420 to reserve a seat.

The Harbinger needs a graphic logo to represent the paper. The graphic should fit in a 2"x2" square and would be added next to the paper's name on the front page. Five judges will award prizes to the four best drawings based on creativity, representation of the Harbinger, and originality.

Entries will be accepted through Friday, Oct. 28 (one entry per person). Results will appear in the Nov. 3 issue of the Harbinger. Entries should be turned into the Harbinger Office, A367, with artist's name and social security number.

The Harper College logo and the Woodfield Fitness Center logo are examples of what we are looking for.

WOODFIELD

Off Her Rocker with our mom

By Liz Brousseau
Staff Columnist

I don't wish for it to appear that I favor discussing politics because, as we all know, it is just so distasteful for a lady to engage in such conversation, however, I just can't seem to resist it, even though I am probably running the risk of being labeled a radical feminist-based on the way conclusions are drawn these days.

Honestly, I believe that political discussion should be open to anyone, from any age group, regardless of sex, race, religion, or even level of intelligence. The latter is generally accepted by the public. For example they listen to George Bush discuss issues. So, if we are generally open-minded about who we will delegate the powers of office to, then why not extend these powers to children?

After hearing the issues from 13 children between the ages of six and eight, I believe that given the right press coverage, intelligent speech writers and building campaign strategists, we could package these kids and sell them to the public for the office of the president. Why not?

For example this little [illegible] would have [illegible] support from Phyllis Schlafly [illegible] and [illegible] stop the ERA movement. "if i were president of the united states i would be helpful. i would decide who would go and fight in wars. i would pick people who were fifty or sixty years old to go. I would chose only men because women would have to stay home and care for their children."

Here is a very good example of highlights from the Bush campaign. You know the rhetoric, experienced foreign policy, haunted by the homeless, keep these [illegible] in space, create jobs and not raise taxes.

[illegible] would [illegible] i would [illegible] things out with [illegible] and home the poor. i would be nice and understanding. i would give money and taxes to the kennedy space center and i would build 100 big mansions for the poor and order different companies to build these mansions. i would charge three pennies extra for taxes."

For the inaugural address, I believe this little girl has covered just about everything, and adopting this statement as the new oath of office might not be a bad idea. "i would be intelligent. i would have to be good at solving problems and i would have to be honest and fair. i would have to determine how much money i should put in different places and i would have to chose if we should have a war or not. i would have to be trustworthy and talk to other countries' leaders."

[illegible] responsible [illegible] would [illegible] to be [illegible] would make [illegible] the [illegible] and make [illegible] good [illegible] make sure that [illegible] take drugs and try to keep the country running well."

As I was reviewing this next little girl's comment, I wondered if it wasn't a direct Bush quotation. "i would be kind, intelligent, hard-working, trustworthy, and responsible. i would take care of the poor by having a food drive. i would not change the tax laws because i think they are good. i would try not to have wars with other countries by being nice to them and talking problems out."

Here is some Dukakis rhetoric that I am particularly fond of. "i would be good at solving problems and i would be kind to other people. i would get rid of the robbers. i would get the fbi and tell them to catch the robbers. i would try not to have any wars. i would be responsible with money. i would not spend money on things that we didn't need such as too many weapons."

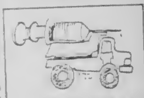

This little girl just might be considered a little too far to the left. "i would [illegible] the [illegible] whenever they wanted to if a war was going on. i would talk with other countries [illegible] i would give money to the [illegible] homes [illegible] the government [illegible] the poor would [illegible] get their food." She is probably a [illegible] member of the ACLU too.

This girl's ideas on foreign policy remind me of George Bush's plan to fight abortion as he hadn't worked it all out yet. "i would be kind. i would be hard-working. i would be good at solving problems. i would be responsible with money. i would take care of the poor by helping them find food. i would stop wars. i would talk to them and i would work it out some how."

This little boy must have been reading some Larouche literature. "i would take 10% of the money the rich people earned. i would take only 3% of the money the poor people earned. all this money would help pay for food for the starving people. half of the tax money would pay for the equipment for the army, navy, marines, and air force needed. the other half of the taxes would pay for the space shuttles.

after 20 minutes they could get up and the laws i would have are no stealing things and no shooting people and no hurting people."

Doesn't this little boy's idea remind you of Quayle? "i would be kind to people because i would help people. i would help people stop taking drugs. i would take away drugs in a truck and then smash them with a hammer." I think it would work.

"i would take away drugs in a truck and then smash them with a hammer."

This little boy takes a very grass roots approach. I think it could work, but he may find himself very tired at the end of four years. "i would be kind to other people. i would need to know right from wrong. i would help people stop using drugs. i would call up some people that i know and ask them if they could find people who use drugs and bring them to the white house for a meeting. Then i would tell them to go to the hospital and get fixed and have a good life."

This little girl is a born politician. notice that she is very specific about where she would be honest. Could it be a Reagan influence? "i would be responsible with money and intelligent. i would be sixty or seventy years old. at the white house i would be honest and fair. i would not allow guns. stores would not make them any more. not people with special permission from me would be allowed to have guns in their homes. i am very intelligent, fair and responsible. i would go to other countries two times a year to help prevent war."

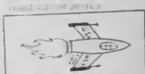

This little girl must have been following the debates too closely. "if there would be too many poor people, then some rich people would have to give them some money and then the poor people would be in the middle. i would ask people if they would help me make the laws. i would have to be fair, honest and trustworthy, and i would have to work hard and be kind.

i would have to be good at solving problems. then if people were arguing, i would tell them to stop and be nice to each other. but if they wouldn't stop arguing, i would tell them to sit down on the floor and not say anything."

This is my most well defined [illegible] of [illegible] anyone's [illegible] year. "i would have to [illegible] [illegible] a helicopter [illegible] two [illegible] the [illegible] airport i would [illegible] planes [illegible] the planes would be a spy plane called the blackbird. it would go very high almost into [illegible] it would land. the [illegible] would have lots of planes [illegible] that did not like the united states of america."

[illegible] of the planes would be a spy plane called the blackbird. it would go very high almost into space."

[illegible]

So, these children are qualified, they are even over qualified. But that is not the reason they should not run for public office. the real reason is there is no room in politics for pure unselfish unmotivated intelligent thoughts. Just remember to vote your concious on Tuesday, November 8.

This article was based on direct quotes from children in first through third grade. The essay question was If I were president of the United States. The classroom teacher asked that the children's names be omitted.

Siegel wows audience

by Richard Nozol
Staff Writer

Corky Siegel lived up to the expectations of the crowd that assembled to see him Saturday night in the building "J" theatre. A diverse crowd nearly filled the theatre, and saw an energetic Siegel play for nearly two hours, unveiling his impressive new sound, Symphonic Blues is an interesting new blend of music that blends both classical and blues. The crowd showed enthusiastic assent this unique new brand of music.

Throughout the show, Siegel effectively blended his folk-inspired vocals, bluesy harmonica and piano sounds with the Consortium Quartet, four of Chicago's premiere classical players. The string quartet of Arnold Roth, Yuzuhiora Rumnevatin, Daniel Stiffer, Felix Wurman, and acoustic percussionist Bruce Carver played with feeling and emotion that showed through in their faces and performances.

For those who didn't attend the show Saturday you missed a great show and an introduction to a new style of music.

FOCUS 88 AND EMPLOYMENT FAIR

Susan Berne
Upcoming Editor

Harper will be the setting for students to learn about colleges and careers at two different events.

First, Focus '88, an evening of college and career information for current Harper students, will be held on Wednesday, October 26, from 5:30 to 9 p.m. in Building A.

Representatives from more than 100 four-year colleges and universities will be on hand to provide materials and information. Harper faculty members will also be available to discuss Harper programs.

Harper's College and Placement Office is also hosting an Employment Fair where representatives from area companies will be on hand for students to learn about a wide variety of career opportunities in the area.

The 1988 Employment Fair will be on Wednesday, November 9, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the Building A Lounge.

Everyone is welcome to attend either of these events and no registration is required. For more information about either Focus '88 or the 1988 Employment Fair call the Harper College Placement Office at 397-3000, Ext. 2720.

Homecoming week for Marlee Matlin

By Robyn Davis
Managing Editor

Although Harper's Homecoming activity week is coming to a close, it is just beginning for one special alumni. Academy Award winning actress Children of a Lesser God, Marlee Matlin will return to her alma mater to be honored as a role model for deaf and hearing impaired students.

Matlin is a former Chicago area resident with William Hurt in Children of a Lesser God, won her Academy Award for her critically acclaimed performance.

Matlin had been acting for nearly fifteen years throughout Chicago and the Midwest in children's theater for the deaf before her role in the film. She was selected as the result of an extensive international search by the films producers.

Not only did Matlin win the honor of playing the role, but in 1986 she won the film community's highest honor - the Academy Award for best actress. At the age of 21 Marlee Matlin became the youngest recipient of an Oscar for best actress, and one of only four actresses to receive the honor for a debut film performance.

Lately, Matlin can be found continuing her film career and working with both hearing and hearing impaired children.

While at Harper, Matlin was the Homecoming Queen runner-up. The Harper College community will welcome her home once again on Thursday, October 27 at 7:30pm, J143. Matlin's lecture will be presented in sign language as well as a verbal interpretation.

Admission for Harper students with an activity card is $2; other students $3; public admission $4. Call 397-3000 x2547 for tickets.

P.Y.L. Concessions for this event will be co-sponsored by Lutheran Brotherhood to benefit paralyzed Harper student Peter Soby.

A jolt of lightning

Sandy Salvatore
Staff Writer

Tridays word: Defense

The Hawks defense held Moraine Valley standout halfback Roy Richardson To 36 yards on 17 carries and gave up only 36 yards passing all-day.

The Marauders (2-4, 2-2) started the scoring when kicker Brian Kelchbrenner put a 12-yard field goal thru the uprights.

Harper (5-1, 5-0) responded with three touchdowns in less than three minutes. The first came when Al Snyder (10 of 16, 119 yards and 3 touchdowns) connected with Bret Velde on the endzone.

The second was when Harper's defensive lineman Joe Belcher intercepted Marauder quarterback Dave Pratt's pass. "I pulled in (Pratt's pass 1 down," said Belcher. "I saw the touchdown marker, and I said to myself, nothing was going to stop me. I got a couple of great blocks from Joe Wall and Paul Claps." After rumbling between Claps and Belcher, he outraced the last defenders to the goal line.

The two point conversion failed.

The final first quarter strike of lightning came on a spectacular 91-yard Haywood kickoff return. This was the type of run that you rewind again and again on game films. It was what highlights are all about.

The Hawk's turned the knife one more time when Snyder hooked up with Jeff Dudan for a 30 yard touchdown.

The final Hawk pass, before the half was set up by a jarring sack from Hawk defensive lineman Kenny Hall which knocked the ball loose. Hawk Bob Caldwell recovered it at Harper's 15. He (Pratt) was scrambling, and I just kept him contained," said Hall.

The fumble recovery allowed Snyder to close the first half of scoring by connecting with Haywood for a 14 yard touchdown and Haywoods second T.D. of the half.

The Hawks first touchdown of the game was the result of a Pratt interception by Harper's Scott Miller. He (Pratt) lofted the ball too high. I was able to get a look out it." Which set up Haywood's last touchdown, a one yard gallop to close out Harper's scoring in the third quarter.

Moraine Valley staged a partial comeback attempt when backup Marauder quarterback Paul Seagroves replaced Pratt. I lost 22 yards 3 interceptions in the fourth quarter."

Seagroves connection with Robert Lee for a 34- yard touchdown turned out to be his only completion of the day. The two point conversion was stopped by Harper's Jeff Topel with 10:40 left in the game.

The Hawks continue crushing pretenders with a Monday showdown with Augustana J.V. in Rock Island at 3:00 pm.

Staff Release

Winning three of their last five games, the women's volleyball team is now 9-11 overall. Bouncing back from a slow start, the entire team seems to be "gelling."

Led by former Hawk of the week Janice Word, and smart floor play of setter captain Sharon Ahern, the entire team is playing quality volleyball.

Coach Ellefson-Huehn attributes teamwork as the key to our recent victories." Kim Noonan, Nicole Hollinsworth, Carla Bender, Ann Thayer, Jennifer Stasch, Linda Haid, Janice Word, Sharon Ahern and Coach Julie Ellefson-Huehn will help this team gain continued success.

Disabled in your awareness?

By Robyn Davis
Managing Editor

Disability Days at Harper! Sounds like a festival doesn't it? Disabilities are nothing to celebrate, but unfortunately they do exist. This Tuesday and Wednesday will be Disability awareness Days at Harper College. No, not a festival, but rather a series of scheduled events designed to enhance our knowledge about disability and disabled people.

Personal interaction between the general public and disabled people is most often minimal. It is a kind of prejudice all its own and prejudice is the product of ignorance.

Harper's Disabled Student Services, through Disability Awareness Days, hope to dispel some of the common misconceptions related to disabilities.

"Full integration into American society and culture remains a goal of disabled people and its attainment is intimately connected with education", feels Tom Thompson, Disabled Student Services Coordinator. Both days will be devoted to just that.

One of the best ways to learn about something is to actually do it or experience it. On the first of the two days, students, faculty, administrators and staff are invited to spend the day in a wheelchair carrying out all of their normal activities.

There will be a luncheon meeting where they will all get together to see how it is going and to discuss the experience.

At the end of the day, all who have participated will submit their comments on the experience. These will include any grievances that they have pertaining to mobility in and around the campus.

Both days will feature a Film Festival which will include films on various disabilities (see activity schedule adjacent to story). On Wednesday they will host three workshops dealing with vision loss and head injury, hearing loss, and learning disabilities.

A brown bag lunch session is also scheduled on Wednesday in the fireplace area of A Building the topic of discussion will be "Independent Living", featuring a speaker from Access Living of Chicago.

For more information on how you too can be involved call 397-3000 x2260 (TTY line 397-7600).

U.S. in Nicaragua: Harper instructor tells story

By Jeff Freehus
News Editor

Ben Burwell, instructor of liberal arts, recently visited Nicaragua as a representative of the United States.

"I went as a part of a delegation for Witness for Peace Members, which is a U.S. organization that is composed of mainly religious workers whose mottoe in going down is to see what the situation is and report on it back here in the U.S.," said Burwell.

After the revolution in Nicaragua, ending July 17, 1979, the dictator, Anastasio Somoza Debayle, left. The guardias remaining in Nicaragua still fought on.

"...the Contra war has been going on since 1980 and the Contras now do not have much effect on the military forces but, they still conduct some small operations in Nicaragua and still pose a threat because they don't attack the Nicaraguan army. They tend to attack teachers, medical workers, and civilians generally," said Burwell.

As Burwell sees it the "terror campaign" is not intended to overthrow the government but, to make it hard for the Nicaraguans (there are about 3 million people) to live and disrupt the economy.

"To make the economy even worse the Nicaraguans are forced to spend about half the national budget for defence," added Burwell.

The Contras have no support from their people.

"A poll shows that still more than half of the people support the Sandinistan party, so it still has a great deal of popular support," said Burwell.

"In Nicaragua, people told me over and over again that, 'We don't want anything from the U.S. Just get out of here. Take your money and go' and I agree. I try to put myself in their place. What would I want if some nation was here supporting an army or police state that was killing its own people?" said Burwell.

The United States is funding the Contras with money and the C.I.A. trains the Contras and participates in the war.

"The U.S. money, U.S. training, U.S. support, and U.S. organization is responsible in my mind for the nations waging war on their own people," said Burwell.

Burwell implies the war is unsuccessfully conducted in military terms, because the money keeps coming in and he thinks the Contra war will end as soon as the money flow stops.

"What Reagan and the C.I.A. wants to do is to put back in power the old dictatorship," said Burwell.

"...this government wants to maintain markets and sources of cheap labor and cheap raw materials for itself and is willing to do it by military means...," added Burwell.

The World Court decision, condemning the funding and training of the Contras, has been ignored by the United States.

"I think it (Contra war) is an unjust and immoral war...," he answered to the question of his position on the war.

Trusting the Trustee

Does SCIQ look familiar to you? If not, look for the plaque on the boxes located at building A in front of the Student Senate Office, building F in front of the Media Center, and building J in front of the Box Office. The letters SCIQ stand for Suggestion, Comment, Idea, and Question.

These boxes act as a link between the Student Trustee and the students. The trustee's greatest responsibility is to represent the students at the monthly board meeting (every fourth Thursday at 8 pm). I need your input. I'm not asking for lengthily letters, just ideas and comments (exactly what the box calls for).

Please remember the SCIQ boxes are not merely suggestion boxes. They are your link to be heard as students. I have the only keys to the boxes.

Don't let me give you all the ideas. Those above are not original. I can not represent students without student input. The students are the first concern of the college.

Laura Jacobson
Student Trustee

Here are some example topics you as a student should think about:

1. How do you feel about a campus observatory?
2. What does Harper need to improve?
3. How did you react to the new artwork in building A?
4. There are six main academic divisions on campus that six senators on the Student Senate represent:
   - -technology, math and physical science
   - -liberal arts
   - -special services
   - -business and social science
   - -physical education, athletics and recreation
   - -life science and human services

   each senator has $300 to spend on their particular division. It can be difficult in deciding what a division may need or how to spend it's $300.

Student Senate Elects Officers

By Douglas Ray
Editor-in-Chief

Pat Ryan, Student Trustee Laura Jacobson's competitor in the trustee election last spring, was appointed Student Senate President at last Friday's senate meeting.

The senate first filled its ranks with Charmaine Mianulli, clubs and organizations representative, then held an election for the three officer positions. Kristen Brogan, business and social science representative, was elected Vice President and Anthony Garcia, recently appointed liberal arts senator, was selected for Senate Treasurer.

Senate Advisor Jeanne Pankanin appointed Susan Berne as the Senate Secretary. Berne will type the meeting agenda, take notes at meetings, and type other documents for the senate.

The senate has many goals including approving next year's student activities budget and selecting a class gift. All students are welcome to attend senate meetings which will be posted in advance on the Student Activities Office door. For more information contact Laura Jacobson at x2244 or Jeanne Pankanin at x2242.

Roach, Morris support United Way

By Michele Ostrowski
Features Editor

Heeeeeere's Johnny!!

Johnny Morris, sportscaster for channel 2, will be speaking at Harper on October 27 at 11:15 before the open house from 11:00-1:00.

Morris will be appearing on behalf of the United Way in J building auditorium room 143. Faculty and students alike are invited to come to the lecture and the film on the Crusade of Mercy.

Harper has been an avid supporter of the United Way's activities beginning with former President McGrath's interest in the organization.

McGrath even became one of the board members of the United Way of Palatine.

Current President Thompson has also decided to endorse the United Way program by sending a letter to the faculty and staff with their pay checks as a reminder that a United Way program is being initiated at the college and that employee support and participation would be appreciated.

The organization itself acts like a middle-man in distributing funds to needy agencies. It is a non-profit organization that campaigns residents and business people for donation and distributes them to beneficial agencies.

The United Way of Palatine donates its collections (90 cents/100 cents) to twenty agencies - The Boy Scouts, Clairbrook Center, Country side, The Harbor and The Salvation Army - among them.

Kathleen Roach, executive director of the United Way

Harper's contact with the United Way of Palatine is Harper '87 alum Kathleen Roach.

Currently a scholarship student at Roosevelt University, Roach graduated from Harper with honors with an Associate of Science degree in 1987.

Other of her accomplishments include: membership in Phi-Theta-Kappa honor society, recipient of the 1987 Friends of Harper Award for Outstanding Student of the Year; publication in Who's Who in American Junior Colleges ('87) and placement on the ('87-'88) National Dean's list.

Roach volunteers on the Illinois Prairie Girl Scout Board of Directors as well as serving as trustee of the Alma College's International Foundation. Moreover, Roach manages Harper's Steel Drum Band.

Roach applied and was chosen Executive Director of the Palatine branch of the United Way and is in charge of campaign efforts, needs assessments, agency relations, budget and allocations and special events.

"We work with the agencies where the most needs are - we find out where the needs really are and put them on a list; money then goes to that agency," explained Roach.

Roach sees the United Way as a real time saver, where investigation of reputable charity organizations is taken care of by the agency rather than the individual.

"Unless they [prospective donors] are in tune, there is no way of telling where the need is," observed Roach.

"Many put it [giving] off and don't give at all so we just make it easier."

Although not as large an organization as the United Way of Elk Grove or Shaumburg, the Palatine branch has a substantial monetary goal.

This year the group hopes to raise $165,000, $14,000 more than last year's collection. The United Way campaign at Harper will kick off October 27.

Last year Roach brought the Girl Scouts display to Harper as part of a United Way orientation display to show the "where" and "how" donated monies were allocated.

Roach admits, "I really feel that association with Harper allowed me to get this job. Harper generously gives money - it's a real strong account."

"Harper even allows United Way to show what [donated] money is doing [by providing an audience and places for displays]."

Exercise
for charity

*Courtesy of Heart Association of North Cook County

Dance for Heart can help you get going with your fall exercise routine. On October 22 you will have the perfect opportunity as The Forest Grove Athletic Club in Palatine.

From 9:00 a.m. 11:00 a.m. Paulette Ruschart and her certified staff will be hosting a Dance for Heart to help raise funds for the American Heart Association.

Participation in the event is fun and easy. All you have to do is call 991-4646.

You will receive more information and registration forms are on hand. Members and non-members are welcome to attend.

Dancers are asked to secure donations from friends and relatives and all money received will support research and community programs of the American Heart Association of Metropolitan Chicago, North Cook County Division.

Besides helping to fight the nations number one killer, heart and blood vessel disease, every participant has the chance to receive T-shirts, mats, sweatshirts, towels and warm ups.

So join in, help out and have fun for a great cause!

Free Physical Exams

Wellness on Wheels (W.O.W.) is coming to Harper College, Building A on Thursday, November 3, 1988 from 9:00 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. to offer free health check-ups.

Wellness on Wheels is an extension of the Adult Health program of the Cook County Department of Public Health which is available to suburban Cook County residents who meet financial requirements.

Wellness on Wheels is furnished with state-of-the-art equipment enabling it to provide the following services:

- physical exams
- health counseling
- tests for anemia
- tests for diabetes
- blood pressure screening
- vision and hearing test
- dental check
- TB test
- cholesterol screening
- immunizations
- urinalysis
- pap smears
- pelvic exams for women
- prostate and testicular exams for men.

This health check-up is designed to meet the needs of people, 18 years and older, who have not had a complete physical exam within the last year or who do not have easy access to medical care.

W.O.W. check-ups can be used for employment physicals. Teenagers who need a physical to enter high school or college are also eligible to use W.O.W. services.

To schedule an appointment, call the Cook County Department of Public Health at 865-6125. Just ask for W.O.W!

United Way

Roach is "Thrilled, quite honored," to be the executive director. "It makes me feel wonderful to contribute and it's impressive that other people are so interested and dedicated."

So many out there need help: working mothers who need day care, senior citizens home from the hospital, handicapped, disadvantaged, unwed mothers - a lot more than meets the eye!"

In addition to Johnny Morris and the October 27 "Kick Off," Harper will host a Student Awareness campaign in early January or February. Roach comments, "Young people are important to us, they're are our future, it's great to get involved!"

For additional information on the campaign please contact director of development, Ray Devery@ ext. 2490, Dean Tom Johnson @ ext. 2221, or Mrs. Roach @ 358-8666.

Get more for your money with your Student Activities Card

Every semester we as students pay a $15 activity fee ($7.50 for students enrolled in less than 12 credit hours). But where does all of this money go? Think about it...$208,500 in student activity fees. WOW! How much of that gets back to the students? Not much; mainly because students don't realize what they get for their activity fee.

It's time to dig out that yellow card you received during registration and redeem its worth: cultural events, free legal advice, free health service (including services from a physician), intercollegiate and intramural sports, student publications (that's us and the point of view), a variety of clubs and organizations, discount movie tickets, discount Chicagoland entertainment tickets, short-term loans, and popular contemporary entertainment programs.

My personal favorite (and I'm sure most of the staff agrees) is the free health service. Every Tuesday night while we are assembling the Harbinger I visit the health service office for a chat with the nurses and a dose of Tylenol for my headache. But that's not all they offer.

The following services are offered free of charge to students: part-time physician services, confidential health counseling, first aid, medications (asprin, throat lozenges, cough medication, Alka-seltzer, cold capsules, etc.), medical parking permits, health education brochures and counseling, a rest area and testing for pregnancy, mononucleosis, tuberculosis, sexually transmitted diseases, Hemoglobin deficiencies and Glucose. (Pretty incredible: and this is only a partial list!)

Other upcoming events your student activities card will get you in to include: Oct. 27 (you may have already missed these!) lecture by former Harper College student and Academy-award-winning actress Marlee Matlin ("Children of a Lesser God") - tickets cost $2 ($3 without that yellow card) and The Chicago Saxophone Quartet - free admission.

Oct. 28 the infamous movie "Phantom of the Opera" with piano accompaniment by Hal Pearl will be shown - only $2 with activities card. Nov. 4 heavy metal band Femme Fatale will play and you can see them for a minimal donation of $7. Nov. 10 Fan Wei-Tsu "The Art of the Chinese Zheng" (whatever that is) - also free admission and finally Nov. 11, 12, 18 and 19 "The Servant of Two Masters" by Carlo Goldoni directed by Mary Jo Willis, director of theater - while tickets last only $3 with student activities card.

If you don't use your student activities card just turn it in to the Harbinger office and we'll find someone who needs it.

Thanks,
Douglas Ray

Indiana Senator Dan Quayle, Republican vice-presidential candidate

Off Her Rocker with our mom

By Liz Brouseau
Staff Columnist

In the October six issue of the Harbinger, Robyn Davis addressed the issue of voter apathy and political ignorance in the form of the question "Who is Quayle?"

In the next addition of the paper on October 13 we had Ronald Lovatt of the COLLEGE REPUBLICANS, answering the question by using the same "Here's why we're so good, great/Dukakis is soo bad" tactics that seem to have become the trademark of the Republican campaign.

So, Robyn and Ronald, I would also like to address the question of "Who is Quayle?" Although, I believe that the question is best answered by first considering "What is Quayle". So I began with the most easily accessible and reliable source, The American Heritage Dictionary. Under quail, you will find two definitions:

quail[1] (kwāl) n. pl. quail or quails Any of various small, short-tailed chickenlike game birds. [<Med.Lat. quaccula.]

quail[2] (kwāl) v. To shrink back in fear, cower. [ME quailen, to lose vah.]

In applying this to our Republican vice-presidential candidate, it could be construed that the man has short coat tails. In other words, another politician would never try winning an election by tagging onto Quayle's coat tails because his, as it says in the dictionary, are short- maybe too short.

As for the terminology, "chicken-like game birds", and "shrink back in fear", one should consider the candidate, and where the candidate has been permitted to campaign.

His agenda has been limited to small towns only, such as Gaylord, Michigan and Paris, Illinois. These are small towns which lack the kind of press that is substantially powerful enough to cause the Republicans any real damage.

Perhaps Bush's strategy, realizing his own limitations, was not to throw away the election by selecting Quayle, but to provide so much pity from fellow Republicans, that they would actually vote for the man.

So far, coupled with a campaign based on lies, innuendo, and half-truths about its opponent, this strategy seems to be working. This makes a very disturbing point about our electorate. That is, people believe what they hear, rather than digging deeper into the real issue, which is "Who is the best qualified?"

This brings me back to the question "Who is Quayle?" I suggest we consult the dictionary again. Just four entries under quail, we come to the word qualification, ...or should I say "quayle"ification?

qualification (kwol'e-fi-kā'shen) n. 1. The act of qualifying or condition of being qualified. 2. A quality or ability that suits a person for a particular position or task. 3. A restriction or limitation.

Like Ronald Lovatt, I too would like to suggest that Quayle is qualified. The following three reasons are based on what he has done for his running-mate's opponents campaign. 1. The condition of being qualified: to arouse anxiety for most Americans, even Republicans. 2. His ability suits him for the particular task: fall guy. 3. His restriction or limitation: the White House.

Bush has been doing slightly better in the polls than his opponent, even though it has had little to do with his being qualified to run the country, and a great deal to do with his being qualified to run a fluffy campaign, lacking substance, and based on scare-tactics-few of which have had any truth to them.

What we need is for Dukakis to stop being such a gentleman, to get out there and 'give 'em Hell' (my apologies to Lloyd Bentsen from whom I got that idea), and hope that in the next ten days, Bush will become appropriately 'quayl'ified.

Democrats, in an effort to maintain a positive momentum, let us not forget the immortal words from a certain November 1948 issue of the Chicago Tribune: "Dewey Wins".

NEW NOISE

New releases from "That Petrol Emotion" and "Kansas"

Mixed music, mixed reviews

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

That Petrol Emotion, the Irish band that last year captured the Rolling Stone award for Best New Artist, has often been compared to U2 for several reasons. The most obvious is that they are both Irish.

The second comparison point is made on the political front. Both bands have outspoken views about world situations. These views are made stronger by the situation in their home of Ireland. Finally, both bands have incredible talent.

The only difference is that U2 has a massive fan contingent. That Petrol Emotion wallows in the face of near non-recognition.

Truth be told, (and shocking though it may be to many rock & roll fans), That Petrol Emotion is actually a better band than the consistently-praised (and still quite excellent) U2.

We now have a new album from That Petrol Emotion, called 'End of the Millennium Psychosis Blues'. It is their fourth release and, although it's hard to choose a favorite, this one is a strong contender.

The band, which is made up of Irishmen except for American singer Steve Mack, actually mixes down their raw and energetic sound on this album.

The twelve tracks run the line from the pleasant, slow, accordion-tinged sounds of the first single, 'Cellophane' to the frantic, disorganized 'Candy Love Satellite and Gogglebox', with the lanky 'Here It Is, Take It' forming the middle ground.

The album opens and closes with two powerful song bookends.

The production by Rob Missman is superb, letting the pleasant voice of lead singer Mack mingle with the drums of Ciaran McLaughlin, the guitars of Reamann O'Gormain and Sean O'Neill, and the bass of Damian O'Neill.

The liner notes explain the bands views on the situation in Northern Ireland. They are written in a way that doesn't force their side of the arguments on the reader, but instead makes him understand a little better.

Some might argue that politics should stay out of music, but it makes the music better, that's great. If you don't want to read those liner notes, you don't have to.

'End of the Millennium Psychosis Blues' is a very strong album from a very strong band.

If they continue to make albums as good as this one, they may just end up as popular as U2 someday. They certainly deserve it.

Rating out of 5: 4.1/2

Kansas. . .

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

A chill floats through the music, singing 'rainmaker, rainmaker, save this one-horse town' while the rainmaker in question is singing about how he unwittingly brought down doom and destruction upon the people.

This is in 'Rainmaker', the most powerful track on the new Kansas album, 'In the Spirit of Things'.

The emphasis is on the word 'Spirit' for many of the songs here. The opening song is called 'Ghosts' and, with its melodic vocals and subdued music, is the second best track here.

The best track is the aforementioned 'Rainmaker', which tells its story with the help of amazingly evocative music. music that conjures up mental images of apocalypse raining down on a quiet little Kansas town. This is brought on by the performance of a con man who changes tides as often as the wind changes directions.

Now for the down side of things. The rest of the songs on the album are rather mediocre. Chilly 'The Preacher' and 'Bells of Saint James' are approaching the amount of sparks generated by 'Rainmaker'.

The first single, 'Stand Beside Me', is an ultimately forgettable power-pop ballad that will probably plunge the album into quick anonymity.

There are other songs such as 'House of Fire' which are so cliched that you almost become embarrassed to have them on the same album that started out so strongly.

Throughout the record, the band plays solidly, and with a lineup that features guitar virtuoso Steve Morse, you can't go wrong. A portion of the songs were co-written by Morse and lead singer Steve Walsh, and some others also have contributions from the album's producer, Bob Ezrin.

You keep wanting this album to be better than it is, especially after hearing 'Rainmaker'. Although the band members play flawlessly, there is something missing that cannot be pinpointed. Maybe next time, guys.

Do you really choose what you listen to?

The following is an editorial piece that is currently being aired on WHCM regarding censorship. Speaking as someone who is directly involved in the media, I am outraged as well as concerned. Speaking as a music, book, movie and magazine lover: I am even more outraged. Take it away Mr. Morton! --Robyn L. Davis, Managing Editor

This year has instigated a disturbing trend in the music industry. Several months back a major controversy centered on Neil Young's video 'This Note's For You'.

The video featured many mockery ads of companies who are advertisers on MTV. Consequently, MTV refused to play the video evidently fearing that the advertisers would pull their spots.

If MTV hadn't already lost the respect of fans who once regarded it as a daring, innovative form of media, they surely disappointed viewers with their newfound lack of adventurous instinct.

Far more upsetting than this acute case of pressure is what Elektra Records asked radio stations across the country to do at the beginning of this month.

Tracy Chapman is a recording artist on the Elektra label. She has played to sell-out crowds across the world. She toured with, coincidently, Neil Young and the Bluenotes.

She was part of the Human Rights Now! tour which supported Amnesty International, an organization that works to free prisoners of political oppression and torture. The tour featured Sting, Bruce Springsteen and Peter Gabriel along with Tracy Chapman.

Rolling Stone magazine featured her on the cover a few months back calling her "The best new artist of the year." Spin magazine says, She helps spark a new era of rock activism ... and calls her "a socially conscious folkie bringing the rock nation together."

Her album was in the Billboard Top Five and her last single 'Fast Car' was in the top forty for 22 straight weeks. Why then you may ask yourself, are you not hearing her second single 'Talkin' Bout a Revolution' on some radio stations anymore.

Because her record company has asked radio stations to stop playing it, it can't because of 'negative reactions' to the power to one again [illegible] that. Don't take what's theirs. This is an all too typical case of mass suppression and close-minded censorship.

Who is to say what these lyrics mean? Are they encouragement for the poor and unemployed (which is how I see it), or is it a means to abort a revolt? Just a matter of interpretation. Who's to say what this, meaning is.

Censure is defined in the Webster's Dictionary as "To condemn as wrong." Who is to say what music is right or wrong.

Because some people don't agree with what the lyrics in a song say doesn't mean everyone should agree. For some people to make this decision of interpretation for others is wrong.

WHCM will give 'Talkin' Bout a Revolution' the same treatment any other song would receive. As long as our DJ's want to play it, and our listeners want to hear it they will.

I can only hope that every other radio station would do the same, not only for Tracy Chapman, but for the next artist whose song, video or album doesn't conform to the accepted generalizations laid down by a small group of self-appointed censors.

"Without A Clue" Entertains

and without further ado I declare this case closed !

By Scott Neidt
Entertainment Editor

The apartment at 221 B Baker Street is once again a frenzy when Sherlock Holmes takes on his latest case in Without A Clue. The exception is that this is not the Sherlock Holmes that has been popularized by the books of Sir Arthur Conan-Doyle.

Without A Clue portrays Sherlock Holmes (Michael Caine) as a factional character created by the mind of Doctor Watson (Ben Kingsley). He did so to retain his credibility as a doctor and stuff expose the evil that lurks in the streets of London. (Sounds similar to Remington Steele, huh.)

Watson And Holmes have tremendous differences about how things are run at the Baker Street apartment.

Holmes is positive that Watson can not carry on without him to play the brilliant detective. Watson, on the other hand, wants to establish himself as Doctor John Watson the Crime Doctor, and feels that Holmes is taking much too many liberties toward the press.

The case that Holmes and Watson pursue during the film involves everything from counterfeiting and murder to transvestites and theatre. None other than the infamous Moriarty heads up the opposition and the game is afoot.

Michael Caine plays Sherlock like no one has ever seen before, an actor hired to play the role of Holmes.

The only problem with this arrangement is that Holmes is a complete buffoon. He is a womanizer, a drunk, and an idiot. This character does not fit the role of the Holmes that people have known throughout the ages.

Caine's overall performance is one that should be applauded. The new Holmes is brought completely to life with an amusing twist to history's most brilliant detective.

Kingsley, likewise, does a fantastic job as (Holmes' assistant?) Watson. The good doctor is not only a resourceful criminologist, but the director for this new Holmes charade.

Kingsley's ability to communicate the knowledge and frustration involved in working with the less than perfect Holmes, is not only very convincing, but also very enjoyable.

My over all feelings to the film are nothing but positive. With a fun screenplay, some very talented actors, and a famous cast of characters, how could this movie go wrong? From start to finish this film is two hours of pleasing cinema.

Heavy Metal Hits Harper

By Tarl Vaughn
Staff Writer

Headbangers, your time has come. Harper College will be sponsoring its first heavy metal concert in the school's history. MCA recording artists "Femme Fatale" will be headlining in Building M on Friday, November 4 at 8 pm.

The group's big hit last summer, "Waiting for the Big One", is from their first album, titled "Femme Fatale." The band, now based in Los Angeles, is "between songs right now," according to Abbe Frank, of MCA Records.

Originally from Albuquerque, New Mexico, "Femme Fatale" consists of lead singer Lorraine Lewis; Bill D'Angelo, lead guitar, Bobby Murray, drums; Marzi Rawd, guitarist and keysman; and Rich Rael on bass. The group's songs are written by Rawd and Lewis.

Opening for "Femme Fatale" will be a local group called "Amethyst". In a recent competition with over 5,000 bands, the group placed among the top 100 nationwide. They have also played with national recording artists such as "Helix", "Brighton Rock", and "The Romantics."

George Paris of Amethyst describes his band as somewhere between heavy metal and hard rock like Bon Jovi, or Whitesnake.

Tickets for the November 4 concert cost $7 and are available at the Harper College Box Office. Call 397-3000 ext. 2547 for tickets and more information.

The Phantom arrives for Halloween

By Robert Beiers
Staff Writer

The Lon Chaney classic, "The Phantom of the Opera," will be coming to Harper this weekend. The 1925 film will appear complete and uncut, with the famous bal masque scene in technicolor.

The movie would be lost without the live piano accompaniment of Hal Pearl, who has blessed many movies with his musical talents.

Pearl will be performing his live accompaniment along with the film. The musical score will be a combination of the original music along with the music from the new theatrical production by Andrew Lloyd Weber. His music will take you scene by scene through this horrid love story.

The phantom, after a tragic accident that leaves him mutilated, retreats underground to isolate himself from the world. He has nothing but his music, until he discovers the love of a young potential opera singer.

See all this on Friday, October 28 at 8 pm in room J141. The admission is $2 for Harper students and $3 for the general public. For more information, call the Harper Box Office at 397-3000 ext.2547.

TICKETS ARE ON SALE FOR THE FALL PLAY

By Susan Berne
Upcoming Editor

Tickets are now on sale for Harper's fall play, "The Servant of Two Masters," but they will sell out soon, so buy them now.

Performances will be November 11, 12, 18 & 19 at 8 pm and November 13 at 2:30 pm in J 143. The ticket price for Harper students, faculty and full-time staff is $3 with a two-ticket limit. The public price is $5. Students, faculty and staff must bring their I.D. cards to the box office when tickets are purchased.

A dinner/theatre package is also available for the November 19 performance. The additional cost is $12 (a total of $15 for students, faculty and staff, $17 for the public).

An Italian buffet will be served beginning at 6 pm in the Cafeteria, Building A, followed by the play at 8 pm.

Carlo Goldoni's "The Servant of Two Masters" is an 18th century Italian farce that tells the story of two frustrated pairs of lovers who cannot work out their own affairs. It is up to the rascally servant, Truffaldino, to happily resolve their difficulties. This classic comedy is filled with action, intrigue, disguise and humor.

The box office is open Monday through Thursday from 10 am to 7 pm and Friday from 10 am to 4:30 pm. Tickets may be purchased by cash, check, or Visa/MasterCard, and all sales are final.

If you need addition information or have any questions regarding the "The Servant of Two Masters," call 397-3000, ext. 2547.

Hawk tennis kicks ace

By Byron Blanchard
Sports Editor

Six weeks ago when I talked to Cheryl Piszczek and the rest of the Harper women's tennis team. They exuded the confidence of a team that was on it's way to the top.

After losing their first match against St. Francis I must admit I was skeptical of there seemingly over abundance of confidence. But boy was I wrong to doubt them! Not only did they bounce back to destroy Rock Valley and Triton by a combined score of 18-0 but they went on to win their next eleven out of twelve matches, only losing to eventual conference champion Illinois Valley.

The big story was Cheryl Piszczek. Cheryl smoked thru the regular season losing only one match, that to Tracey Payne of Illinois Valley a constant stumbling block for Piszczek. Payne the two-time conference champion has owned Piszczek for two years beating her in every meeting. But Payne could not keep Piszczek from being named MVP of the NC4 conference tournament. Piszczek won the award because of her sportsmanship, good spirit and oh yes her dominating tennis.

Now I may remove my foot from my skeptical mouth.

Pom Pon's no party

By Sandy Salvatore
Staff Writer

There I was on a Tuesday night six hours before deadline with nothing to write about. Until Byron Blanchard(sports editor) said "I wonder what it would be like if I was on the Pom Pon squad?"

BINGO! I found the topic for my small but sweet article.

So, what is it like being on the Pom Pon squad? "It's hard," said captain Donna Bolt. "There has to be alot of group participation."

The women started off this year by going to The University of Tennessee, at Knoxville where they learned new moves and worked hard.

They go through their routines Tuesdays and Thursdays, and work their class schedules around practice.

After watching the women go through a workout one could see that they put in a lot of effort and commitment into being a Pom Pon.

Upgrade at Wrigley Field

Associated Press

Chicago- The Chicago cubs announced plans today for major improvements to Wrigley Field, including adding private mezzanine boxes.

The Cubs say the $14 million project includes the 66 private boxes, construction of a new enlarged press box in the upper deck and addition of upper deck concession stands. Plans also call for some additional seating.

Commenting on the project, Cubs Vice President of Business Operations Don Grenesio says the club is delighted to be able to provide additional amenities for the fans while also improving the appearance of the ballpark.

He adds that as with the lights project, the new facilities will preserve what he calls the "existing Wrigley Field ambiance."

Grenesio says the changes will modernize the park, extend it's useful life and increase the overall capacity by around 600 seats.

Hollinsworth's heroics not enough

The Lady Hawks Volleyball team will travel to Dixon, Illinois this weekend for their last matches of regular season play. This tri meet against Sauk Valley and Waubonsee will be their final cram in preparation of the N4C conference tournament at the College of Du Page, Glen Ellyn.

Harper (4-13) is coming off two losses against Illinois Valley and Elmhurst College Junior Varsity.

Nicole Hollinsworth was the Hawk's primary force behind the defense and offense against Elmhurst. Hollinsworth had seven defensive blocks and contributed with two kills and nine successful attacks.

College Republicans Club sponsors visit by Gainer

By Douglas Ray
Editor-in-Chief

Republican candidate for Cook County State's Attorney, Terry Gainer campaigned in Harper's A building lounge last Wednesday in a fight to become known.

Gainer, according to a Tribune poll in June, was known by only one third of the voters while Democrat Daley, running for his third term as State's Attorney, has total name recognition.

The Gainer question/answer period, sponsored by the Harper College Republicans Club, was basically a comparison contrast of Daley and Gainer.

Fifty percent of the narcotics cases under Daley's administration are dropped before they make it to court, and 89 percent of all criminal cases that make it to court are plea bargained, according to Gainer. His Goal is to make the streets safer to walk on.

In a pamphlet distributed after the question/answer session, there are three key points. "Terry Gainer...not just a name", "...an experienced attorney" and "...a record of public service".

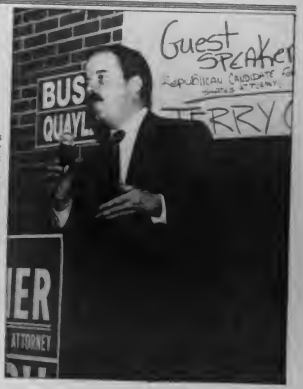

Gainer's campaign on radio and television, although it was not a central issue here at Harper, is based on the accusation that Daley is only a name. People will vote for him because his father was a Chicago Mayor for 21 years.

He has earned his Master's Degree in Public Administration and Doctor of Law Degree from De Paul University. He has experience in courtroom procedure. Additionally in the past he was chair-person of Chicago Bar Association Young Lawyers Police-Lawyer Relations Committee and Special Projects Director of Chicago Bar Association Young Lawyers Section.

Finally, Gainer is involved in the community as: a police officer, attorney, administrator, husband, father of six children, and Vietnam Veteran continuing his service in the United States Naval Reserves at Great Lakes.

Gainer believes strongly in capitol punishment and looking into building new jails. "I happen to favor the death penalty," said Gainer. "We should be talking about building more jails," he added.

While Gainer is most anxious to debate Run Away Richie, Daley continues to avoid a face to face confrontation. Gainer wants to know "while he is running for mayor, who is going to do his job (as state's attorney). This is a full time job!"

Chair lift will help handicapped 'take a swim'

By Peter Soby
Staff Writer

Here's the scenario: A guy in a wheelchair is hanging out in A-lounge trying to pick up chicks. "Hey baby, what's your sign?" The chick looks him up and down, eyes his gold medallion that matches the framework of his wheelchair, and rebukes, "Go for a swim, buddy!".

For an average woman-seeker, this is not a heavy rejection. For a woman-seeker in a wheelchair though, this comes as a blow because it is so hard for a handicapped to get into Harper's pool.

All that has changed thanks to Ken Carroll, Trudy Herbst, and the Phi Theta Kappa chapter.

Carroll, a quadriplegic, himself and an '87 graduate of Harper, headed a drive to get the funding for the pool lift. Phi Theta Kappa provided lap counters, swimmers, and money pledges and collectors at the swim-a-thon which raised the money. The Educational Foundation matched the funds raised at the swim-a-thon to meet the cost of the lift. The cost? $2500, so raising that money was no small task.

The lift, made by Techtronics is safer and quicker than the old way.

Formerly, a pool operator, with the aid of a lifeguard, would have to lift a person from their wheelchair into the pool. The new lift is worth all its money, because now a handicapped person can get into the pool with minimal assistance. The lift is being shipped the week of Nov. 14.

That woman-seeker in a wheelchair can take a rejection like "go take a swim" in stride, because now he can simply do so.

Femme Fatale and Amethyst was canceled due to poor sales, only 32 tickets were sold at the Box Office.

Trustees "bone up"

By Michele Ostrowski
Features Editor

"The greatest advantage is getting to know the trustees from all over the U.S. and picking the brains of those with new concepts," expressed Barbara Barton, Vice Chairman of the Harper College Board of Trustees.

Trustee Barton of Palatine, Trustee John Coste of Shaumburg and President Paul Thompson recently attended an annual convention of the National Organization Association of Community College Trustees (A.C.C.T.).

The convention, on October 5-8, was held in Louisville, Kentucky and drew participants from all over the United States.

Barton first became interested in the community college movement when she sent her children to two-year schools both in California and Illinois.

When she retired from sales management in Avon, extra time started building up.

Since she was a strong advocate of two-year institutes she decided to "pay back some of the good such schools brought [her] children" by applying for and winning a trustee's seat three years ago.

Trustees are elected for six year terms in November general elections - not presidential election years, but off season elections.

Barton presently attends Trustee's meetings every two weeks, a board meeting once a month as well as supplementary committee meetings.

Moreover Barton attends social functions in order to represent Harper and spread the word of Harper's programs.

In regard to trustee function members set the policy for the school while administrators carry the decisions out; for example, administrators brought background information for the board to decide upon campus construction measures.

"Sometimes a person who gets too involved in his/her own college doesn't get the big picture. You get tunnel vision in just Harper."

Barton stresses, the experience is for "Trustee development. [All the attenders have] common concerns which are addressed."

Barton, also representative to the Illinois community College Trustees Association (I.C.C.T.A.), serves on the Federal and State Relations Committees.

With such a background she decided to accept the boards invitation to attend the A.C.C.T. convention.

Although trustees do not collect salaries, expenses pertaining to Trustee obligations are covered by the college's general fund.

While in Louisville, Barton attended presentations and speakers on public relations, minority affairs -"how to" sessions on attracting students and staff, as well as a 20-table mini subject selection on board relationships, town meetings and community awareness.

Other available academies featured state legislation, community college foundations and alumni associations, trustee orientation, organizational skills and course accreditation.

Special sessions included discussion on alcohol and drug prevention programs, leadership styles and critical interviewing.

Topics in various workshops included: the community college's role in training for business and industry; institutional values projects; recruitment retention; financing innovative instructional development.

Still others concerned the community college role in technology transfer, building the board team; developing policies for explosive issues, models for budget planning and adjustment to new administrations.

Barton observes that participation in such conferences brings about a broader view in the trustee - a concern for his/her own college based upon a diverse background.

"Sometimes a person who gets too involved in his/her own college doesn't get the big picture. You get tunnel vision in just Harper."

Barton stresses, the experience is for "Trustee development. [All the attendees have] common concerns which are addressed."

Barton also feels that the experience gained through the convention will help her navigate the up-coming state funding debate and legislative seminar.

This seminar will be held in February in Washington D.C. It will be a forum in which the community colleges of Illinois will voice their concerns (pros and cons) on national legislation.

In sum "We're asking for support. They need to know where we're coming from and why so that they can support us in the legislation process," explained Barton.

One of the issues in debate is the four year nursing degree instead of the two year program now offered by Harper.

Barton said "We support the two year. This way the nurses will get more training instead of the additional general education requirements."

This is an example of some of the issues settled by the board every month. They concern you so why don't you join the board in its public meetings the second Wednesday of each month.

Contact Student Trustee Laura Jacobson at X2244 or leave a message of your concerns at X2242.

Stagecraft presents!

By James Lambaton
Staff Writer

Looking to pick up a couple of humanities credits? Interested in theater? If the answer is "yes" then Art 270, Stagecraft, may be for you.

Stagecraft is not your ordinary class. It offers "hands-on" participation in all aspects of theater production.

The class covers anything from the building of platforms, stairs, doorways and other props to instruction in the art of purchasing theatrical materials such as canvas, lighting, make-up and costumes.

Art 270 is the quintessential "applied class."

According to Associate Professor Mike Brown, who designs the sets for Harper plays, "It teaches all the skills and know-how necessary to put on a play."

"Furthermore, If a student wants to he/she can do additional work on the Harper play which is put on each semester."

This semester's production is The Servant of Two Masters by Guldoni.

Stagecraft is a three hour credit class which is open to any and all students and community members - there are no prerequisites for the class.

"Art 270 is an excellent class for many people. It is NOT only for theater majors or actors/actresses," assures Brown.

"It is excellent for those who may be interested in display work, window dressing, or interior design."

"It also is good for the home-owner or homemaker because we teach them how to use all the power tools and saws," commented Professor Brown.

"The mini wood-shop aspect is like an added bonus."

Beyond all the many benefits that students and community members can derive from Art 270, there is one reason in particular why Professor Brown really recommends this class.

"One of the nicest aspects of the class is the strong camaraderie that develops between the students. People work together as groups rather than individuals."

"During the course of a semester, students switch groups several times so that by the conclusion of the class everyone knows everyone else," comments Brown.

Just to be fair though however enjoyable Art 270 sounds it, like other classes, still requires a book and does have assigned homework.

For those who are looking for an interesting and different type of class, however, Art 270 may be just the thing!

For more information about the class, call the Art Department at 397-3000 X2568 or stop by building C Room 219.

NATIONAL DIABETES DETECTION WEEK November 13-19, 1988

What is Diabetes?

Diabetes is a disease in which the body does not produce or properly use insulin, a hormone that is needed to convert sugar, starches, and other food into the energy needed for daily life.

It often leads to serious complications such as heart disease, kidney disease, blindness and nerve damage.

More than 11 million people in the United States have diabetes, however more than half of them don't even know that they have diabetes.

Are you a potential Diabetic?

Anyone may become a diabetic but there are some factors which increase risk of developing diabetes.

They are: blood relative of a diabetic, over 40, overweight, or a mother of a baby who weighed over nine pounds at birth.

What are the symptoms of Diabetes?

Any one of these symptoms can signal diabetes: frequent urination, abnormal thirst; rapid weight loss/gain; extreme hunger; drowsiness; general weakness; visual disturbances; skin infections/slow healing.

If you are aware of any of these symptoms, or fit into any of the high risk categories, visit the Health Service, A362, for free diabetes screening during National Diabetes Detection Week, November 13-19 or anytime symptoms become evident.

What is your biggest complaint regarding accessibility to the campus in a wheelchair?

Kathy Ferreira
Secretary to the President
Just to get into my desk. Worse than the physical was the emotional. It was very depressing. As the day progressed it got worse.

Douglas Ray
Editor
Everywhere else in Illinois it's flat except on the sidewalk ramps at Harper. Getting to the top of them is tiring and going to the bottom is dangerous. Also the elevator doors close automatically after a short delay often crushing whatever is in the way. They should remain open until a floor is selected from inside the elevator

Tom Thompson
Disabled Student Services Coordinator
For me, the hardest thing was that it was very tiring. Small inconveniences. I got trapped. First Floor of "F". Propelling myself through the door with my arms.

Trudy Herbst
Student
Physically the elevator buttons and paper towel holders are too high. Doors are very heavy, impossible to open without help. It takes twice as long to get to classes because it's necessary to take a circuitous route--not every doorway has a ramp or is near an elevator. The confinement was depressing.

We are only "semi-aware" here at Harper

"What happened to you?" Countless times I was asked this question last Tuesday as I struggled to make it to classes in my wheelchair. My butt felt rather numb but, other than that, I was fine.

I was in a wheelchair by choice. A glutton for punishment? Maybe. More than that I was curious. I have often commented on the fact that mobility around Harper campus sucks and I couldn't imagine attempting it in a wheelchair. Now I can.

Tom Thompson, Disabled Student Services Coordinator, came to my office to inform me that they were conducting "Disability Awareness Days" on campus. He also mentioned that students and faculty would be invited to experience a mobility impairment for a day by spending the entire day in a wheelchair. I accepted that invitation.

When I came into the office in the morning and got into my chair there was a sense of novelty to the whole thing. Doug Ray, the Editor-in-Chief, also participated. After the wheelchair race down the hall and the perfection of the wheelies was over it was time to head to Building E. Little did I know I was really on my way to the reality of what I had undertaken in the name of education and curiosity.

My secretary, Trudy Herbst, also spent the day in a wheelchair. It was like grid-lock in our office. She summed it up best when she equated the situation to being like a circus animal in a cage. She explained that, like a circus animal, you have some freedom and the full use of your body but you can't really go where you want to. There are bars in the way. When you go somewhere you attract attention, people notice and look.

My first class was Biology lecture. A friend of mine and I rolled to class together. Unfortunately he couldn't get out of his wheelchair at 8pm. You know, I thought maybe he could show me the ropes. Come to think of it swinging across campus on ropes or vines may have been easier than getting around Harper in a wheelchair.

We parted as he went off to "F" and I went to building E. The long, downhill ramp along the side of "C" looked easy. I thought "great, I'll get there faster".

After I untangled myself from the cast-iron guardrail that lines the side of the ramp, I found that gravity is not always a good thing. More humiliated than hurt I continued down the ramp, this time grasping tightly to my wheels and making sure both were held with the same amount of pressure so as not make a sharp right and make yet another unplanned meeting with Mr. Guardrail. I've never wanted to be in class hearing about DNA replication so bad in my entire life.

Aside from the valuable information that I learned about genetics that morning, I also learned something else in lecture. There is nowhere to sit. I positioned myself at the end of one of the rows (couldn't get behind the tables because the seats are attached) and went on with my note-taking.

"Plan ahead" takes on a whole new meaning from the seat of a wheelchair. I even bought soda two cans at a time so that I wouldn't have to go two buildings out of my way to get to the pop machine that was directly below me. Lukewarm diet Pepsi, mmmmmm!

You are forced to plan out the easiest ways to get somewhere, what to take with you, and will there be anyone there to open that monstrous door? The point is, there shouldn't have to be someone there. Our school is something like top-ten in the nation for junior colleges? We come here to learn. Final exams are bad enough but to deal with the lack of facilities and cooperation too? It is now easy for me to see how a handicapped student would not even want to bother trying. Too much hassle.

Harper was to install eight to ten automatic doors at key entrance ways to the campus this year. So much for that. Because of "the cost", the new game plan now includes "semi-automatic" doors. Sound impressive don't they? The doors are "semi" automatic because they do not automatically open when you come up to them. Instead, there will be a button to push that will release all the air-pressure so that all you (the handicapped student) are dealing with is the dead-weight of the door. I bet that comes as happy news to those who have little or no upper-body strength.

The only purpose these doors will serve is as a "shut-up" mechanism for administration to use when confronted with requests for help from the handicapped community.

Funny, somehow we scraped up $15,000 to have some new TV monitors installed all around campus to tell us that Marlee Matlin is coming to lecture. Here's an idea: READ THE PAPER. Somehow I get the feeling that we is the TV generation have our priorities a little screwed up here.

How about the $805,615 we approved for the installation of a new computerized heating system? Couldn't we take a little of that and get some doors? We could have put it off for a year. I'm kind of getting used to experiencing all four seasons in a day between the classrooms. Maybe we could save some money by employing students from our heating/air-conditioning programs to work on it instead of outside contractors?

Shall I continue? I think so. How about the $315,000 in increased revenues that we will take in from next year's planned tuition increase? Do I sound like Andy Rooney?

You think I'm pissed now? Just put me in a wheelchair on campus in January.

At least now when we slam the door in the face of handicapped consciousness we can push a button and only have to deal with the dead-weight of it.

Just can't get enough Bush in '88

Dear Editor,

With the election only a few days away I would like to try to educate the voters a little more on the issues. First of all, we need to talk about the issues or the questions of "are we better off now than we eight years ago under the Carter/Mondale Team?" Let me point out a few facts. Under the leadership of President Reagan and Vice President Bush the inflation rate dropped from an all time high of 13.3% to 4.8%. Also, the income tax burden for a family of four with a median income was 10.4% under Carter/Mondale and is now 8.8% under Reagan/Bush. America is better off today and we need to continue building America by voting for George Bush for President.

Now let me give you a few reasons why you should not vote for Michael Dukakis. First of all, The Duke is in favor of cutting our missile Defense Defense Program and putting our reliability on conventional forces to protect America against other countries that have nuclear weapons. He is also in favor of outlawing the sale and possession of fire arms.

The Duke vetoed a bill that would mandate life sentences for drug pushers and is opposed to the death penalty (even in cases of drug pushers who kill cops). Now, I ask you, when members of the Democratic Party don't agree with the philosophies of The Duke, how can they back him for President?

Well, once again I hope I have educated you about some of the issues in this campaign. This letter is not intended to sway your vote, only to educate you. I hope you vote on November 8th because every vote counts this year.

New Releases From:

Ministry, Pet Shop Boys and Alphaville

(graphics by Chris Jones)

by Ian Lamb
Staff Writer

The last time I was babbling in this column I listened to (and commented on) a number of recently released singles. Today I have decided to babble on about a few recently released albums.

Ministry
The Land of Rape and Honey
Recording: Raw
Performance: Even Rawer

This album is less like 1986's 'Twitch', and more like the recent Revolting Cocks double live LP, 'You Goddamned Son Of A Bitch.' This is probably due to the fact that 'The Land of Rape and Honey' was produced by Hypo Luxa and Hermes Pan, who also produced the Cocks' magnum opus.

So why couldn't Alain Jourgensen (lead singer) save this industrial grunge-noise for the next Revolting Cocks album? Go and buy 'The Land of Rape and Honey' if you just can't get enough of that Wax Trax-style sonic-sandpaper. CD buyers are in for a treat – there are two excellent extra tracks on the CD. It just sounds like Mr. Jourgensen has a one-track mind, not a TV one.

Pet Shop Boys
Introspective
Recording: Transparent
Performance: Sarcastic

Granted, I trashed the Pet Shop Boys' 'Domino Dancing' single, but I really like their new album. 'Domino Dancing' is bad, but the album remix of 'Always On My Mind/In My House' is worse.

However, the other tracks are great. The album remix of 'I Want A Dog', which was originally a b-side to the 'Rent' single, is excellent. The album is a fully digital recording, and it sounds great on CD. If you liked 1986's remix LP, 'Disco,' you'll love 'Introspective.'

Alphaville
The Singles Collection
Recording: Sparkling
Performance: Très European

Alphaville's debut album, 'Forever Young,' has never been equaled in terms of grace, style and post-new wave chic. Released in 1984, it was a smash in Europe, but Alphaville gained only a few stateside fans.

The LP version of the title track, 'Forever Young', was an inspired, majestic song, with cool synth textures and a trumpet fanfare that was simply beautiful. The sparse of the song was perfect for graduations and prom themes, and it wasn't long before true blue fans saw the song being used for (heaven forbid) just that!

This remix LP contains 7" and 12" remixes of 'Forever Young,' 'Big In Japan,' 'Red Rose' and 'Dance With Me.' The extended versions of 'Forever Young' and 'Big In Japan' are the original 1985 remixes. However, the 12" versions of the singles 'Sounds Like A Melody' and 'The Jet Set' have not been included on this LP. 'Forever Young' has now been re-released as a single on (oh-no!) Top 40 playlists.

I am grateful that Atlantic Records has provided this domestic-only collection, but why must they re-release a song that is five years old for the sake of teeny-bopper (and you know who you are) audiences? If you loved them way back when, be proud to march out and buy this collection. As for you teeny-boppers, go out and buy something that is really très trendy, like the new Ministry album.

In The News...

British indie label 4AD has released the Pixies' debut EP, Come On Pilgrim, and their debut LP, Surfer Rosa, on one CD. . . . The new Dead Can Dance LP, The Serpent's Egg, has been released. . . The Cure's live film, The Cure In Orange, has been released on video LaserDisc both here and in Japan – I wonder which will be of higher quality. . . The new House Of Love single should be released soon. . . . After two excellent singles, a Peel Session and a mini-LP, The Very Things part ways. . .

Well folks, that's all for now. Hope to babble on again soon.

BACK TO SCHOOL FOR EX-HARPERITE MARLEE MATLIN

By Tari Vaughn
Staff Writer

"That moment was wild. It seemed so unreal to me, the glamor, the photographers, the reporters, the TV cameras. I stepped out of my limousine and I couldn't even walk. I had to hold on to my date. I just wanted to work, not win awards. I hate competition." were Marlee Matlin's feelings when asked about her experiences at the Academy Awards during her lecture on Thursday, October 27 in Building M.

The turnout for the event was so much larger than expected that they had to move the lecture from J143 to M Building. The audience was composed of both hearing and deaf persons with interpreters provided for both.

Matlin spoke in sign language, while her personal interpreter and manager, Jack Jacobson, translated to the hearing audience. She spoke about her current career and her rise to fame. After her lecture, the audience was given a chance to ask her questions.

At age seven, while at a summer camp for the deaf, Matlin was asked to act in the camp's show. She didn't know what acting was, but she decided to try it. "I fell in love with the theatre," said Matlin.

At that time, she didn't think it would last, but she liked it. She asked her mother "I like acting, what do we do?" Shortly thereafter, her mother enrolled Matlin in a theatre program at the Center for Deafness.

While working there, she formed a traveling theatre troupe with some friends, and worked with both groups throughout grammar school and high school. Matlin never took any formal acting classes, but used her instincts and gut reactions.

After high school, she didn't think about acting as a career. Instead, she studied Criminal Law at Harper in 1983. "I don't know why, I guess I wanted to be a cop for deaf criminals." Matlin told the audience.

Her best friend then called with news of an audition for the stage play Children of a Lesser God in downtown Chicago. After a good deal of coaxing from her family and friends, Matlin decided to audition. She was cast as Lydia, the second lead.

During one of the performances of the play, Matlin heard that there was a talent scout in the audience looking for actors for the movie version of Children of a Lesser God. After that show, the scout asked her if she was interested in auditioning for the movie. The entire cast of the play was filmed the next day.

About a week later, she received a phone call from Paramount Pictures asking her to come back and read for the lead in the movie. Despite her nervousness, Matlin says she went to the callback and "Relaxed and performed from my gut."

Four days later they called again, this time asking her to fly to New York to meet William Hurt, the male lead in the movie.

After about a week more, Paramount called her again and asked her to fly to Los Angeles. While there, she studied with a drama coach for 9-10 hours a day. After a week of this, she had her screen test. Matlin didn't hear from them for another week, but had heard that Paramount had narrowed their choices down to herself and one other actress.

She was about to give up the idea, when her agent called and asked if she would be willing to do a nude scene. She was hesitant at first, but then considered that when she was on screen, she was just an actress, so she agreed to it. Her agent called back a minute later to tell her that she got the part.

Matlin admits that she didn't know much about movie making at that point. She took things step by step, watched the other cast and crew members, and talked with them about what was happening.

Her second movie was filmed in Nicaragua. It was called Walker. Her role was in the movie for a total of nine minutes. She considers the film a mistake because of the poor script, but not because of the small part. "It doesn't matter how much you're on screen, a role is a role." Matlin said as she spoke about the disappointment of this film.

After returning from Nicaragua, she moved to a larger agency called ICM. While in the office of the agency, a man approached her about doing a television movie, shot in Toronto. The movie is called Bridge to Silence and Matlin will play the lead role in the movie.

The movie is the story of a mother, played by Matlin. When her husband dies, her mother-in-law subjects her to a custody battle for her young daughter on the basis the Matlin can't care for her because she is deaf. The film will be on CBS sometime within the next year.

When asked about her feelings on receiving the Academy award for Best Actress for her performance in Children of a Lesser God, Matlin's response was, "It's just a thing. It's a great honor, yes, but it doesn't mean I can get more work, it doesn't mean anything."

Matlin is also very concerned with various projects for the deaf, one of which is the closed-captioning of classic movies.

Matlin would like all classic films closed-captioned, and has worked with Movietime and other cable stations to try to get them to do so. She encourages people to write to the cable companies to show support on this project.

Matlin was asked why she spoke instead of signing at the Academy Awards her response was "Because I wanted to. I am a person who happens to be deaf and I am proud of that. I can both speak and sign and I wanted the world to know that."

"There are many, many deaf actors in the world, but no one recognizes their work", was Matlin's response to a question about other deaf actors.

Matlin believes that she hasn't really changed since she has become well known, except "I'm starting to believe that I can do what I want. I believe in me."

Hawks win the war 35-29

By Sandy Salvatore
Staff Writer

If George Washington was still alive he would surely be glad to have the Harper Hawk football team as his soldiers.

The Hawks fought to the bitter end coming away with a victory last Saturday against Triton 35-29.

The Trojans took an early lead 23 seconds into the game. Reggie Jackson intercepted an Al Snyder pass for an 86-yard touchdown, just after Harper's Matt Lawrence opening kickoff fumble recovery at the Trojan's 16-yard line.

Minutes later Jackson got his second interception to set up Triton quarterback Mickey White's connection with Michael Greene for a 5-yard touchdown and a 13-0 lead.

The Hawks snapped into place six minutes into the second quarter when Snyder capped off a 60 yard 6 play drive to hit Jeff Dudan for a 32-yard touchdown.

Harpers next possession was a sight for sore eyes when Tom Smid sacked Snyder in the end zone for a safety.

"It was a pass play, the receiver wasn't open," said Snyder. "It was totally my fault. I should have thrown it away. The next thing I knew, someone just let go of his block and he was right there."

The Hawks got their final possession before the half when Jeff Topel recovered White's fumble.

"We were on a blitz," said Topel. "The quarterback dropped back past Steve Turzynski (Turzynski) Hit him. He fumbled the ball, and I just fell on it."

Harper stomped all over Triton in the third when Bret Velde scored from 37 yards out for a touchdown leaving Harper trailing behind 13-15.

Defensive lineman Paul "Mr. Inside" Claps retrieved the ball back for Harper on the ensuing series.

Joe Wall hit it out of the quarterbacks hands," Claps replied. "Topel came by and scooped it up. I was right there and it just went right into my hands."

Clap's recovery allowed Snyder to link up with Dudan for a 16-yard touchdown. The two-point conversion intended for Velde was incomplete.

Magnus Brannstrom's 24-yard field goal put the Hawks in the lead 22-15 with 12:39 left on the clock in the third.

Jackson recovered the ball for the Trojan's when Haywood mishandled the ball at the Trojan's 30.

Triton's recovery gave Greene the go-ahead for a touchdown 65 yards out. Scott Bourget tied the game at 22 with 5:22 left in the game.

Both teams scored in the first overtime, and both missed field goals in the second.

The game ended in the third overtime when Turzynski intercepted Eric Keller's pass in the end zone after Haywood's touchdown and a missed extra point.

The Hawk's will face there first playoff opponent next week at Harper.

Not again Ray

By Byron Blanchard
Sports Editor

What audacity? Have you seen the boxing schedule? Sugar Ray"the Abomination"Leonard is coming out of retirement again. Granted, the man stunned the world with his latest comeback victory against Marvelous Marvin Hagler. But must we experence yet another Rocky re-run with Sugar Ray playing Stallone's part?

This time Leonard will fight "Pretty Boy" Donny LaLonde. LaLonde, who is both the World Boxing Council lightweight champion and the super-middleweight champion, is in the weakest division in boxing. Let's put aside LaLonde's lack of boxing skill. After all, he is one of the 51 men to hold a boxing crown.

Why does Leonard get to fight him? Maybe it's the 9 million dollars that promoter Vince McMahon's Titan Sports put up for the fight.

Now you must ask: why would an unskilled LaLonde want to fight Leonard after he was forced to lose 13 pounds to defend his own title? Maybe ... three million dollars in cold cash to help heal his wounds?

Wounds he may not have to endure if Father Time catches up to the abomination before next Monday.

QB's injuries unstoppable

Byron Blanchard
Sports Editor

Not to hammer a worn subject into the ground, but can you believe it? Jim McMahon became the 18th starting quarterback to go out of a game with an injury. I know McMahon is injury prone, but it does bring the problem of NFL quarterback injuries to Chicago's front door.

The NFL has become Hallmark's biggest customer. Many sports analysts question the rules and blame them for this growing population of get well card QB's. But what can the NFL really do?

The rules that govern the protection of quarterbacks are very stringent, hits after throws, hits on the hook slide and the in the grasp rule have all been instituted in the last five years for the protection of the quarterback. What fans must realize is that football is a violent game. When men who weigh over 200 pounds and gallop at almost 20 m.p.h. run into a man with their shoulder pads and helmet who happens to have his back turned, there is going to be an injury. Most of the time it's not serious enough for them to leave the ball game and they are fairly rare.

But this year those types of hitows are becoming more common with the advent of Bill Walsh's and Don Coryell's systems of the controlled pass. The focus on the passing game or how to defend against it have become top NFL priorities. A few years ago cornerbacks had their lives changed forever with the five yard bump zone rule. This rule stated that you can bump or block a receiver once within five yards of the line of scrimmage after that it was hands off. This allowed receivers to run free after the initial bump giving them more of an opportunity to catch the ball. No longer could you leave receivers one on one with your corner backs.

This is when Buddy Ryan's Philosophy comes in. A philosophy that has led to more quarterback poundings since Tom Landry introduced "the Flex." In Buddy's system you blitz not one person on passing downs but three or four. While blitzing all these people you let your cornerbacks bump take the form of stuffing the receiver at the line of scrimmage and there you hope and pray you get the quarterback before his receivers get open. It was very effective. Now most defenses in the NFL have 220 pound terror who is at his best in formation like the one above and getting increasingly more shots at giving a quarterback that bindside hits. Innovative defense and great athletes spell destruction for quarterbacks usually the poorest athlete on any professional teams starting line up. When you have to be a sitting duck from 20 to 60 times a game, sooner or later a hungry camper is going to make you his dinner. All the Pete Rozelle's in the world cannot stop the feast.

Sorry, to say goodbye

By Byron Blanchard
Sports Editor

Over the past eight weeks I have taken photos, talked to coaches both cooperative and uncooperative jovial and hostile.

Having written stories and editorials, learned to layout, and missed more than my share of deadlines. I have done my best to fulfilill the hadden demands that accompany every managerial position.

If I have offended anyone it was all in jest. My time as an editor on this paper is over. Oh, you will still see my name for a photo credit or on the bylne for a story; but the biting cynicism of my editorials cloaked in simple stories will be gone.

Thank you, Bill and Sandy for your limidless patience and hard work. You won't believe how much I appreciate them.

Hunger around the world: ways to help

By Jeff Freebus
News Editor

BASIC (Brother And Sisters In Christ) and Newman Association are sponsoring World Hunger Awareness Week. They plan to raise the consciousness and teach about hunger related issues November 14 - 17.

"The idea is to promote there are hungry people in the world," said Dennis Darby of the Newman Association.

"We get caught in our own life so much that we don't see the hunger around us," added Paula Tabor of BASIC.

"Hunger week is planned each year by the campus ministers at Harper with the help of students and staff. Paula Tabor of BASIC and Dennis Darby of the Newman Association helped to coordinate the events," said Darby in a press release.

To give students and staff information on world hunger, there will be an Information Booth in the lobby of building A from 9a.m.-2p.m. on Monday, Nov. 14.

"The Information Booth will be a source of facts for everyone," said Darby.

On Tuesday, Nov. 15 from 11a.m.-1:30p.m., students can sample a Third World Meal in the cafeteria. Instead of the students eating their own lunch they eat a bowl of rice.

The Hunger Walk, on Wednesday, Nov. 16, will take place at noon by the flag poles in front of building A. Student, staff and, people in the Community will walk around the campus walking the Perimeter Road. The Perimeter Road is two miles long and the coordinators hope participants will complete two laps. Pledges will be taken for the walk. The money will be collected and brought to BASIC and Newman Association.

Special Event for Hunger will be held on Thursday, Nov. 17. A basketball toss, with maps of the countries where the money will go to around the booth, will be held on the same day at 10a.m.-2p.m. in the lobby of building A.

All proceeds from BASIC and New Association will go to Oxfam America and MANNA (Ministering Aid to Needy Nations Abroad).

"The money from our organizations join with other colleges around the world and are sent to the same place," said Tabor.

Oxfam America is a nonprofit, international agency that funds the need to become self-sufficient in poor countries in Africa, Asia, Latin America, and distributes educational materials for people in the United States on issues of hunger.

"Oxfam America made the point of having hunger week before the week of Thanksgiving," said Darby.

"... that way when people sit down and eat on Thanksgiving they will know there are less fortunate families who will not have a big Thanksgiving meal," added Darby.

"The money is not only to feed the hungry on a short term bases but to ad long term bases too," said Tabor.

"... the money will also help them learn to plant the seeds they are given, dig wells for water, and how to reproduce chickens as a long term help," added Tabor.

Last year over $210 was raised from hunger week events. This year the organization goal is to raise over $300.

"Many students helped to make last year's Hunger Week a successful on," said Darbyin his press release.

Hunger is a global issue and World Hunger Awareness Week needs all the support it can get.

Hunger Awareness Week Schedule Nov. 14-17

INFORMATION BOOTH: A multitude of information on the starving countries of the world and how you can help will be available in A building lobby Monday, Nov. 14 from 9 am until 2 pm.

HUNGER WALK: Everybody walks many miles every day, so why not get paid for it? Students and staff will meet at the flag poles in front of A building Wednesday, Nov. 16 at noon for a stroll around campus. Participants get sponsored and money is donated to Oxfam and MANNA.

THIRD WOLD MEAL: Have you ever wondered what people eat when they have very little food? Sample some of the cuisine in the cafeteria Tuesday, Nov. 15 from 11 am until 1:30 pm.

SPECIAL EVENT for HUNGER: Finally, the week wraps up with a basket ball toss with a booth decorated with maps displaying the countries in need of this money to help provide resources for food in the future. This event will be held on Thursday, Nov. 17 from 10 am until 2 pm in A building lobby.

Fencing in "The Servant of Two Masters"

Jeff Freebus
News Editor

"The Servant of two Masters", featuring a sword fight choreographed by Randy Meyer, a member of the Society for American Fight Directors, will be opening at 8 pm Friday, Nov 11, in the building J theater.

The play was written in the 18th century by Carlo Goldoni.

It features Florindo and Beatrice, two lovers become separated. Florindo must flee town because he accidentally slays Federigo (Beatrice's brother). Beatrice decides to search for her lost lover, she disguises herself as her dead brother and travels to Venice to look for Florindo.

On route to Venice is when Beatrice is challenged to the sword fight by Silvio.

The two-minute sword fight between Beatrice (Margaret Rathke) and Silvio (Curt Phillips) is coached by former Harper student Randy Meyer.

"It is a very funny scene, very enjoyable," said Meyer.

"The fight itself will be a combination of Errol Flynn's fencing technique from the 1938 movie The Adventures of Robin Hood and the soldier style of sword fighting from a 15th century fencing master, Signor Grazzi," added Meyer.

"There are 220 types of swords; therefore, there are 220 styles of sword combat. It's a lovely little play, and it's running well," according to Meyer.

"The Servant of Two Masters" will be presented November 11,12,18 and 19 at 8 pm and November 13 at 2:30 pm in the Harper college theater, building J. Tickets are five dollars for general admission and three dollars for Harper students. For more information call the Harper Box Office, x2547.

Magician Garner saws willing participant

By Michele Ostrowski
Features Editor

"No one can saw a person in half like I can," boasts magician Bob Garner.

In a program free and open to the public, Garner will present his act noon Monday, Nov. 14, at Harper's main campus in Palatine.

All are welcome to see him appear - even disappear - in the A building lounge.

Garner began his interest in illusions with a "how to" book by Jerry Lewis when he was about eight years old.

"Ape crazy" over magic by age 12, he began ordering catalogue tricks and plastering posters of famous magicians, like Harry Houdini, all over the walls of his room.

Garner's debut was a fifteen minute Christmas party sponsored by the first United Methodist Church in Lorraine, Ohio.

"I was hiding. I was scared to death and I refused to do it," admits Garner.

"Finally my mother shouted up to me, 'Well, I'll tell you this, if you don't do this show, you'll never be able to order a magic trick again.'"

Apparently that 10 year-old boy was persuaded to perform because he now works as a full-time magician staging shows for college campuses, cruise ships and at gambling resorts in Las Vegas and Atlantic City.

Although a definite stage presence himself, Garner's hero to this day remains local magician Stewart Cramer - professionally known as Germain the wizard.

After writing Cramer stating how much he admired him, Garner accepted an invitation to lunch.

"It was a great day. He sat me down and taught me two little tricks," explains Garner.

Three years ago, Cramer, now in is late seventies, gave Garner a unique gift.

"He said he wanted to give me his 'gems'--tricks no one else can do like you can. You only have three or four of these...maybe five."

"He gave me all the props, all the workings for his 'gems'. That way, he said to me, 'I know I will still carry on after I die'."

Garner recalls that Cramer knew Houdini and other magicians from the past.

For the last seven years Garner has assembled his own 'gem' - sawing an audience participant in half with an electric saw.

This crafty wizard claims, "I can do the trick in three minutes or I can go as long as fifteen minutes."

As for the lucky participant from the audience? "I usually choose a girl from the audience. I watch and see how people respond, how they laugh and applaud."

"I look for a clean-cut human being, someone who is nice to get along with. Physical size is not important."

For an amusing afternoon, join Bob Garner on November 14 and maybe YOU can be chosen form the crowd!

Help Your Heart

Stroke: Know the Signals

American Heart Association

There is a lot of talk these days about body language.

Not only do you have to be careful about what you say, but you also have to be aware of messages or signals you may send through a variety of bodily movements and gestures.

But how much time do you spend recognizing the signals your body is sending you?

If you were experiencing, for example, a stroke, would you know how to interpret the signals and warning signals?

According to the American Heart Association, more than 500,000 Americans will experience a stroke this year.

In many cases, quick action can prevent more serious problems from occurring as the result of a stroke.

A stroke happens when oxygen rich blood is cut off on its way to the brain.

This can be caused by a clot in an artery that supples blood to the brain, or by an aneurysm, the bursting of a blood vessel in the brain.

How a person is affected by a stroke depends largely on what part of the brain is robbed of the needed oxygen.

There are several ways your body may warn you of a major stroke:

-a sudden, temporary weakness or numbness of the face, arm or leg;

-temporary difficulty or lost of speech or trouble understanding speech;

-sudden, temporary dimness or loss of vision, usually in one eye;

GREAT AMERICAN SMOKEOUT

GREAT AMERICAN SMOKEOUT

This is your chance of a lifetime to take a real breather!

Join millions of smokers who will stop for the day on Thursday, November 17, 1988. It is the American Cancer Society GREAT AMERICAN SMOKEOUT.

Here's how you can start to stop!

1. Hide the ashtrays, matches and cigarettes.

2. Lay in a supply of sugarless gum or candy or juicy vegetables. Health Service has a supply if you run out.

3. Drink lots of liquids--but easy on the caffeine and alcohol!

4. Tell everyone you quit, for the day. Friends can support friends. Ask them to adopt you for the day.

5. Urges to smoke can be curbed by using deep breathing exercises--breathe in, hold for a count of ten and release slowly.

6. Exercise to release tension.

7. Try to stretch today to every day, an hour at a time.

Helpful materials from the American Cancer Society are available in the Health Service. Our ex-smokers can help you.

Official GREAT AMERICAN SMOKEOUT adoption certificates will be available in the A building Student Lounge Tuesday, November 15 and Wednesday, November 16.

On the GREAT AMERICAN SMOKEOUT DAY, Thursday, November 17, carbon monoxide monitoring, balloons and buttons will be available in the middle bay of the cafeteria.

Be "KOOL" on Thursday, November 17. Make a "TRUE" "LUCKY STRIKE"!

Discover that you can get the CAMEL off your back for at least one day. Be "MORE" than you thought you could be--

BE SMOKE FREE FOR A DAY!!

The Board of Trustees just approved $8,000 for the redecoration of President Thompson's office.

It's your money, what style would you suggest for the decor?

Morty
Student
"Similar to the decor that Greg Brady redecorated Mike's office. Lava lamps, beaded curtains, psychedelic paperweights. And with $8,000 they could redecorate other trustees' offices in the same way---or give the teachers a raise."

Tari Vaghn
Student
"It should be decorated in modern American junk like the rest of the campus"

Due to the fact that these willing photo opinion participants were being forced back into their classroom, we didn't get their names. Sorry.

PRIZES

First Place
1 year membership at the Woodfield Fitness Center

Second Place
5 sessions at the Bahama Sun Tanning Spa

Third Place
Dinner for two at Swensen's Ice Cream/Restaurant

Fourth Place
$10 Gift certificate at Chili's Hamburger Grill & Bar

The Harbinger needs a graphic logo to represent the paper. The graphic should fit in a 2"x2" square and would be added next to the paper's name on the front page. Five judges will award prizes to the four best drawings based on creativity, representation of the Harbinger, and originality.

Entries will be accepted through Friday, Nov. 18 (one entry per person). Results will appear in the Dec. 1 issue of the Harbinger. Entries should be turned into the Harbinger Office, A367, with artist's name and social security number.

The Harper College logo and the Woodfield Fitness Center logo are examples of what we are looking for.

The Harbinger by any other name would still be a newspaper, so why change it?

For nearly 20 years Student Activities has sponsored the Harper College Newspaper and through the ages it has undergone many changes. Its name has always been "Harbinger" but it looks a little different every year. In 1984 it almost changed entirely.

"In an effort to carry on the fine tradition of quality to which Harper College has grown accustomed, the Harbinger editorial staff is considering a name change which would enhance the quality of the college newspaper and make it more professional and responsible," wrote Editor-in-Chief Bill Koch.

"The majority of readers doesn't understand the definition of Harbinger and most mispronounce it."

"We believe it's time for a change."

"We believe the remaining pages of the Harbinger should be renamed: the Journal."

Actually, he's right (and it doesn't surprise me)! Just for fun, I decided to take a little survey.

The paper's name is... "The Harbinger (pronounced 'binger as in singer) This was the most popular mispronunciation. I also received Harbanger and was disappointed not to hear Harbunger. The proper pronunciation is Har·ben·jer.

Harbinger means "Harper High School," according to one student. Our Student Senate President said, "An extension of Harper students' view of Harper College." Not bad. Terry Simonson says, "I get informed on what's going on, on campus." One student stumbled upon a fairly close definition. "I always thought it was a derivative of 'Harper'....No. That's from the nineteenth century. The bringer of truth," said Jim Bohan.

One other student came up with an almost accurate definition and she pronounced it correctly too! Debi Smolinski (please pardon me if I misspelled your last name) answered, "Bearer of good news."

All other students either "don't know" or "someone told me once. I don't remember." Those asked, please don't feel bad. All answers I received are correct (with the exception of the first "Harper High School"). Besides, I must admit I only had a vague idea myself before I referred to Webster.

Webster says: a forerunner; a precursor; one who or that which precedes and gives notice of the arrival of some person or thing.

And: person sent before to announce the coming of someone: Herald.

While the mispronunciation I really don't mind (ex-President McGrath gave us the nickname "binger") I hope the definition explains why we are who we are. I have NO intention of changing 19 years of tradition for the misconception that it will make our reporting more professional or responsible! While we will become more professional and more responsible, it will not be do to a name change. The Harbinger describes accurately what we try to accomplish with our long hours (and I mean long hours)!

However, I have initiated a contest for a graphic design representing what the Harbinger means to you. The design should be 2"X2" to fit next to the name on the front page. Four prizes are available. The last day to submit a graphic is Friday, Nov. 18 and the winning graphic will appear in Dec. I issue. It seems once again the name of the Harbinger will look slightly different.

If at first you don't succeed better hurry and drop the class. "W" before "F"!

Penny for your thoughts...eight thousand dollars for new furniture!

While I was writing this editorial, my managing editor reminded me of a motion recently passed at the Board of Trustees meeting. Harper's Board of Trustees gave $8,000 to purchase new furniture for the President's office.

Considering the revenue of the college this may be pretty small, but when classrooms aren't properly furnished with chicks (which, by the way, come out of the same budget as this $8,000) and pencil sharpeners, and teachers make do with hideous lighting conditions in F building it makes me wonder if our Board of Trustees has its priorities straight. Granted I could not contact board members for their ~~comment~~ explanation, so if there is one, I will try to find it for next week.

Meanwhile, the Board of Trustees meet every month on the fourth Thursday and are open to the public. Sometimes (rarely) the meetings seem unimportant, but most of the time the future is being decided for this college...and for you!

For David Mamet, Only Some "THINGS CHANGE"

By Scott Neidt
Entertainment Editor

Married to the Mob can not compare to the strong talents of David Mamet.

Things Change, a new release from Columbia Pictures, is the story of a simple shoe shine man named Gino (Don Ameche), who is approached by the mob.

The family Gino encounters has a dilemma, one the members is being prosecuted for murder. This problem is what causes the meeting between the don and Gino.

The family is looking for a look alike to stand in and take the blame for the prosecuted family member, and Gino happens to be the lucky recipient.

Enter Jerry. Jerry (Joe Mantegna) is a member of the family who has been put on "probation" for his poor practices of mob enforcement. The Head honcho gives Jerry an opportunity to clear himself by watching Gino for the weekend so he doesn't skip town.

Jerry feels sorry for Gino, because Gino is going to prison for a very long time, so he takes Gino to Lake Tahoe for the weekend.

Needless to say, problems surface and Things Change.

Ameche's portrayal of a gentle Italian immigrant is both warm and delightful. Gino is a character that has both a deep sense of moral values and a value for friendship that is unsurpassed.

Mantegna relays a character unlike his portrayal in House of Games. Jerry is a person who displays a tough exterior, but underneath is a caring and optimistic fool.

The screenplay is written by both David Mamet (Sexual Perversity in Chicago) and (an unexpected surprise) Shel Silverstein (Where the Sidewalk Ends). The two working together creates a warm comedy that produces a dry form of wit.

This movie does not slap you in the face with jokes in order to form a plot. Quite the opposite, it eases in some comical views to make light of the situation being presented.

Mamet also directs this humorous view of how the mob can be changed by a simplistic individual.

Now, if I have been making this picture sound like a god-send from that big silver screen in the sky, permit me to correct this situation. Things Change is a wonderful and refreshing approach to comedy. But if you do not care for live drama, I would not recommend this film. Mamet is known for his work on the stage, and therefore this film expands like a play. There are a few spots where the action seems to drag a bit, but this time is not wasted, it is utilized for some very strong character development.

My opinion of the film is positive, but take me at my word. If you're looking for a movie that depicts the Three Stooges Meet the Mob, look into Married to the Mob and leave this one for those who enjoy subtle comedy.

HARPER STUDENTS "STEPPING OUT"

By Tari Vaughn
Staff Writer

Take eight klutzy tap dance students. Now add a former professional dancer and a huffy old pianist. What you get is a fun-filled evening of lighthearted comedy.

Harper Student Activities will be sponsoring its third Chicago Cultural Excursion to the Steppenwolf Theatre production of Stepping Out, a play by Richard Harris. The trip will take place Dec. 6. The participants will leave from in front of Building A at 6 pm and will return at approximately 11 pm.

The play is meant to be a homey, old-shoe version of A Chorus Line. Set in a North London church hall, the story focuses around a group of amateurs who meet weekly to take tap dance lessons from an ex-professional dancer and her stern pianist.

The group includes all types of personalities. From Vera the busybody, to good hearted Rose, to Geoffery who is shy, unimposing, and the only male in the group, each character is complete.

As the play progresses, we see the interpersonal relationships develop, discover more about the off-stage lives of the students, and learn about the inner struggles of each character. The show is topped off by the finale tap dance routine for a charity benefit concert.

Harris' 1984 comedy premiered in London and later ran on Broadway, where it was directed by Tommy Tune.

The Steppenwolf production of Stepping Out will be directed by Rondi Reed and choreographed by Robert Wells. The production stars Shannon Cochran as Maxis, the patient dance teacher and Ann Stevenson Whitney as Mrs. Fraser, the disapproving pianist. Other cast members include Jenny Bacon, Dolores Noah, Linda Stephens, Celeste Lynch, Frances Gunnan, Carlton Miller, Irma P. Hall, and Deanna Dunagon.

Tickets for the Harper trip are on sale now and will cost $15 for Harper students and $19 for the public. The ticket price does include transportation to and from the theatre. For tickets or more information, call the Harper Box Office at 397-3000, ext. 2547.

"Servant of Two Masters" Set to Open

By Scott Neldl
Entertainment Editor

After months of preparation, Harper's fall production of The Servant of Two Masters is ready for an audience.

Between the cast, the director, the crews for lighting, sets, props, and costumes, approximately two months of effort was spent.

On Friday November 11 we will be able to view the results.

The Servant of Two Masters is a wonderfully humorous story of two pairs of confused and aggrivated lovers, Clarice and Sylvio, and Beatrice and Florindo, that cannot resolve their differences without the help of their resourceful servant, Truffaldino.

Everything from confused situations and a woman dressing as a man, to sword fighting and exaggerated gestures, gives this play its classification as a farce.

Mary Jo Willis directs this Italian farce in the style of commedia dell'arte, a form of comedy from the 18th century.

Farce is a unique comedic form, the oldest theatrical comedy. Farce combines three elements in its performance: realism, irony, and visual humor. "Clowns are the perfect symbols for farce. They combine funny characterizations, lots of energy, exaggerated movements and emotions, and slapstick," states Willis.

If a definition of farce in modern times is needed, Willis says that it can be interpreted as a combination of the styles of the two hit sitcoms, Night Court and Cheers, without it being as ridiculous as Night Court and yet not as straight as Cheers.

Willis is very happy with the cast she has to work with. "The cast is first rate. There is a definite team spirit in the cast." Willis is very pleased with character development, with about fifty percent of the ideas for development process coming from the actors.

Willis also confides that much of the character creations come from people and situations she has encountered in real life.

The cast includes both veterans of the Harper stage and actors making their college debut.

Some key players in the company are Kirk Sanders as Truffaldino, Margaret Rathke as Beatrice Rasponi, Harold Le Boyer as Pantalone Dei Bisognosi, Tony Kortas as Dr. Lombardi, Diann Squiers as Clarice, Curt Phillips as Silvio and Dana Logsdon as Florindo Aretusi.

Other cast members include: Dan Dudych, Maurice Stone, Todd Davidson, Brendan Foley, and Jennie Sartore.

Willis says that she enjoys directing a straight play as opposed to a musical for a change. "Being a musical director is like being a traffic cop, making sure people don't collide."

Willis is concerned, despite her excitement toward the overall production, that people won't show due to the unknown title. She promises those who venture to see it, however, will have a really wonderful experience. She says it's a quality production from sets, to cast, to costumes, and so on.

The total run of the show is November 11, 12, 18 and 19 at 8:00 pm and November 13 at 2:30 pm. The Italian buffet dinner theatre being served in the College Dining Hall in A building on November 19 at 6:00 pm.

Willis sums it up by saying, "Laughter is a gift, and I think this play will allow people to forget their worries for a couple of hours and just enjoy themselves."

ECONOMY OF MOTION

By Pedar Swanney

The battered blinds were not equal to the task of holding an angry morning sun at bay. Streams of light poured onto my face like molten lead spilt n'er the ramparts of Sleepy Bye Castle, obstructing my re entry. I experienced a falling sensation that resulted in conflict between my nose and the floor.

"Ouch." I may or may not have said.

I stood up, pleased to find myself already dressed and at the office. After adjusting my nose to a less jaunty angle, I ran a bottle of Listerine through some week-old coffee grounds. I gargled the resulting brew, then swallowed.

Through my lifs thena runs a thread that I see has already woven itself into the fabrc of this little tale. Have you spotted it yet? I woke in the morning already dressed and at work. I achieva a clear head and clean breath from the same cup. A pattern emerges economy of motion.

That's my middle name, Hymen Economy of Motion Felichenscrog.

Actually, my middle name is Ira, but I m changing it. I'm a dick.

"Dick" is dickspeak for Private Detective.

"Dickspeak" is dickspeak for trade vernacular.

Got it?

I was picking through an ashtray, trying to roll one big cigarette from six little ones, when a bad leg on the desk buckled and sent everything crashing to the ground. After propping the desk back up, I replaced the telephone and kicked everything else aside. I sat down and put my feet up, then I sat up and put my feet down, then I sat down and put my feet up again. I lit the cigarette but was grammatically at odds with it so I tamped it out and lighted it. Better. Watching the smoke curl lazily toward the ceiling I was reminded of how few things in this life curl lazily toward ceilings.

A jagged pink avenue of scar had navigated the terrain of my right cheek for the last two weeks, complimenta of Betty Bozomwski.

It had been a cold night, the kind of cold that makes a man want to dress warmly. I had two bottles of 100 year old Special Bland scotch that had played a lead role in my dreams lately, so I took one to Bosoms in the hope that she might wish to co-star. Bosoms was a leggy bird with an innocent pass that belied a fast mind and a passionate heart. She and I had carried on a discreet but tumultuous affair for four years and I left her place without clearing paose as often as not. On this particular evening, though, she had been in a fury.

The violent anger, not the Plymouth.

"Is something wrong, babycakes?" I assed, but her only reply was the wound my scotch made as it crashed across my kisser. The bottle shattered and my cheek opened. I sat numbly on the floor bleeding profusely and lamenting the loss of my 100 year old scotch. Could things possibly get worse, I wondered, and looked up to find Bosoms hanging at my throat with the jagged remains of the bottle. Well, I don't mind saying that I was a bit put off by all this, so I shot her.

One of the things I had always admired about Bosoms was her relentless determination, but that was getting something of a nuisance now as she kept coming at me with that broken bottleneck.

So I shot her five more times.

I cradled her head as she lay dying. "Why?" I asked her. "Why did you try to kill me?"

Well," she said, "your feet smell, your eyes are beady, you dress like a bum, you have bad breath, your nose hair needs trimming, you have dandruff, you're stupid, you're poor, you have cruel under your fingernails, you have no upper lip, you're going bald, you have hair on your back, your ears are too small, you mumble and you have a pot belly. Did I mention your breath?"

"Yes."

"You have bad posture, you're uneducated, you have a hairy mole on your earlobe, you whine, you have headlice, you're cross eyed, you have white legs and a flat ass, narrow shoulders and no chin."

"Is that it?"

"Ha! That's just a start!" she said and, with some assistance, died. I rubbed my finger around on her eyeball to make sure she wasn't faking, but she didn't blink. I stood, letting her head thunk gently on the floor. Twice.

I left there, holding a hankie in my bleeding jaw and deeply saddened by my tragic loss. There's only so much 100 year old scotch in the world and when it's gone, it's gone. I rang up the coppers and left an anonymous tip.

That had been two weeks ago, now I sat in my office paying a silent tribute to the gal I had blown away.

My mind turned to happier thoughts. My fantasy of a pair of luscious bosoms coming through the door followed by a gorgeous body was interrupted by a pair of luscious bosoms coming through the door followed by a gorgeous body.

These were not your every day, run of the mill bosoms. The left one wore the same bra size as me. The right one too, probably, but I only have one bra. The custodian of these warheads glared her bottom in a chair that I would never in wash again. Only then did my gaze find her face.

BOSUMS! I cried in a manly squeal as I levitated six inches at her.

Men often remark on them," she chirped, but seldom threaten to shoot them."

"But I'm not just any man. I'd plugged those bosoms six times before and I'd plug em six more. She spoke before I began plugging.

"Are you Hymen Felichenscrog, private eye?" she twittered.

"Hymen Economy of Motion Felichenscrog, and my friends call me a dick."

"I don't wonder. My name is Bertha Bozomowski. I'd like you to investigate the death of my twin sister, Betty."

Her story was lame, but the flipside that Betty had risen from the grava to smita me, was lamer. In any event, I had a handful of gal and a mouthful of clothes. I could afford to play along.

"Why me, louis?"

"I found your name in her address book," warbled the alleged Bertha. "I thought I could trust you."

All my training told me that this was the time to say:

"I don't come cheap, dollbuns."

"I anticipated that," she whimpered and lossed a roll of bills on my desk. "will five gs cover it?"

"Not if it takes more than three years. Let's drink a toast to our new relationship."

"Where did you get that scar on your cheek?" she yelped.

"Shaving," I answered and went to the "B" drawer of my file cabinet where I found the last bottle of my precious Special Blend under "Booze." I set the bottle on the desk next to my gat and turned back to the cabinet to check the Bozomowski file. I had clipped the obit and wanted to slide a quick eyeball over it.

> Miss Elizabeth Bozomwski (it said) was found last night blah blah anonymous tip blah blah blah shattered bottle and the blood of her assailant blah blah blah blah blah Miss Bozomwski is survived only by her twin

"This is a very rare scotch," yowled Bertha as she stood and examined the bottle. "how strange that one just like it was found next to my sister's body."

I nodded my agreement and, playing it cool, real cool, turned back to the obit.

> survived only by her twin brother Bert

I spun and dove for my gat, intending to teach Bert why my middle name was Economy of Motion, but his middle name seemed to be Kill Felichenscrog. My gat was on the corner of my desk and my hand was only inches from it when the last bottle of my beloved scotch crashed across the left side of my face with alarming familiarity, curtailing my flight and casting me earthward.

It was a few moments before I could focus my eyes. When I did I was greeted by the replay of a furious Bosoms and her jagged bottleneck closing in for the kill, only this time it wasn't Betty, it was the fast and agile avenging brother. And this time my gat was out of reach.

He was moving on rapidly, his eyes locked on the ripe target of my throat. I had only seconds left. "You know what I think, Betty," I yelled, "I think you like dressing that way. I think you're one of them homo boys."

Bert stopped his approach for a moment, which was all I needed. I kicked out the bad leg on my desk and everything on it came my way, including my roscs.

Bert lunged.

Boom! spat my gat.

Boom! my gat respat.

BOOM! replied Bert's right bosom.

Bert fell to the floor in shock, the front of his dress shredded and the remains of two footballs hanging still. I stood and dabbed blood off my chres with a hankie.

"Those footballs saved ya, Bert. You're not even scratched."

He tore off the wig. "You killed her! You killed my sister!"

"Sorry kid, she was in a fury."

"The Plymouth?"

"No, the violent anger."

"But why did you have to kill her," he wailed.

"It was her or me, Bert. She voted one way, I voted the other."

"But you voted ex times!"

"This is Chicago, kid. Now put some jam on your ham and scram."

After he had gone I tallied up the damages. The scar from Bert would be a nice match to Betty's. Tears flowing, I swept up the remains of a Special Bland. I would never know.

After reloading my trusty gat and straightening my desk I kicked back and studied the track sheets. I called my bookie.

"Ever get on Economy of Motion in the sixth," I told him.

"You're a fool, Felichenscrog," he told me. "Bosom Buddy has a fly a mile."

But I knew better.

Nothing rhymes with Fluthing

Pedar Swanney

Adam sat at the table for whuh he had slipped the maitre d' a crisp fifty. He expected change. He was busy blowing bubbles in his martini when the maitre d' arrived with a woman he hoped would prove to be Chelsea Morgan.

He snatched a fruit from the centerpiece and stood up.

"I'm Adam Swann," he said with a plum.

"I'm Chelsea Morgan," she said, displaying her driver's license.

They seated themselves and admired each other's names for a moment before speaking.

"But seriously," said Adam, "do you think Castro will evict his Soviet overlords and convert Cuba to a democracy?"

"No."

"I love a woman with political savvy," drawled Adam.

"Nothing rhymes with savvy," observed Chelsea.

"No it doesn't," corrected Adam. "Nothing rhymes with fluthing."

"Toilet or teeth?" asked Chelsea, resting on the word.

"It depends who's asking," said Adam, inspired by Ben Franklin. How many teeth do you have?"

"Seventy five," lied Chelsea through that which she was lying mouth on a glistening strand of about.

"You have seventy five teeth? Whats your secret?"

"I'm not wearing panties."

Ahhh," said Adam, adjusting his perceptions conspicuously. A Roman Catholic Rabbi came to them table and gave them a mixed blessing. Chelsea reached into Adam's case and adjusted her briefs. They opened a jar of Haddrick's Molassas and let it breathe free.

"You look very beautiful this evening," said Adam.

"I suppose you mean that as a compliment," replied Chelsea, plucking a hair from her head and eating it.

"I guess it could be construed that way by an ex prize fighter who took one too many to the head."

"Girls don't make passes at men who make guesses," uttered Chelsea.

"Only a cow would utter in public, you flaxen swine," Adam formerly enunciated Chelsea wood.

"You're making me hot, said Chelsea, the words sliding from her saliva," said Chelsea, the words sliding from her mouth on a glistening strand of tar.

"If I said you had a pickled liver would you slap it against me?" asked Adam in manly form.

"Only if you can guess the brand of brassaire I wear," replied Chelsea in maiden form.

Adam lifted his water glass to his lips and expectorated into it phlegmatically. Chelsea fluttered her eyelashes coyly. Adam fluttered Chelsea's eyelashes coyly. Chelsea grappled with the notion of an ocean in motion. Adam groped for meaning. Suddenly, several seconds passed.

"Do you have the time?" asked Adam.

"Yes," said Chelsea, nodding sagely.

"The hell," said Adam.

"The hell you say," observed Chelsea.

"I've never liked the name Chelsea," admitted Adam.

"I've never liked fettuccini alfredo," admitted Chelsea.

"Anty pasta?"

"No, I'll wait for the main course."

"Duck," said Adam.

Chelsea did.

"In orange sauce," added Adam.

"Kinky" said Chelsea, the word spilling from her head like a mountain spring. "ask me later."

Adam looked longingly into Chelsea's eyes. "Os est le petit chien."

"Le petit chien est ici!" cried Chelsea, removing a wire-haired terrier from her purse.

Adam stood up, leaned over the table and stuck his tongue into Chelsea's mouth. The candle in the middle of the table set his tie on fire and he burned to death. Chelsea married a stockbroker and had two children.

Why Join the Speech Team?

Are you a Communications, English, or Journalism major? Maybe you should think about becoming a part of Harper's Speech Team.

Harper's Speech Team offers students a variety of competition, including: Poetry, Prose, Dramatic, and Oral Interpretation; Duet Acting; Sales, Persuasive, and Informative Speaking; Speech to Entertain; Communication Analysis; and Reader's Theatre.

Being a member of Harper's Speech Team also has benefits. For instance, students become visible to four-year universities, they learn the "behind the scenes" of hosting a tournament, and tuition rebates are offered for some students participating on the Speech Team.

Future tournaments include November 11 and 12 at Richmond College, December 2 and 3 at Elgin Community College, January 20 and 21 at the College of DuPage, a State Competition on February 16-18 at Northern Illinois University, March 4 at Harper and the Regional Competition on March 17 and 18 at Highland College.

Harper's Speech Team is open to all students and new participants are welcome. For more information, contact Marcia Lutrena, Director of Forensics, at Ext. 2944.

STUDENTS OFFERED A THIRD CULTURAL EXCURSION

Harper students have the opportunity to attend The Steppenwolf production of Richard Harris' "Stepping Out" on Tuesday, December 6, as part of the cultural excursion programming by Student Activities.

For only $15, Harper students can attend the comedy about ten Britons who take a tap dance class and then perform in an amateur show. Tickets for the public are available for $19.

The ticket price includes roundtrip bus transportation and admission to the show. The bus will leave the front of Building A at 6 p.m. sharp and returning around 11 p.m.

Tickets are available at the Box Office on a first come, first served basis.

For more information about these events call 397-3000, Ext. 2547.

"Understanding the Men in Your Life" will be conducted by Audrey Inbody, Harper counselor, and her husband Dr. Noah Inbody, professor and education counselor at Northeastern University on Saturday, December 3, in A-242.

The workshop will examine the historic and current influences which define masculinity, the problems and stresses of being male in today's world, and how this affects male-female relationships.

The Course Number is LLW094.

To register for any of these seminars, call the Continuing Education Office at 397-3000, Ext. 2410. To assure correct registration, please give the course number.

HARPER STUDY TOUR IN GREECE

A seven day cruise of the Greek islands and Turkey highlights a summer study tour sponsored by Harper College. The tour, June 16 through July 1, 1989, also includes a week touring mainland Greece.

Tour cost of $2100 includes round-trip airfare from Chicago, touring, hotels, most meals, and lectures on Greek history and culture. Among sites to be visited are Athens, Delphi, Mycenae, Olympia, Rhodes, Crete, Paimos, Ephesus, and Istanbul. Students may earn college credit in humanities.

An informational meeting will be scheduled during January. To obtain brochures and further information, contact Martha Simonsen, in the Liberal Arts Office or call Ext. 2285.

Hunger Walk

By Susan Berne
Upcoming Editor

Brothers and Sisters in Christ (B.A.S.I.C.) and the Newman Association and are sponsoring a "Walk for Hunger" as one activity for World Hunger Awareness Week.

The Walk will take place on Wednesday, November 16, along Harper's outer perimeter drive.

Walkers will meet at the flagpole in front of A Building at noon. Two laps will be taken in about one hour, totalling four miles. If, however, walkers are only able to make one trip, there is no problem--just do whatever you can to help!

Anyone Walking for Hunger is encouraged to get pledges - either a one time donation or a set amount for each quarter mile. All donations will be sent to Oxfam and MANNA, agencies to help relieve hunger all over the world.

If you need either pledge sheets or more information contact Dennis Darby or Paula Tabor at Ext. 2981, or if no answer Ext. 2242.

88-89 Men's Basketball Preview

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

If anyone were to ask Head Men's Basketball Coach Bill Probst about last season, he'd tell you it didn't exist.

"It was a nightmare, the players didn't have any concepts of a man-to-man defense or a hard-work ethic and they didn't have any responsibility in dealing with their academic problems, I don't want to remember it," Probst commens.

In fact, would anyone want to remember a season in which your 15-man roser soon became six by the semester break. At that time, the Hawks were 5-10, and by season's end the Hawks were only able to win one out of their last 14 games. They finished the year with a 6-23 record; 2-12 in the N4C for a 7th place finish, culminating with a 65-64 loss to Elgin in the first round of the region tournament. "If we had screened out, we would have won," Probst recalled.

This season, the Hawks are ready and eager to get off to a great start. With four returnees and a very talented group of incoming freshmen, Harper may be in position to assume the dark-horse role in the N4C title chase this year. "It will be the strongest conference race in its history, there's a lot of (NCAA) Division I talent, everybody will be very strong." Probst stated.

Returning for the Hawks are: 6'2" guard Travis Perry from Glen Ellyn, Illinois; 6'1" guard Kevin Simpson also from Glen Ellyn, Illinois; 6'0" guard James Doyle from Fort Campbell, Kentucky; and 6'10" Center Joe Passi from Rolling Meadows, Illinois. "They're good-schooled, hard-working kids who came from poor programs with no teaching. They're a bunch of intense basketball players," Probst said.

Perry earned third Team all N4C honors, averaging 18 points a game in his last 11 games. Passi put together a 30 point, 15 rebound performance in the regular season finale against Triton.

One thing that could be a plus for the Hawks this year is the success that the newcomers bring to the program. Shopinsky was a pivotal force in leading Hoffman Estates to its first ever Mid Suburban League South Division Title. "He's a good defensive player who came from a good program, he will definitely help us," said Probst.

Pierce played a key role in Thornton's 22-6 season that garnered them the South Inter-Conference Association East Division and IHSA Regional Championships before bowing out to eventual state runner-up, Chicago St. Francis De Sales and Indiana-bound Eric Anderson in the Sectional Semi-Finals." He's a good offensive talent. If he plays defense, he can help us," Probst replied.

Jadzak played on a Tinley Park team that was ranked in and around the Top 25 in the Chicagoland Area last year, which featured one of the top players in the state, Chris Dillard, now at Arkansas State. "He's a hard-nosed, aggressive kid who has the potential to help us out down the line," Probst said. Brooks played on Probst's last team at St. Viator in 1987 that won its first ever IHSA Regional Title by beating Rolling Meadows (which then featured a center by the name of Joe Passi) "Sometimes he doesn't want to play, but he has a lot of talent," Probst answered.

Hull comes from a Central Illinois program run by a former St. Viator player, (Paul Kasterling) that has the same system that Probst uses. "He's been the shiningest star, the brightest hope, the most encouraging player so far. He's a good player, he will be a starter," responded Probst. Townsend comes from a school in Southern Indiana where there's a rich basketball tradition. "He's a good shooter, a good hard-nosed kid who will be a big help," Probst said.

Another newcomer will be assistant coach Lou Benedetto, who comes to Harper after coaching for the past three years at Lake Park High School in Roselle which is in the Upstate Eight Conference. Many experts call this the toughest league in the state. The Conference has been represented in the State Finals each of the last two years by Aurora East (1988) and Elgin (1987) and features two Hall of Fame coaches Aurora West's Gordy Kirkman and St. Charles Rita Johnson. "It's pretty tough all right" jokingly admitted Benedetto.

Benedetto replaces Ken Ruud, who resigned in order to take care of his wife, who had major surgery.

"It's like a new experience, with the different competition, different systems. All the kids on the team are eager to play, work hard. They ask questions, they want to learn. I don't know about the level of competition on the Junior College level yet, but by and large, we have a bunch of good hard working kids." Benedetto said.

The players generally feel that the Hawks keys to success will be two things: having sophomore leadership and playing together as a team. Freshman Donald Pierce said, "It'll be up to the Sophomores, Passi and Travis, all the gang, they know the game, they need to show leadership." Sophomore Joe Passi stated, "We're going to have to play as a team."

All of Harper's pre-season questions will be answered in the season opener tonight, when the Hawks travel to Cicero at 7 p.m. to face Morton College.

Morton College is located at 3801 S. Central Ave. in Cicero.

Hawks Freeze Moraine: Advance to Championship

By Sandy Salvatore
Staff Writer

The gloomy, very frigid afternoon turned out to be tailor-made for the Hawks as they clawed the visiting Moraine Valley Marauders 55-6.

The last time these two teams met was October 15th when Harper knocked out the Marauders 30-16.

The Hawks took an early lead in the first half scoring 21 points in a span of 2:41.

The first touchdown was an 81-yard pass from Al Snyder to Jamey Haywood who outraced the last defenders up the left sideline to score unouched.

Freshmen Jeff Trager got his first taste of fame when he connected with Snyder in the end zone for a 3-yard touchdown, which was set up by his 50-yard burst up the middle on the previous play.

Harper's third touchdown was a gift from Moraine Valley when Mike Tisza fumbled a kickoff return and Harper's Matt Lawrence recovered the ball at the Marauders' 38.

Haywood gave no objections to Lawrence's recovery, responding with a 38 yard run on the first play of scrimmage.

Linebacker Eric Bannon, a freshmen from Arlington Heights, made the score 21-0 with his extra point as a replacement for Magnus Brantstrom who injured his knee on the previous kickoff.

"It was kinda weird," Bannon replied, "because last week was the first time I really started kicking."

Rod Laithem got his fifth interception of the year when he intercepted Rob Pratt pass at the Marauders 5.

Laithem's interception allowed Snyder to toss a 1-yard pass to Jeff Dudan with 9:16 left on the clock in the second.

Reserve quarterback Jeff Wright took over for Snyder in the second half completing 4-of-7 for 72 yards.

Backup tailback Lamont Calhoun strutted his stuff in the third quarter running up the middle untouched for a 12-yard touchdown to make it 34-0.

Moraine Valley managed to get on the board scoring its only touchdown when Rorey Richardson ran unmolested into the end zone for an 84-yard kickoff return.

Wright made the score 41-6 when he capped off a 63 yard, 7 play drive to hit Bret Velde for a 7 yard touchdown.

Calhoun scored his second touchdown of the day when he burst into the end zone from 72 yards out.

Fullback Brian Canory, a 6-foot 1/ 255 pound freshmen from Cincinnati, ended the long day of scoring when he burst into the end zone for a 78-yard touchdown.

The Hawks will host the College of DuPage Chapparals Saturday for the Region Championship game and the opportunity to play in the RCC Cola bowl November 20th.

Happy to Say Hello

By Peter Soby
Sports Editor

Hey, how's it going. I am the new sports editor and my name is Peter A. Soby. I bid a fond farewell to the former Sports Editor Byron Blanchard, and I look forward to having him continue writing articles for the paper.

I have an accomplished staff of writers including Sandy Salvatore and Lou Nunez. With the help of them and the rest of the Harbinger staff, I am confident you will enjoy reading the sports very much.

You may ask yourself why I am doing sports. I am an avid sports fan and I have been a participant for a good part of my life. My journalistic skill speak for itself. I was on the yearbook staff all four years at high school, culminating as the head editor my senior year.

I hope to bring complete coverage of all Harper sports to the paper. I feel that since this is the college paper, it should exclusively bring, in full light, the sports and athletes of the college. I intend to do just that.

Big Game Outloook

By Sandy Salvatore
Staff Writer

Well its true, the Harper Hawk football team will play against The College of DuPage Chapparals for the Region Championship this Saturday.

I have taken the time to bring out some major plusses for the Hawks as they prepare to battle for the championship.

PASSING:

Second year quarterback Al Snyder (83 of 160 passes for 1176 yards) has the experience and the ability to carry the Hawks to the RCC Cola Bowl. Reserve quarterback Jeff Wright has showed that he can accomplish the job if he is called on.

RECEIVING:

James "Speedy" Haywood's quick thinking and quick feet will scare the Chaps as he has done to many other teams.

KICKING:

The Hawks are without their main kicker Magnus Brantstrom who will be out for the remaining season with a knee injury. Eric Bannon showed that he can get the task accomplished after last Saturday's game against Moraine Valley.

DEFENSE:

If C.O.D.'s quarterback Curt Miller or receivers cross the scrimmage line into the danger zone, they will be met by Harper's Danger Zone Warrior's consisting of: Joe Wall (6'5", 270), Paul "Mr. Inside" Claps, who leads Harper's defense with 84 tackles (6'1", 222), Jeff Topel (6', 224), Joe Belcher (6'3", 250), Steve Turzynski (6'3", 190), Scott "The Bathroom Bloomer" Miller (5'11", 179), and Rod Laithem, who has 5 interceptions. (5'11", 175).

SCOREBOARD//////SCHEDULE

VOLLEYBALL
Wright over Harper, 10-15, 7-15, 13-15
McHenry over Harper, 2-15, 7-15, 8-15

FOOTBALL

Volleyball Season Ends

By Peter Soby
Sports Editor

In losing the last match of the season and being eliminated in the first round of the sectional tournament the Hawks volleyball team still ended their season on a positive note. Three players from the team, Janice Word, Sharon Ahern and Carla Beasley, received Honorable Mention Awards from the NSC Conference.

Last Tuesday the Hawks lost to Wright College 7-15, 12-15, 13-15 despite excellent blocking and defensive play by Beasley and Susan Hoffmeyer. The scores were kept close by a strong offensive attack led by Word and Ahern.

In the NJCAA Sectional Tournament over the weekend, the Hawks faced a tough McHenry Community College team. McHenry had finished first in the Skyway Conference, were number one seed in the tournament and went on to win the tournament. Even though it was a mismatched first round, the Hawks played a tough match. Coach Julie Ellefson Kuehn said, "The final scores didn't justify how hard we played." The Hawks definitely earned their points. Final scores were 2-15, 7-15, 8-15.

Next week we will run a Hawks volleyball and tennis season overview.

$40 stolen from Student Activities

By Jeff Freebus
News Editor

A Harper student will be tried before Dr. Bonnie Henry, vice president of student affairs, or the Student Conduct Committee for violating the student Conduct Code.

He is being charged with stealing $40 from the Student Activities' pool funds on November 9.

"On November 9 at 5:22p.m. Public Safety was contacted by two student employees of the Student Activities office who stated that $40 in cash had been taken from a petty cash box in the Student Activities Office. The box had apparently been left unattended for n few minutes," said Kevin King, supervisor of public safety.

"The student workers had provided Public Safety with the name of the Harper student they suspected had taken the money," added King.

According to King, the student admitted to his involvement in the theft when Public Safety officers located and questioned him.

"The $40 was recovered from the student," said King.

"The case has been referred to the Vice President of Student Affairs in accordance with provisions of the Harper College Student Conduct Code. The name of the student suspected is being withheld because the case is still pending before the Student Conduct Committee," added King.

According to the Harper Student Handbook of 1988-1989, the student will inform the Vice President of Student Affairs in writing as to whom he elects to conduct the hearing within five days of when he is informed of the charges against him.

If it has been determined that the student violated the Student Code of Conduct, the Vice President of Student Affairs is authorized to place a written reprimand, suspend or expel the student from college or programs, and/or bar or condition the student from re-enrollment in the college which the handbook also states.

Dr. Bonnie Henry added, "It (penalty) depends on the evidence that is presented."

Employment Fair 1988 "a great success!": 59 Representatives offer jobs

By James Lambston
Staff Writer

Did you see it? Well if you didn't then you missed out at Harper College help in first ever "Employment Fair 1988" in the lounge of building A between 10a.m. and 1p.m.

Representatives from 59 major companies visited to talk to students and residents about job opportunities, internships, and career possibilities. Chris Kranz, a Job Placement Specialist in the College Placement Office, was a sponsor of the fair.

"The fair was a great success! We were able to get a large number of big-name companies from many different fields and sectors who had a variety of jobs to offer. In addition, they were also willing to talk to students and residents, who are not currently job searching, about their own companies, their fields, and future job opportunities," said Kranz.

"We felt that in putting the Employment Fair together two needs had to be addressed. First, the large number of requests by companies to visit the campus and, second the requests of the students to simplify the job search, gain access to big-name companies, and obtain career information."

"By the large turnout of students and residents, the flood of requests for reserved spaces by companies other than those who attended (70 more requests!), and the requests for a future employment fair," claimed Kranz, "we were successful in addressing the concerns of all." Anyone who attended the Fair or happened to be walking through Building A on November 9, can attest to that fact.

The building was crowded by 800-1,000 students and residents, as well as the blizzard of company representatives. Corporate giants, such as Kraft, Inc., Abbott Laboratories, Motorola, Prudential, Commonwealth Edison, Honeywell, Household Finance, Northrop and AT&T, to the equally impressive Hyatt Regency Woodfield, Paddock Publications, The Daily Herald, Alexian Brothers, McDonald's Corporation, The Hamilton, Caldwell Banker, and all four branches of the military participated.

"Because this was the first time we've attempted such an event, we tried to keep it small. We invited only local companies, those who had jobs to offer, those who advertise on our job board in A 347, and those who support the Harper College Foundation," explained Kranz.

"To be honest, we were surprised by the number of job seekers and their level of education. Many had advanced degrees."

The only drawback to the fair was the timing. Held during the middle of the fall semester, many students were not ready to begin jobs. According to Kranz, "The Employment Fair is better-suited for the spring semester. Students graduate or can accept summer employment, taking full advantage of the many jobs and internships."

In response to this need Kranz and the Director of Placement, Russ Mills, are planning another, bigger, annual fair for the spring. Students and residents can find jobs and internships, while companies locate good workers and fill their needs.

"These fairs really save a lot of leg work for job seekers," said Kranz. "It also offers them an informal way of talking to companies and interviewing without the normal burdens and pressures of having to go through the normal process of setting up interviews and going to the companies to talk."

Among the other contributions to the fair were the young Corporate Achievers. This Student Activities' Club volunteered to help the corporate representatives find their tables, set-up, and locate the hospitality rooms.

Kranz remarked, "We couldn't have done it without them. We're thinking about asking for their help to plan and market the fair in the future." He added, "We're also looking for any other students or residents to help organize the fair. It is a worthwhile experience and a valuable opportunity to interface with employers on a less formal level."

Anyone interested in volunteering for the Spring Employment Fair, or wanting to know more about the Harper College Placement Office, can call 397-3000, ext. 2720, or stop in at the Career Planning and Placement Office located in Building A 347.

Speech Team takes sixth

By Tori Vaughn
Staff Writer

The Harper College Speech Team brought home its first team trophy of the year at the tournament on November 11 and 12. The tournament took place in Decatur, Illinois at Richland Community College.

Out of 16 schools, Harper's team placed sixth overall thanks to the efforts of the members.

Other schools in the top five were North Central College, Eastern Illinois University, Illinois Central College and in first place College of DuPage.

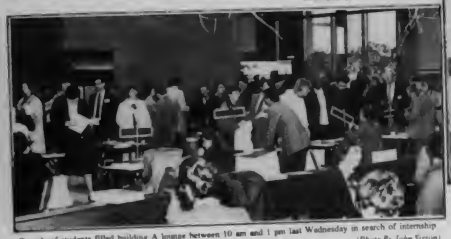

Linda Lang won three trophies at this tournament, taking a first in Informative Speaking. A second-year member of the team, she also won fourth place awards for both Persuasive Speaking and Communication Analysis.

An excellent job was also done by Rosemary Langer, a first-year member, who took a second place Informative Speaking trophy and a special mention in Impromptu Speaking.

The fourth place Informative Speaking trophy was captured by Cathy Ma, a first-year member of the team.

Other Harper students contributing to the victory were Kelly Jennings in Prose reading, Peter Lindstrom in Informative Speaking, Scott Nerdl in Prose Reading and Duet Acting, Doug Ray in Prose Reading, and Tari Vaughn in Duet Acting.

Hildebrandt

the paralegal president

By Michele Ostrowski
Features Editor

"I have something important to bring at an educator," stresses Sharrie Hildebrandt, President elect of the American Association for Paralegal Education (AAPE).

Breaking into an organization mainly composed of lawyers, Hildebrandt, herself a paralegal, ran for and won the president's position during the thirteenth national conference of the Association held October 12-16 in Orlando Florida.

Besides being an associate professor at Harper and coordinator of its Legal Technology Program, Hildebrandt is one of the founding members of the AAPE and has served on the association board for two years.

In addition to attending sundry committee meetings, Hildebrandt co-hosted the 1986 national conference in Seattle - gathering subject material and having speakers for the event.

"I've been called upon in one capacity or another and last year they asked me to run," commented Hildebrandt.

In itself the AAPE acts as a disseminator of paralegal programs, opinions and innovations.

The Association is a conglomerate of the various paralegal groups and covers "all areas of paralegal education," boasts Hildebrandt.

Some affiliate member groups include National Association of Legal Assistants (NALA), National Federation of Paralegal Associations (NFPA) and Legal Assistant managers Association (LAMA).

For example the AAFPE addressed the situation of "uniformity of text books - in the 70's everyone was doing their own thing."

"It [the situation] was getting out of hand," states Hildebrandt. "I felt it was time to run; we're moving into another decade."

"We're moving into a technological age...we need to keep on top," emphasizes the president elect.

The Harper Legal Technology Program has served as a model for programs established at other colleges nationwide.

At the conference, Hildebrandt presented a seminar on "Teaching Adjunct Faculty To Teach" based on the Harper model.

The college's program is a two-year degree including general education courses and ten legal specialty courses.

Subject matter includes "the process and substance of legal research featuring problem solving and case studies," informs Hildebrandt.

"The students will also learn legal writing and document processing."

Other topics covered in the program are as follows: family law, litigation, property law, probate, income taxation, corporate and securities law and community law.

The Legal Technology Program was established at Harper in the fall of 1972.

Many graduates are working in area law firms and legal departments of corporations, governmental units and organizations.

These paralegals are assistants to attorneys whom Hildebrandt likens to dental hygienists.

"In law there is always a crises and in such a situation the paralegal would step in.

It's like a dental hygienist who cleans your teeth - does the ground work so when the dentist comes in the last five minutes, all he has to say is 'Hmmm that filling looks like it needs to be replaced, I'll need to see you next week'."

Hildebrandt sees the role of a paralegal as the ground breaker - the one who gets the facts after the lawyer hears the client's history.

Paralegals have an added bonus, "Since lawyers almost priced themselves out of the market, paralegals can be seen as a more cost effective legal approach, more efficient and economical," observes Hildebrandt.

Associate Professor Hildebrandt arms her students with a special code word "Gathering information, Organizing, Drafting documents, Interviewing and follow through - I call it my GODIF plan."

"One of the important additions to the Harper program has been a seminar for lawyers and practicing paralegals to give them the same computer skills our current students are learning."

The AAFPB conference 'Paralegal Education: Matching Tradition and New Technology' also featured a number of seminars on the use of computers in legal work.

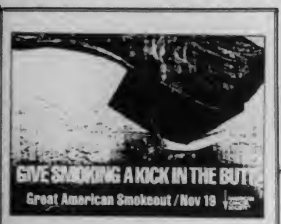

As president-elect of the AAFPE, Hildebrandt will be responsible for membership this year. "I hope for more membership than ever."

She will assume the presidency at the '89 national conference in St. Louis. Under her leadership, Hildebrandt hopes to find "the best of the newest - I'm excited about gathering together!"

Taking on this presidency is a three-year job and takes a tremendous amount of energy.

Presently, Hildebrandt is on a one year sabbatical from Harper to devote her full time to the Association.

For information on the Harper program or about an admission packet to the program, call Harper College Admissions Office 397-3000 X2500.

Help Your Heart

Winter Weather Wisdom

American Heart Association

Frigid weather strikes almost every corner of the U. S.

The American Heart Association says your health could be at stake if you don't take some precautions to guard against the ravages of Old Man Winter.

Common sense tells us to bundle up when it's blustery outside. That means dressing from the feet up, including your head.

A hat or scarf around your head helps to prevent heat loss from your body. Most heat is lost through the top of your head.

Protect your ears and hands, too, since they are particularly susceptable to frostbite.

You may remember that as a child you had to pile layer upon layer of clothing on before playing in the snow. Such dress afforded little freedom of movement during snowball battles or sleigh rides.

Today lightweight, well-insulated active wear is fashionable and comfortable for outside activities, as long as you still layer your clothing to provide 'pockets' of warm air.

A moderate outdoor exercise program can be maintained during the winter if you dress properly and pay attention to weather conditions.

Stay informed of weather forecasts and travel reports. Exposure to icy winds, snow, freezing rain and cold temperatures steals your body's heat.

TURKEY, n.

1. (Fowl) Dumb bird that gets stuffed on Thanksgiving.

2. (Homo sapiens) Dumb bird that gets stuffed on Thanksgiving.

(Source, The I Hate to Diet Dictionary by Sandra Bergeson)

Here are a few tips on how not to stuff yourself like a Thanksgiving turkey.

• Don't "starve" until dinner. Eat a light breakfast and, before the main meal, drink a low calorie beverage or cup of bouillon to take the edge off your appetite.

• While watching football on TV, occupy your hands with knitting, playing games with family members, etc. instead of snacking.

• If you must snack, eat foods that take time to eat, such as an orange that has to be peeled, nuts that must be shelled, other fruits and vegetables, or unbuttered popcorn.

• Sip beverages slowly--don't gulp.

• Include exercise as part of your holiday activities--take a walk with your favorite relative.

• Before you sit down at the dinner table, decide what is your favorite food and eat it first. Then select only those other foods that you really want.

• Take small portions and space them out on your plate.

• Eat slowly--chew each bite well and savor its flavor. After each third mouthful, place your fork and knife on the plate until you have swallowed that mouthful. You will feel satisfied after eating less.

• If you envy something someone else is eating, or "you must taste Aunt Susie's sweet potato/marshmallow casserole", take only a teaspoonful.

• Put leftovers away immediately--allow no time for "picking" or "one last morsel".

• Finally, help with the dishes! Your hostess will appreciate it.

TURKEY, n.

3. (Slang) Dumb bird that makes human mistakes... and doesn't try again.

There's a bit of turkey in all of us. Living involves learning... and learning involves making mistakes. So we should never hesitate to say, "I'm sorry, I'm human; I made a mistake."

Just as we would never criticize a toddler for stumbling, we should be kind to fellow human beings who, like ourselves, are doing the best they can at the moment.

This Thanksgiving, we toast the "turkey" in all of us. Success, they say, is simply a matter of getting up one more time than you fall down.

Here's a few more "turkeys" who made good:

• Movie reviewer and author, Gene Shalit, was told he would never get a job on network TV because "American won't accept someone who looks like that."

• After dropping out of college, going to India, and shaving his head, Steven Jobs returned to the U.S. at age 21 and helped launch the personal computer industry. At age 25, he was worth $100 million.

• Margaret Mitchell wrote the first chapter of "Gone with the Wind" 71 times.

• When turning down the Beatles in 1962, Decca Recording Company said, "We don't like their sound. Groups of guitars are on the way out."

Heart

The wind is especially dangerous if it strips away the warm layer of air around your body.

When a meteorologist gives you the wind chill factor, dress according to the factor level rather than the air temperature.

The American Heart Association points out that as you grow older, your body's thermostat may not be as effective as it once was.

As a result, you may not adjust to the cold weather by adequately raising body temperature. If your temperature slips too low, heart failure and even death can result.

A person in poor physical shape may require more oxygen for the heart. If you're not used to strenuous physical exertion, don't attempt to lift a heavy shovel full of snow.

The combination of sudden physical exertion and the cold increases the heart's work load. The heart must work harder to pump blood through narrower arteries, due to the cold weather's effect on the arteries.

It's natural for some of the arteries to narrow when it's cold as a means to maintain body temperature.

But the cold can spell danger to persons with arteries already narrowed due to fatty deposits in the arteries.

Too much strain on the heart during these conditions could cause a hear attack.

With the approval of your physician try starting a moderate exercise program if you are inactive.

By next year, you may be able to enjoy the winter weather with increased tolerance of its effects.

If you have a history of coronary heart disease, you should seed your doctor's permission before shoveling snow or exerting yourself in cold weather.

Good sense goes a long way in staying healthy during cold winter days. The American Heart Association agrees with the old adage, "Have sense enough to come in out of the cold."

I can't hear you!

Good communication skills can solve thousand dollar problems

French?! On the third floor of F building a class temporarily passes through the Twilight Zone. As the television in the room clears, it shows the Eiffel Tower, the Louvre, and many other famous French landmarks.

The teacher instructs us to take notes, but my pencil tip is broken. I return...half an hour later (I finally found a sharpener on the first floor), but I can't see the screen. The curtains drooping down allow the sunlight (what little there's been) to shine through, creating a glare on the screen.

After the presentation, the instructor begins conjugating verbs on the chalk board. The board suffers from the same affliction the television does, and is compounded by poor overhead lighting.

Unfortunately, F building is not alone. Many rooms across campus are plagued by the same symptoms.

And then...the Board of Trustees awarded the bid to McFarland Business Interiors to refurnish the President's office with new furniture for $8, 816.19.

My first reaction was to question the priorities of the Board of Trustees. In preparation for my editorial, I interviewed Mr. Vern Manke, vice president of administrative services. I asked him for some budgetary figures and listed my complaints.

"Why are pencil sharpeners few and far between?!" I asked.

"This is the first time the question has been raised....If they're not there, they're not there because no one has asked for them," he explained. He added there is more than enough room in the budget for the President's furniture and classroom repair.

One common error made by members of families, social groups and companies is the failure to communicate. The sender (the student) runs into interference (obstacles) and the message (complaints and suggestions) is cut off before it gets to the receiver (Mr. Manke).

In other words, if we don't yell loud enough and to the right people, we can't expect any action to be taken.

Student Trustee Laura Jacobson identified this problem and has offered a solution. Three SCIQ boxes are located strategically around campus: A building near the Senate Office, J building near the Box Office and F building near Media Circulation.

Laura and I will review Student Comments, Ideas, and Questions regularly and address the concerns in the paper.

Your concerns are the concerns of the administration and will not be ignored. Mr. Manke has assured me, within one week, pencil sharpeners will be installed and curtains in F building will be evaluated.

Your responsibility does not end with your complaints to us about every little thing you see around campus. Attend Board of Trustees meetings and keep up on the issues. Offer suggestions and emphasize strengths that can be maintained and improved upon.

It's not like the Electoral College where your vote gets watered down. If there are legitimate concerns, they will be heard and addressed. If nothing can be done immediately, we will offer an explanation and perhaps a temporary solution.

Off Her Rocker

By Liz Brousseau
Staff Columnist

Today was another one of those dreadful days. The type of day we students have all suffered. A day when I was once again afflicted with a creative block. I just didn't know what I was going to do, so I decided "Hey, what the heck, you sprayed your oven last night, why not go ahead and clean it out?"

Now I know, as well as anybody else when great writers are looking for inspiration, the last place they look is in the oven.

Before I learned that valuable lesson I thought, I need to clean the oven today, so I can kill two birds with one stone: one, I could poke around getting those creative juices flowing, and two, my oven would end up clean.

In this attempt, I discovered three things:

1. Never clean the oven during a creative block.

and

2. Never clean the oven during a creative block.

3. Never clean the oven during a creative block.

Some of you may be thinking they all look kind of similar. Well let me assure you, they are. This is because:

First, you should never clean the oven during a creative block, because the creative juice which flows into your brainstream is directly indigenous to the smell of the oven cleaner in your oven.

Here is a sample of the product of my brainstorm. In today's era of denim and sweats, we see housewives portrayed in television commercials wearing clothing that is almost appropriate for performing the task which is being represented. However, some of you may remember a day when this was not entirely true.

In the sixties and early seventies, television watchers saw housewives in advertisements mopping floors, scouring toilet bowls, and yes, even cleaning the dreaded oven. However, the moms of yesteryear were portrayed performing these tasks in garments such as a petunia pink satin, tailored waisted, full skirted, puffy shouldered house dress.

And so I pictured myself cleaning the oven in a dress like the one I have described and I thought to myself, "My god, I wouldn't even be seen scrubbing the bathroom floors with a toothbrush in one of those get-ups.

What followed this train of thoughts was a slew of ideas on what kind of inappropriate clothing I could be cleaning my house in. Such as, a burgandy, tea length gown with white gloves, a mini green chintz with silk stockings and silver heels, or a dropped waisted, full skirted, khaki gabardine with matching boots.

As my wish list grew larger and larger, I began to experience an uncontrollable desire to go shopping, and not at the corner K-mart. The whole scene became so hideous, I had to stop cleaning the oven.

Which brings me to point number two. You should never clean the oven during a creative block because you will probably never get the oven clean.

Finally, this brings me to point number three. Never clean the oven.

If I were to follow through with the shopping I dreamed of doing while I had my head in the oven, it would cost me a fortune. I could save tons of money if I just threw the oven away and buy a new one. Too bad they don't make disposable ovens.

This leaves me with a very tough choice between a clean oven, new clothes and an empty bank book, or a new oven, no new clothes and a nearly empty bank book.

Trust me, shopping for an oven is terribly boring. How about if we just meet downtown on State Street, we could do lunch.

R.E.M. "Green" is a winner

by Steve Hill
Staff Writer

Warner Brothers Rec/Cass/CD

The highlight of Election Day this year was not standing in line to cast a vote, but the release of the new R.E.M. album. Green was their first release on Warner Brothers label.

I think I'll tackle the negative side first. Green is definitely not their best album (Fables of the Reconstruction continues to hold that honor.) It's not even as good as their last release, Document.

Believe it or not, it's actually less accessible than that 1987 album. This might delight long time R.E.M. fans who may have thought that the band finally sold out. But even after all this negative criticism, the album is still an excellent collection of new material.

Pop Song 89 leads off the album strongly (but not as powerfully as Finest Worksong did on Document). It's got a guitar riff that keeps reminding me of a song by That Petrol Emotion.

Track R (R') More in a moment. It is my current favorite. It's called Stand and features a catchy lyric by Michael Stipe, who has at long last made his singing intelligible.

You Are the Everything and Hairshirt are two slow-tempo songs, the latter being especially emotive. The Wrong Child nearly goes overboard with the R.E.M. trademark of layered lyrics with Stipe's backup vocals mixed just as loud as his lead vocal.

World Leader Pretend is another highlight, and apparently the band thought so too. It is the first R.E.M. song to ever have the lyrics printed in the liner notes. Orange Crush, the first single, is a slight step backward in style for an R.E.M. single, and I give it all the more praise because of it.

Now for the curiosities of the album (or in this case, the CD). Over the letters 'R' in both the band name and album title you can see the number '4' printed in glossy finish, whereas the rest of the cover is not glossy.

Then the fourth track has the letter 'R' instead of the number 4 on it. I am looking forward to hearing some sort of an explanation for this.

Finally, there are ten tracks listed on the sleeve, but there are actually 11 songs on the disc. On the surface of the CD itself, a number 11 is shown but there is no song title. The song itself is more reminiscent of earlier R.E.M. than recent material.

R.E.M. continues to be one of the best bands in the world. The change in record labels seems to have had little or no change in the band or its music.

Bill Berry, Peter Buck, Mike Mills, and Michael Stipe are still evolving in many ways. The music has gotten a little bit more political and a little bit more emotional. It hasn't truly gotten BETTER, but then, having been so good to begin with, why risk trying TOO hard?

Rating out of 5: 4.

Garner performs magic to a full house

By Alisa Chhitwood
Staff Writer

The A-building lounge, and the third floor balconies were filled to capacity when magician/comedian Bob Garner performed at noon last Monday.

Garner astonished crowds earlier that morning with his sleight-of-hand pre-show. He "teased" students in the cafeteria, pool room and lounge. He enticed students into watching his performance by combining sharp wit with tricks such as making coins vanish and reappear, and changing the suit, type or color of playing cards.

Garner often finds good volunteers during "teasers."

"I don't look for people who volunteer, or who look too attentively at props. I look for people who are friendly, happy and enjoy having fun," said Garner.

The "teasers" ended and the show commenced, following some production music. Garner appeared and the magic began. He opened by transforming the flames in a silver serving platter into a parakeet.

From the start, the audience was hooked. They laughed at Garner's jokes and responded when Garner paused. Early in the show Garner explained that "card tricks can be dangerous." Amy, the willing participant had selected a card. During one point in the act, Garner pulled out "Billy The Buckknife". The audience verbally responded when asked what would be impaled - either the card or Amy.

During one of Garner's tricks, he proceeded to swallow a handful of needles. He issued this warning to children: "Don't put needles in your mouth for fear of swallowing them. Kids please don't try this at home." He then proceeded to slowly swallow a string of thread as if it were a piece of spaghetti. The audience roared.

Of course, Garner included "magic of the mind". He picked three volunteers. One was actually selected from the third floor balcony. His audience was baffled as he chose the same name, city and playing card as his participants.

For the finale, Garner allowed Denise, a victim from the audience, to request her own destiny. With Garner's gift for phrasing questions, he let Denise ask to be sawed in half with a Black and Decker sabersaw. And she survived to tell about it.

Garner transformed his form of humor and magic into an artform. The audience was attentive, active, and excited by Garner's talent.

SERVANT LEAVES 'EM LAUGHING

College production a must-see

Truffaldino with his two masters: L to R Truffaldino (Kirk Sanders), Beatrice (Margaret Rathke), and Florindo (Dana Logsdon).

By Tari Vaughn
Staff Writer

The lights go down, and the crowd is silent for a few moments. Then the sound of applause fills the theatre, and continues as the actors file back on stage for a well deserved round of applause.

This is what happened during the curtain call when Harper's production of The Servant of Two Masters, a play by Carlo Goldoni, opened last weekend.

The play centers around two sets of lovers, Clarice (Dann Squier) and Silvio (Curt Phillips) and Beatrice (Margaret Rathke) and Florindo (Dana Logsdon).

As the play opens, Clarice and Silvio are announcing their engagement. The young lovers' celebration is disrupted by the entrance of Federigo Rasponi. Clarice was previously engaged to Federigo until her father heard news of his death.

Upon Federigo arrival, Clarice's father, Pantalone (Harold LeBoyer), cancels the engagement to Silvio so that he may keep his earlier promise to Federigo. Silvio and his father, Dr. Lombardi (Tony Kortas) vow that justice will be done.

Clarice is less than excited by the arrival of her soon-to-be husband, until her fears are laid to rest by Federigo. He confides to her that he is not really Federigo, but his sister Beatrice.

Beatrice has come to Venice dressed as her brother to collect the money Pantalone owes Federigo, who was killed by her lover, Florindo (Dana Logsdon), in a swordfight. Beatrice has heard that Florindo has fled to Venice, and she is trying to find him.

Beatrice might have found him much sooner if it weren't for her servant, Truffaldino (Kirk Sanders). Truffaldino is moonlighting as a servant to Florindo. In the traditional Comedia dell' Arte style, Truffaldino manages to make a big mess of the situation, but it all works out in the end.

Undoubtably the most exciting scene in the show is the swordfight between Beatrice/Federigo and Silvio. The scene manages to be both thrilling and funny under the choreography of Roland C. Meyer.

Mary Jo Willis has done an excellent job of directing the play. The added comic "bits" add to the already humorous plot of the show.

The only problem with the show was a few of these comic "bits". While the Comedia dell' Arte style is an exaggerated form of theatre, I felt that some of these "bits" were a little too overdone to be believable.

The cast of the show also does a wonderful job. Sanders, in the lead role, has an excellent sense of comic timing and plays up the humor in various situations.

Rathke is very believable as a woman trying to portray a man. She also displays a great sensitivity in her love for Florindo and her friendship to Clarice.

As the star-crossed lovers of the show, Squiers and Phillips are innocent and absolutely charming.

A special mention needs to go to LeBoyer, Kortas, and Dan Dudych as Brighella. They were all very funny and creative with their roles as the buffoons of the show.

Other cast members include Jennie Sartore as Smeraldina, Maurice Stone as the head waiter, and Todd Davidson and Brendon Foley as the waiters.

The sets, under the direction of Michael Brown, and costumes, designed by Joan Ladendorf and Carla Saichell, were also excellent and very appropriate for the period.

If you missed the show last weekend, you still have another chance. Be sure to catch it either Friday, Nov. 18 or Saturday, Nov. 19. Tickets are $3 for Harper students and $5 for the public. For tickets or more information, call the Harper Box Office at 397-3000 ext. 2547.

Kirk Sanders as Truffaldino plays up the part with a wonderful sense of timing and humor.

The Healer--

By Peder Sweeney

I entered the emergency room with an anxious but lucid mind, my enfeebled right hand clutched in my healthy left. From nowhere a nurse descended upon me.

"May I help you?" she asked, smiling as if the world were a sunny day.

"Yes," I replied, "I need a doctor."

"Okey-dokey," she said over-brightly and directed me to a chair that was not a doctor.

Another woman, this one decked out in civilian garb, sat at a computer console across from me and began pumping me for information. Slowly and methodically, she gleaned from me every tiny speck of datum worthy of triplication. About the only topic that failed to merit her attention was the nature of the ailment that would cause a strappin' lad such as myself to seek emergency medical treatment. I must have looked a bit sickly, though, because she was particularly intent on ascertaining my religion and next of kin.

"Now comes the good part" she said with what passes in medical circles for wit, "how will you pay for treatment?"

(Do you accept live chickens?)

"I have insurance."

It was another hour before I could document that fact to her satisfaction. I produced copies of policies and cancelled premium checks, credit history printouts, financial statements and so forth, but it was my super-solemn, honest-promise, pay-ya-back or hope-to-die that finally turned the trick.

(I had my fingers crossed, bitch!)

I joked that they should inject a time-release poison into the bloodstreams of patients and not provide the antidote until all balances were paid in full. She didn't laugh, she just stared off into the distance as a slight smile played across her lips.

Unable to bear anymore of my pitiful moaning, she inquired as to my complaint.

(A severed artery, you homocidal bureaucrat!!!)

"I have a splinter in my thumb."

She tactfully aborted the guffaw that her throat was processing and donned the furrowed brow of concern.

"It's infected," I explained, "there's a big blister and it's full of liquid."

(PUS! Oodles and oodles of PUS!!!)

She spoke as she typed: "Splinter in thumb."

(Dammit woman! Have you no adjectives?)

"Yes, that's right."

(Bloated! Engorged! Mangled!)

She led me to a partitioned treatment area and told me that a doctor would be forthcoming. The doctor that eventually came forth did so in the body of a woman.

"Hello," she said, "I'm Dr. Monica, call me Debbie."

(Debbie Monica? D. Monica? Dr. Demonica!)

(Sure Deb. And you can call me long distance.)

"Why don't you relax a little and show me what's wrong. It says here you've hurt your thumb."

"Yes," I said, holding them both out, "one of these."

She did her alma mater proud by correctly selecting the thumb with the glaring wound. Any doubts I may have harbored regarding her fitness as a physician soon vanished when she began sadistically probing the afflicted area. Only a trained professional could induce so much agony with so little effort. What I had previously believed to be a simple infection, this woman had quickly elevated to my World Center for Humanly Knowable Pain. Suddenly, my thumb, which I had always taken for granted, was the center of my universe--the sun from which the white heat in my brain emanated. Nothing else existed for me as this chatty, grinning she-spawn from the loins of hell ignited time and again scores of fresh pink nerve endings with her germ encrusted crimson fingernails.

Through veils of sweat and waves of agony, the learned healer's words came through to me:

"You're right, it's infected."

My relief at having reached the end of so hideous a journey was immediately dashed by the sight of Dr. Demonica loading up that old nazi standby, a syringe. "This is for the pain," she said, and nothing could have been more true. Pain never had a more gung-ho advocate than Demonica. She lifted the needle high over head in a manner reminiscent of a high-priestess at the sacrificial altar and plunged it down into my twitching, virgin thumb.

It took me about eight millionths of a second to decide that a long, high-pitched scream would be the appropriate response to this megadose of negative stimuli, so I gave it a whirl:

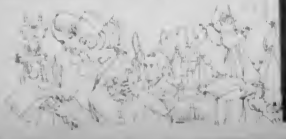

"AAAAAIIIIIIIIIIIEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEE!!!!!!!!!!!!"

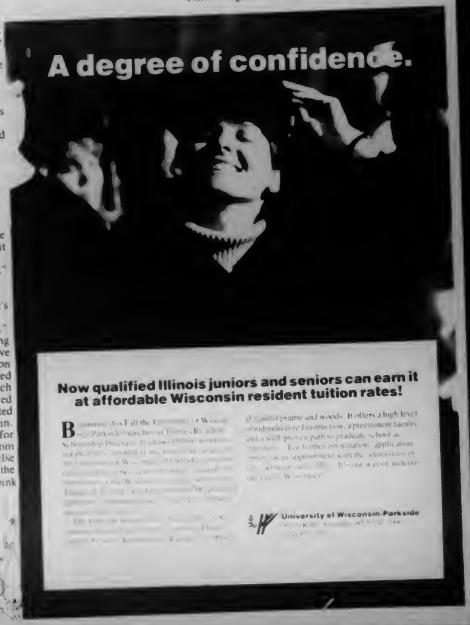

Debbie the Impaler seemed encouraged by my discomfort, so she swooped in for a second strike.

I gladly welcomed her next hypodermic assault as it gave me the opportunity to work some bugs out of my scream. My previous scream had been fine as first attempts go, but I think we both saw a good deal of room for improvement. Demonica rose to the challenge like the true champion of misery she was and drove the needle not only through my thumb, but through the stainless steel treatment table as well. After a brief pause for effect, she added zest to her already impressive feat by grinding the syringe in long, slow circles.

This time my scream reached proportions for which I had not dared hope. Earsplitting but well-timbered, and so loud as to knock Demonica back three steps into a medicine cabinet. My throat was raw and my thumb mutilated, but the applause from the nurses station and waiting area made it all seem worthwhile.

I lit two cigarettes and passed her one.

88-89 Wrestling Preview

Sandeno Palmer
Staff Writer

"Wrestlemania is back! However there won't be a Rick Flair, Jake the Snake, or Hulk Hogan. The wrestlers I am writing about are the Harper Hawks wrestling team. The Hawks are just as competative, but in better shape and twice as smart. Maybe you haven't heard, but they are conditioning rigorously and working harder than ever to try and fulfill what appears to be a very exciting season.

The Hawks are coming off a real good season last year. They placed many wrestlers in various weight classes. Rick Huffman and Jim Smith led the way by taking first place in Region IV 190 lb. and Heavy weight classes respectively, however, neither wrestler will return this year to guide our Hawks. The two wrestlers who are returning from last year and will provide the guidance and strength to lead a young team are Brad Carlig, and Mark Cecchi. Cecchi took third in region IV (177 lb weight class) last year. Cecchi now weighs in at 190 lbs. and says, " I will meet my weight requirement by December." For now, he will wrestle at his present weight just to be a contender. Like most of the other wrestlers, he said " One definite goal of mine would be to place in a tournament." Last year he was a National Qualifyer, just two matches from being an All American. He was almost one of the top wrestlers in the United States in his weight class.

In the NJCAA, there are ten weight classes from a mere 118 lbs. to a walleping 275 lbs. Harper rounds out the weight classes with Matt Phelps and Matt Gorman starting the lighter weights, and David Collins ending the heavy weights. Coach Norm Lovelace said at a practice, " I feel the team has better than average kids with good talent, and most of the team is made up of freshman. Some of them placed in State tournaments for their high schools. Some of the incoming talent that coach Lovelace said, "I feel good solid support will come from, includes Eric Bakey, Jason Funicane, Rob Malecke, Rey Villar, Kevin Harris, and Don Baldassano. He also mentioned Steve Rokusek (a present Harper football player) as a hopeful candidate for the heavyweight division.

I watched the wrestling team practicing during the week and just to say they worked hard wouldn't be enough. The physical strength and endurance they go through at each of their practice, could easily have the average person panting, and flat on their face with exhaustion. I would even venture to say that two-to-three minutes of all out wrestling would wear the average person completely out! That's why wrestlers have to be in top physical condition. it is a necessity in order to be formidable competion.

There is a growing interest in wrestling around the country today more than ever. More people are getting involved, both as an active participant and as a fan. One fact remains about the Harper wrestlers and that is that they haven't been getting enough support from their community. Last year I was at a Saturday match, and a depressing figure of approximately 15 people looked on to cheer the team. Hopefully, that's all in the past and things will change this year.

Unlike the World Wrestling Federation, you won't see one opponent wrapping an iron bar around another's neck, nor the smashing of a chair in someone's cranium. Hold on though! Body slams do exist! When one man lifts another one up and slams him to the mat?? wrestling is very exciting to watch.

The Harper Invite on January 14 is the only regularly scheduled home meet. Any sporting event held at home is advantageous for the team because of the support of the crowd. Grab a friend and come on out on Saturday, January 14 for the first home match. Let's show this year's team that we are a team. They deserve it. See you there.

Sandeno's outlook: With such a young team, the wrestlers will have to fight hard to be contenders. They will have to overcome the adversity of being a college team with little school support due to having just one home invite. I look forward to a promising year.

VICTORY!!

Hawks Slide Past DuPage

by Sandy Salvatore
Staff Writer

"On the road again, just can't wait to get on the road again."

Yes, you guessed it. The Hawks are on their way to the RC Cola Bowl. A direct result of the Hawks mud-slinging the College of DuPage (COD) Chaparrals 11-8.

The last time these two teams played, Harper slipped by COD 24-23. In that game, with 1:03 remaining and COD at Harper's 42, COD quarterback Curt Miller threw a strike to Lance Lewis. Jeff Topel tackled Lewis, knocked the ball loose and Steve Turzynski recovered it at Harper's 25.

Last Saturday's game also turned out to be a close call for the Hawks.

The Chaps took the lead when Darin Cleveland could not get his hands on the ball to punt it away. Cleveland's muffed punt was recovered in the end zone by the Chaps for a safety.

Curt Miller gave the Chaparrals an 8-point lead when he connected with Phil Sevier from 33 yards out. The two-point conversion try left the Chaparrals awestruck when Joe Belcher intercepted Miller's pass for a 95-yard conversion return.

"I had outside contain on the coverage, and the running back was going outside. So, I had to make sure that nothing got outside of me," commented Belcher. "The quarterback went to throw, and someone came up from behind and hit him (Miller). That helped the ball get down, and I was at the right place at the right time."

The Hawks evened the score at 8, when freshman Steve Roukusek recovered Miller's fumble just after Chaparral Carlos Craig intercepted an Al Snyder pass. Roukusek's recovery led to a Snyder to Neil Bullock 25-yard touchdown. After that scoring, both teams failed to put points on the board in regulation time.

The game finally ended in dramatic fashion during the third overtime. After some tough defensive stands by both teams, Harper drove within striking distance and Eric Bannon converted on a 19-yard field goal.

Correction: In last weeks article, BIG GAME OUTLOOK, Scott Miller's nickname is not "the BATHROOM BOOMER". It is "the BATHROOM BOMBER."

88-89 WOMEN'S BASKETBALL PREVIEW

by Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

For Women's Head Basketball Coach Tom Teschner, the 1988-89 season will be a rebuilding year. Only 6'1" sophomore center Pascale O'Donoghue from Schaumburg returns. Last year, the team was a 15-12 squad that took the runner-up spot in the N4C. They were eliminated by Sauk Valley in the Sectional Tournament 69-68, when the Lady Hawks missed a lay-up at the buzzer.

On the other hand, Teschner may not have to call it a rebuilding year. O'Donoghue provides one heck of a scoring punch. She averaged a little bit over 21 points a game last season, including a 50-point performance against Joliet. She earned second team All N4C honors. All-Region honors and she broke three school records: High score for a single game, most points scored for one season, and most points scored in a conference season.

"It was a good honor for her to make All-Region after we didn't even make the region tournament. Usually, they're named for people whose teams played in the tournament," Teschner said.

The remainder of O'Donoghue's supporting cast will be 6'1" Patty Canchola from Mt. Prospect, 5'7" Kim Noonan from Hoffman Estates, 5'7" Karen Presti from Schaumburg, 5'6" Monica Prerovsky from Schaumburg, 5'7" Amy Kozsol from Mt. Prospect, 5'9" Jennifer Stasch from Hoffman Estates, 5'4" Joann Scardina from Des Plaines, 5'8" Karen Armitage from Wheeling, 5'11" Kellie Dennis from Schaumburg and 5'5" Lisa Nowak from Buffalo Grove.

O'Donoghue, Presti, and Prerovsky will be reunited for the first time since 1987 when they played on a Schaumburg High School team that was the school's first 20 game winner, and a regional Champion. "It'll be great because we know each other, and we know what each other can do," O'Donoghue said.

Teschner states the Lady Hawks outlook for this year. "We're inexperienced, but we have good size and quick guards. Our Conference will be tough this year. Moraine Valley is the defending champion and has almost everybody back. Illinois Valley is big and has everybody back, and College of DuPage will be good. Hopefully we'll get it together by the time the tournament comes along."

The Lady Hawks will open the season at home, hosting the Harper Thanksgiving Tournament on Friday, November 25th and Saturday, November 26th.

Nunez's Outlook: O'Donoghue must carry the load and show leadership from the opening tip-off until the rest of the team is solidified. Even though it's a rebuilding year, the Lady Hawks will be one tough team come conference time.

HAWKS LOSE OPENER 85-73

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

The Harper Men's Basketball Team's season opened up on a sour note as the Hawks lost to Morton 85-73.

The Panthers were in control, and for the most part out of danger as they were able to stay a step ahead of the Hawks, although early on in both halves it looked like Harper was going to make a game out of it.

In fact, the Hawks were able to take an 18-13 lead with 10:41 remaining in the first half as Freshman Jason Brooks sank a pair of free throws after being fouled by Earnest Mackey of the Panthers.

From then on it was all Morton. A Panther scoring drive led by Lauren Johns, Marvin McGrew, and Mackey; topped off by a vicious slam from Johns; put together 15 unanswered points to put Morton ahead for good at 28-18. The Panthers went into the locker room at halftime leading by 11, 39-28.

In the second half, the Hawks would get no closer than seven at 41-34 with less than two minutes gone by as a result of back-to-back baskets by Kevin Simpson.

"We had the lead at 18-13, and then we couldn't handle the pressure," Head Coach Bill Probst said after the contest.

Being unable to handle the pressure was one thing for sure. The Hawks turned the ball over 38 times, and were only able to shoot 68% from the free throw line.

Johns led Morton with 25 points, Mackey with 18, and McGrew with 15. Simpson paced the Hawks with 14, Brooks followed with 13, and Travis Perry added 12.

The Hawks will try to even up their record at 1-1, when they travel up to McHenry to face the Fightin' Scots at McHenry Community College, Rt. 14 & Lucas Rd., Crystal Lake, tonight at 7:30 p.m.

They then have their home opener against Waubonsee on Saturday night at 7:00 p.m., and another home game against Wheaton on Tuesday night at 7:00 p.m., and then they'll be competing over the Thanksgiving Tournament on Friday November 25th and Saturday November 26th.

Tennis Overview

by Peter Soby
Sports Editor

How can an exceptional season end up in frustration? Ask the Harper Hawks tennis team. They had a strong season with an 11-2 record, and a second place finish in the conference. When they got to Regionals, they missed going to Nationals by a half of a point.

There was a tie between three teams for second place in the Regionals. The Hawks only needed to gain a half of a point for a second place and capture a ticket for Nationals in Arizona. With a chance to gain three and a half points, the team couldn't put it together to gain the half point they needed. Cheryl Piszczek came closest in her match when she lost twice on a tie-breaking serve.

It was indeed a frustrating Regional for the Hawks' tennis team, but they had a great season. Coach Kathy Chamberlain said, "It was an exciting season, we had a good group of hardworkin, girls." Team member Carrie Heisler said, "We did all we could during the season. We won when we should have." This is evident when you look at their season record.

The team also had a standout in Cheryl Piszczek. She was named the Conference MVP. That is a very honorable distinction, since the MVP is chosen by all of the coaches of the teams in the conference.

Kathy Chamberlain was very enthusiastic about the season and is looking forward to next year. She respected her seven players' loyalty and felt that they "definitely deserved the finals." Their spirit and accomplishment during the season were very commendable.

VOLLEYBALL SEASON OVERVIEW

By Peter Soby
Sports Editor

Don't be fooled by the Volleyball team's 0-8 record, last place finish this season. Coach Julie Ellefson said, "The record does not reflect the time and effort that the girls put in." Player Janice Word stated, "We all played 100% and there were a lot of really close games."

That's the problem with any sport. The record never reflects the effort or the inside story. Coach Ellefson was not informed of the position as volleyball coach until about a week before the season started. That was one of the problems. The team barely had any practices together before they were thrust into the season. "We spent our first couple games learning each other's playing styles," said Coach Ellefson.

Other problems the team had was generated by offense and falling behind early in the matches. "They needed to master their sets and passes on offense," commented Coach Ellefson, "and we found ourselves getting behind in the score early and always playing catchup. By the time we were playing strong, the match was lost."

Besides these adversities, Coach Ellefson could not praise her team enough. Even though she would have like a bigger team, she felt the eight girls' play was outstanding. She had something to say about each player: "Janice Word, the team captain, was our best all-around player. Nicole Hollinsworth was a good middle player, blocker and hitter. Sharon Ahern was an excellent setter and ran the offense. Kim Noonan was a smart and reliable player. Linda Haid could be depended on for a strong serve. Carla Beuder was another excellent all-around player, especially on defense. Anne Thayer played conference volleyball for the first time this year and developed fine on defense. Jennifer Starch was very consistent, especially on defense."

Ellefson gives them credit for hanging tough despite the teams record. The team also produced three conference honorable mentions: Carla Beuder, Sharon Ahern, and Janice Word (pictured throughout the article). For next year, Coach Ellefson hopes to hold early practices and conditioning. She also encourages any girls interested in athletics to try out for the team.

Four-year program at Harper?

By James Lambatos
Staff Writer

Finished with your first two years and thinking of transferring to Illinois State, Northeastern, University of Illinois, Northern Illinois University, etc., but the cost and inconvenience of going away is too high? Well, within the next year or two your problems may be solved, as Harper officials are vigorously pushing ahead with plans to lure one or more of the state's four-year universities to the area to participate in a bachelor degree completion program.

"We're working hard to get some of the state's four-year universities to offer classes here at Harper or somewhere else nearby so that our students have every opportunity to complete their bachelor degree. There are too many students who get their two-year associate degrees here at Harper but don't continue on and get their bachelor degrees because they cannot afford the cost or problems associated with going away to these schools and living on campus," said Paul Thompson, president of Harper College.

At the October board meeting a resolution was passed which urged the Illinois Community College Board to seek support from the Illinois Board of Higher Education for a program that allows students to earn their baccalaureate degree at Harper or some other site close in the area.

In order for Harper to officially offer classes in conjunction with a four-year university, it must gain approval first from the Illinois Board of Higher Education. Harper could have lobbied the Illinois Board of Higher Education by itself, but by asking the Illinois Community College Board to work on its behalf that request will carry more clout. Thompson guessed that Harper would receive the ruling by next October.

If this request is granted and Harper is successful in its courting of the state universities, the program will be run much like an extension service.

"We will probably be involved in a limited capacity. Once we help them set up and find a place to hold the classes, either here at Harper or somewhere nearby, they will be in charge of the courses, teachers, and fees," said Thompson.

Harper is looking to join up with state schools as opposed to private ones, many of which are

Harper Board elects officers

By Harper News Service

The Harper College Board of trustees elected officers for the coming year. Officers for 1988-89 are Chairman, Barbara Barron, Palatine; Vice Chairman, Michael Miller, Arlington Heights; and Secretary, Molly Norwood, Rolling Meadows.

Meetings of the Board of Trustees will continue to be held on the fourth Thursday of each month at 8p.m. in the Board Room of the Administration Building, Algonquin and Roselle Roads, Palatine. Exceptions this year were made for meeting for November 22 and December 14. The trustees also held monthly meetings as a Committee of the Whole. There is no meeting scheduled for December, but beginning January 11, 1989, these meetings will be held on the second Wednesday of every month at 7:30p.m. in the Board Room. All meetings are open to the public.

Observatory to house telescope approved

By Alisa Chimlund
Staff Writer

The observatory officially became a project of Harper College after gaining unanimous approval at the board of trustees meeting on November 22.

The board set a maximum limit of $30, 000 that can be spent on the observatory, but has not allocated any money for the project at this time.

Paul Sipiera, associate professor of physical science, believes the minimum cost is between $8,000 to $15,000 if the "brick silo" is selected as the observatory design.

The "brick silo" design, if chosen by Harper architect Mike Gilfillan and Parks and Grounds, would consist of a brick structure with an approximate 12 foot diameter and a 6-8 foot dome.

The structure would resemble a circular silo with a dome on it. The dome would have an aluminum sliding door to prevent access to the sky when the telescope is not in use. This is the simplest and cheapest design," said Sipiera.

The second possible design is what Sipiera calls "a garage with a dome". It is a 12 foot diameter with a 6 foot dome. This design is not as aesthetic as the "brick silo." Sipiera estimates the cost to be about $20,000.

The observatory is being constructed, tentatively on the North or Northeast side of campus by the lake, to house an approximately 100 year-old reflecting telescope donated to the college last spring by the Joseph Dupont family of New Jersey, said Sipiera.

The donation of the telescope was the catalyst that set the observatory project into motion, according to Sipiera.

"Having this gift virtually dropped into our lap was the stimulus. A modern equivalent to this telescope would probably cost us about $5,000 to $7,000. Restoration of the telescope will cost roughly $2,000 to aluminize the mirror, fix the mirror mounts and give the telescope computer control, said Sipiera.

"Our scope has an extremely long focal length which makes it ideal for polluted skies. The smaller modern units we currently have are more susceptible to light and pollution than the big scope. The problem with the portable telescopes is that you lose so much time in set up and break down of the instruments all the time," said Sipiera.

"Modern technology has reduced the size of the telescope dramatically. We have in our possession a telescope that looks like a telescope. (Fully assembled the telescope is eight feet long and weighs 1500 pounds.) The fact that the telescope is an antique gives it a historical perspective. We have an impressive looking object that is the equivalent of the best instruments available," said Sipiera.

"With our telescope we'll have an excellent view of the planets, nearby galaxies and the moon," added Sipiera.

Viewing the galaxies from Harper's observatory is a plus for the college and the community. The telescope could be utilized during labs by the four sections of AST 101, and for an advanced astronomy class (AST 102) which could be added to the curriculum. The observatory would be able to offer programs to educate the community about astronomy, how to use a telescope, or show a viewing of the planet Mars.

The observatory is becoming

very interested in the program, because of the sizable differences in tuition fees.

Leading the pack right now are Northeastern University and Illinois State University.

"Both have expressed an interest in providing junior and senior level classes for the four-year degree program," said Thompson.

"We also look forward to talking to University of Illinois, either Campaign or Chicago, and Northern Illinois University, as well as others," added Thompson.

Presently Harper has an agreement with Northern Illinois University and several other four-year colleges and Universities which offer limited bachelor's and master's degree programs at Harper and various other local sites. The new proposal would greatly expand this program, opening it up to more students and allowing a more complete choice of degrees.

Another community college, College of Lake County, is also looking to expand its services to include a four-year bachelor degree program. Last month they passed a resolution similar to the one passed by the Harper College Board.

"If a site can be chosen that is convenient for our students and the students of the College of Lake County, then there is a possibility that there could be some sort of an agreement whereby the two schools could share the four-year bachelor degree completion program," Thompson commented on the development.

As far as the possibility of Harper College someday becoming a four-year college, Thompson continued by saying that he thinks "this is very unlikely because of the way in which community colleges were first formed and even if it were a real possibility it may not even be desirable."

a reality as funds continue to come in. Student senate donated a $5,000 class gift from the 1988 graduating class. A fund-raising dinner honoring astronaut Harrison Schmitt raised more than $2,000. The Northwest Suburban Astronomy Club has pledged to raise the funds for the observatory's door. Sipsera hopes that no tax dollars will be needed.

Sipsera has applied for a grant through the Harper College Educational Foundation to secure additional funding. Funding is also being raised through the ongoing "buy a brick" campaign.

"Holiday Spectacular" seek performers

By Tari Vaughn
Staff Writer

During this holiday season, on Dec 16, Harper's Rhythm and Moves Dance Company will sponsor a very special holiday performance. The show is called the "Holiday Spectacular", and all benefits from the performance will go to the P.S. We Care Fund. The fund was set up for Peter Soby, an injured Harper student, to help cover the expenses for his recovery.

This will be the company's second year in sponsoring the show. Last year, the company wanted to offer aid to Soby, and came up with the concept for the show. Rhythm and Moves would like to repeat their support to Soby again this year, so the company will be sponsoring the second "Holiday Spectacular" Community Variety Show.

In order to make this show another success, the company is looking for various acts consisting of dancers, singers, actors, mimes, baton twirlers, choral groups, ect.. Performers are welcome from the community as well as Harper students.

Auditions will be held on Friday, Dec. 2 in Building M from 1:30pm to 6:30pm. The auditions will be by appointment only, and can scheduled by calling Cindy Engels at 397-3000, ext. 2466.

Tickets for the "Holiday Spectacular" are on sale at the Harper Box Office. Tickets will cost $5. For tickets or more information, call 397-3000, ext. 2947.

It took Galileo 16 years to master the universe.
You have one night.

It seems unfair. The genius had all that time. While you have a few short hours to learn your sun spots from your satellites before the dreaded astronomy exam.

On the other hand, Vivarin gives you the definite advantage. It helps keep you awake and mentally alert for hours. Safely and conveniently. So even when the subject matter's dull, your mind will stay razor sharp.

If Galileo had used Vivarin, maybe he could have mastered the solar system faster, too.

Staking out your book

By Michele Dabrowski
Features Editor

"You know you have to read 'between the lines' to get the most out of anything. I want to persuade you to do something equally important in the course of your reading."

"I want to persuade you to 'write between the lines.' Unless you do you are not likely to do the most efficient kind of reading," urges Mortimer J. Adler, in his article on "How to Mark a Book." Saturday Review of Literature

Now that Harper has passed the drop date for classes, the great push is on to keep the grade up in the remaining classes.

Adler proposes a method that will help the student or any avid reader comprehend and absorb a given literary work -- making notes in the books and highlighting the noteworthy sections.

He argues that like food, "books, too, must be absorbed in your bloodstream to do you any good."

Part of the charm of buying used books is a sneak preview of the class you going to take by reading someone's notes in the margins.

I bought a used book last semester, however, and almost the entire book was high-lighted in yellow marker.

Adler stresses that the object of note noting is to selectively choose important points, ideas or thought provoking passages.

Adler has determined that there are three types of book owners.

The first has all the standard sets and best-sellers -- unread, untouched. (This deluded individual owns wood pulp and ink, not books.)"

"The second has a great many books - a few of them read through, most of them dipped into but all of them as clean and shiny as the day they were bought."

"(This person would probably like to make books his own, but is restrained by false respect for their physical appearance.)"

"The third has a few books or many - everyone of them dog-eared and dilapidated, shaken loosened by continual use, marked and scribbled in from front to back. (This person owns books.)"

Under no circumstances does Adler advocate vandalizing library books, first editions or borrowed books. He advocates buying a reprint - your own in any case - and making it truly your own by filling it with your ideas as well as those of the author.

According to Dr. Adler, "reading a book should be a conversation between you and the author. Understanding is a two way operation; learning doesn't consist of being an empty receptacle."

"The learner has to question himself and question the teacher."

Adler gives several pointers on devises for marking a book "intelligently and fruitfully."

1) Underline the major points.

2) Set vertical lines at the margin to emphasize a statement already underlined.

3) Place stars, asterisks or other doodads at the margin for the ten to twenty most important statements in the book.

4) Put numbers on the margin to indicate the sequence of points the author makes in developing an argument.

5) Write the page numbers of other pages where the author cites relevant material.

6) Circle key words or phrases.

7) Write personal notes or question answers in the margin, in the top or bottom of the page.

As for the reasons why marking a book is indispensable for reading:

a) first, it keeps you awake and alert.

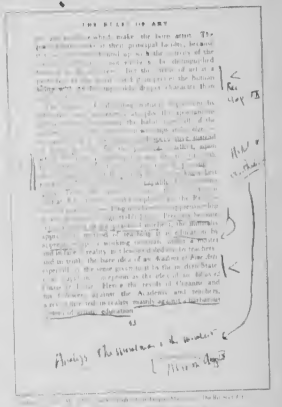

b) second, reading is thinking and thinking expresses itself in words.

c) third, writing helps you remember the thoughts you or the author expressed.

"Even if you wrote on a scratch pad and threw the paper away when you had finished writing, your grasp of the book would be surer... but you don't have to throw the paper away."

Adler agrees that the marking of books may slow down the reader. This fact, he explains, is the primary reason for marking.

"In the case of good books, the point is not to see how many of them you can get through, but rather how many can get through you - how many you can make your own."

Various sculptures have been settling at Harper, lately. However, there still remains an empty area at Harper in need of something that provides an "attention getter".

What is going to be placed on the square-plaza between building F and building D? Another sculpture?

Asking various students who walk by this area daily, they responded with the following suggestions:

"Another fascinating sculpture!"

"Hopefully, something more colorful and real, hot bazaar and unexplainable."

"A water fountain."

"A rusty piece of steel-work."

"Not another sculpture, please!"

Surprisingly, no one commented on the thought of a statue. The question arises, thus, what about a statue? Wouldn't that be appropriate enough?

Rumor has it that Harper is going to place a statue of William Rainey Harper, himself. Besides the fact that our community college is called "William Rainey Harper", who is William Rainey Harper?

He was much more than a mere teacher and writer. Some thought him as an intellectual being and a "man of vision". But more than that, he became the first president of The University of Chicago, and the founder of the community college establishment.

Putting William Rainey Harper in the midst of Harper College adds to the strength of Harper's excellence as a community college and sets an example to current and future prospective students in the continuation of education.

Complementary? Or diametrically opposed?

By Lisa Aust
Staff Writer

Here on the Harper campus, Dr J. Harley Chapman and Dr. Jerome Stone seek to guide others in the pursuit of truth through albeit diverging paths. In short, they teach philosophy.

Over the past summer, Dr Chapman, Professor of Philosophy and Dr. Stone, Associate Professor of Philosophy had the privilege of being invited to present their papers at the First International Conference on Philosophical Theology. The conference was held at Somerville College, Oxford University, England.

Somerville, a women's college, is noted for prestigious graduates: Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Dorothy Sayers, a medievalist and mystery writer. Oxford has a rich literary tradition, beginning in the thirteenth century. Against this backdrop, the two doctors entered.

The Highlands Institute for American Religious Thought invited Drs. Stone and Chapman, the only two community college professors in attendance.

A group of fifty scholars presented formal papers, and then faced the rigors of critique. They earned this privilege through their reputation for excellence in philosophy. Both Stone and Chapman published their works.

Although they have radically different views on the existence of an ultimate being (GOD), both men are members of the Highlands Institute.

Dr. Chapman's paper presented at the conference, "The Importance of the Notion of Being for Philosophical Theology" made an argument for a unified definition and recognition of the concept of being, through the common thread to which everyone can relate--experience. He accomplished this in two ways:

•Through a "Common sense of mystery in nature, sexuality, human friendship, and art which all people feel."

•Through ontological shock, which is the realization that our existence is temporary.

Dr. Stone praised Chapman for, "developing his own philosophy. He [Chapman] analyzed our experience of the limits to our own lives, and the possibilities of our nonexistence." Stone added that, "Chapman's arguments lead to the inference of a (an ultimate) source for our being."

Dr. Chapman's experiences at Harper lead to the topic of his paper. A faculty member for 18 years, he found that there were representatives of various religions in one class. With such diversity he "faced a challenge"-- the challenge of differences among students.

"Pluralism has its problems, I can't just assume that every one knows what I'm talking about," realized Chapman.

Dr. Stone respects Dr. Chapman and his work saying, "He is a fine representative of the new style of metaphysics."

Moreover, Stone admits "It's fun to have an important colleague like Chapman, who is good, but wrong!"

Diametrically: 1) of or along a diameter. 2) designating an opposite, a contrary, a difference, etc. that is wholly so; complete.

The fundamental difference between these two unique men came to light.

Dr. Stone addressed part of this difference in the paper presented over the summer, "What Religious Naturalism Can Learn from Langdon Gilkey." Stone maintains the absence of a guiding or ultimate power in the universe.

His paper, a critique of Langdon Gilkey's philosophy argued, "an ultimate source of meaning to life," from our experiences of "threats to our life and its meaning, as well as from the passions and presuppositions found in science."

Dr. Stone countered Gilkey, "Although we can speak of God in a revised sense, we have to learn to live with the loss of the ultimate without despair." Stone explained that we can live quite well without an ultimate, and that despair doesn't necessarily follow this realization.

Gilkey was Dr. Stone's dissertation advisor at the University of Chicago. Gilkey is known for his many books and as the ACLU's expert witness in the Creationism Trial at Little Rock, Arkansas.

Dr. Chapman praised Dr. Stone as "a systematic critical thinker."

Along with the serious task of searching for the truth, both men found time to absorb some of the sights of England.

Dr. Chapman was thrilled to step on British soil for the first time since, in the past, he had only viewed the White Cliffs of Dover from a ship.

The English preference toward the rehabilitation of buildings gave Chapman a lasting impression.

Dr. Stone admitted that he was a gawking tourist." According to Stone, London is so cosmopolitan that most of the people in a local laundromat were foreigners, who were trying to help each other figure out the mutually foreign monetary system.

Earlier this month, Dr. Stone presented a paper on "Morality and the Divine" at the American Academy of Religion Convention.

Stone's presentation was about "God as a human symbol for all of the creative forces and challenging ideals in the universe."

Privately these men constantly praised each other. The words respect, values, morals, and admiration came up again and again. In the presence of each other, however, the words "fundamentally wrong" surfaced.

Complementary: 1) helping to constitute a whole or to supply a lack. 2) mutually providing each other's needs.

"Philosophy is not debate. The object is not to win," Dr. Chapman said. In his paper he states, "As with any theory, it... invites collegial challenge and correction."

Why both of these men became so successful is obvious after seeing them interact together. The rapid foray of words and ideas left anyone else in the room outside of the conversation - a mere spectator to something aimed beyond grasp.

Somehow the combination of these two minds resulted in much more than either could be alone.

For a further look into Dr Chapman's writings, the library has two of his books: A Dissertation on G.G. Jung's Contribution to the Possibility of an Empirical Theology and Jung's Three Types of Religious Experiences.

Together Each Achieves More

Harper's newly adopted program, PROJECT TEAM (Together Each Achieves More), takes the assets of Harper College into the community.

Project TEAM, an agreement with District 15 and Willow Bend School, allows Harper's students, staff and faculty the opportunity to tutor fourth, fifth, and sixth graders.

The students are "at-risk" children who need assistance on a one-to-one basis. Approximately 20 at-risk students are matched with 20 selected Harper volunteers.

Harper's involvement allows an expansion of knowledge for both the students and tutors.

Devotion to the children fosters self esteem which opens doors to their future hopes and dreams.

Director of College Relations Elaine Stoermer stated, "This is an experience that we know is worthwhile and rewarding to all." Stoermer continued, "The main thing is the commitment and the desire to participate."

The volunteers will meet every Wednesday afternoon from 3:30-4:30 p.m. at Willow Bend School during the spring semester.

Each volunteer serves as a role-model for a particular child; together the partners help accomplish study improvements.

Anyone interested in participating in Project TEAM should contact Elaine Stoermer, Office of College Relations, Building A Room 314, for an application.

An informational meeting will be held in the Board Room on December 7, at 10:30 a.m.

Response to Clearbrook

This editorial is in response to a letter I received. Please refer to the letter to the editor below.

When Birth of the "Story Lady" appeared, incomplete, in the October 13 issue I must admit I was quite surprised and very disappointed that the author did not get a by-line. Unfortunately, the missing copy disappeared sometime after it left the Harbinger office and before it returned. (It was never found.) Alisa Chinlund, author of the story, has written for us in the past and has always done a thorough job. I am always pleased with her stories and was most pleased with this one.

Alisa holds no bias against mentally disabled people, in fact she did not want to include the line in question. Jackie Torrence mentioned many times during the interview how the handicapped portion of the audience was distracting. Alisa merely reported Ms. Torrence's feelings.

As for the Harbinger's commitment to knowledge and understanding, it is as high if not higher than previous years. No paper can be fairly criticized for reporting facts. The Harbinger and all of its editors are very dedicated and put in more VOLUNTEER hours than they should.

I happen to hold Harper College in high regard for its academic standards and community involvement. We do not trample or deny the dignity of the handicapped. In fact, Harper College recently sponsored Handicapped Awareness days through Disabled Student Services.

On the other hand, Clearbrook was absolutely correct in identifying Harper as one of the sources of this misunderstanding. Student Activities misinformed Ms. Rose about Harper's handicapped accessibility. Having spent an entire day in a wheel chair I can testify (along with Robyn Davis, managing editor) that Harper needs to keep both eyes on handicapped accessibility (one doesn't seem to be good enough).

Finally, our "sensitivity, maturity, and keenness of our inquiring minds" accept the challenge; Alisa and I will arrange to spend one day at Clearbrook Center early next semester. We are truly sorry if anyone has received the wrong impression about our paper and hope this will help clear up any misunderstanding.

Douglas Ray
Editor-in-Chief

Clearbrook's concern about handicapped accessability

Letter to the editor

Dear Mr. Ray:

We have read an anonymous account in a recent edition of Harbinger regarding the "Story Lady". To quote the article, "The audience, however, was not silent during most of the performance. It was interspersed with mentally disabled children." Please, allow us to set the record straight.

Early in the month of October, the Student Activity Office of Harper College contacted Kim Rose, Clearbrook Commons' Director of Therapeutic Activities, and graciously invited up to one hundred of our handicapped clients to attend Jackie Torrence's performance. Ms. Rose explained to the caller that all ninety-two of our residents are adults (they range in age from 18 to 63) and that many are multiply handicapped. She noted that our people are sometimes unpredictable and may on occasion become inappropriate, but were an incident to occur, we would remove our people as quickly as possible from the performance.

Ms. Rose was assured there would be no problems because Harper's auditorium facility had been designed with an eye toward handicapped accessibility. Ms. Torrence's performance is known to be particularly animated and would certainly captivate even the most limited span of attention. This being the case, plans were made to bring 20 of our residents to the "Story Lady" performance.

Through Ms. Rose's efforts, extra staff was scheduled and special arrangements were made with the cooperation of Day Training for Special Needs (DTSN) to take residents from their classrooms early. A bus, specifically designed to accommodate handicapped riders, was ordered for transportation.

Arriving at Harper, we soon learned that, in fact, the auditorium is not designed realistically for handicapped people. Stair treads are too short in depth, hand rails are unstable and extend only about a third of the way into the seating area. There were no indoor ramps for wheelchairs. Be that as it may, our trained staff of specialists maneuvered our residents as best they were able and seated everyone.

At Clearbrook, we are dedicated to active treatment of handicapped individuals; that they may attain their highest level of development, so their lives are full and productive and satisfying to themselves and contributing members of the community in which they live.

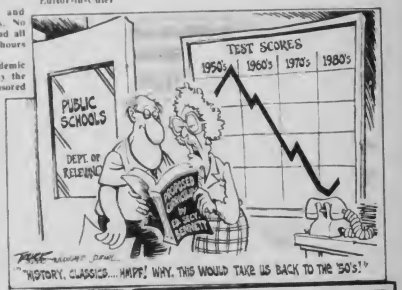

The work we do is painstakingly slow and our paths are rife with obstacles. Perhaps the most insidious hurdle we have to scale is the fact that even in this era of enlightened thinking, we are looked upon negatively. We are perceived as "retards", sub-human, unworthy. In their ignorance, people find us frightening. They don't want us in their neighborhoods, in their shops or restaurants, and possibly, even in their colleges. Because we are different, our dignity is trampled upon or denied.

We are curious if the author of the article holds biased beliefs similar to those just described. What is so sad and shocking to us is that this prejudice is printed in a college paper that assumedly represents a commitment to knowledge, to understanding. The author's view fails to acknowledge us in any way other than to imply we are disruptive.

We would like to propose a challenge to your sensitivity, to your maturity, to the keenness of your inquiring minds. We invite the editors and staff of Harbinger to spend a day with us. Come see for yourselves how we work, how we learn, how we play, how we grow. View the world for one day from the perspective of the handicapped and then write about us in real terms.

We look forward to your reply.

Very truly,
Joseph Lawler

Hello, Dolly!

By Tari Vaughn
Staff Writer

The scene takes place in the window of a toy shop where toys are displayed. As the clock strikes midnight, the toys suddenly spring to life.

A toy soldier flirts with the ballerina doll, but becomes involved in a love triangle with a large stuffed mouse. A toy clown disturbs the occupant of a large box while investigating its contents.

Set to the music of Ibert, Rossini, and Shostakovich, the fantasy of "The Toy Shop" comes to life in the hands of David A Syrotiak.

The action happens without words, but according to Syrotiak's son, David J. Syrotiak, no words are needed. "He's wonderful. There are things he does with the puppets where you can see changes of thought. He makes the puppets think."

The National Marionette Theatre, under the direction of Syrotiak, will be bringing two of their many performances to Harper College on Friday, Dec. 2. The shows they will be performing will be "The Toy Shop" and "The Little Concert."

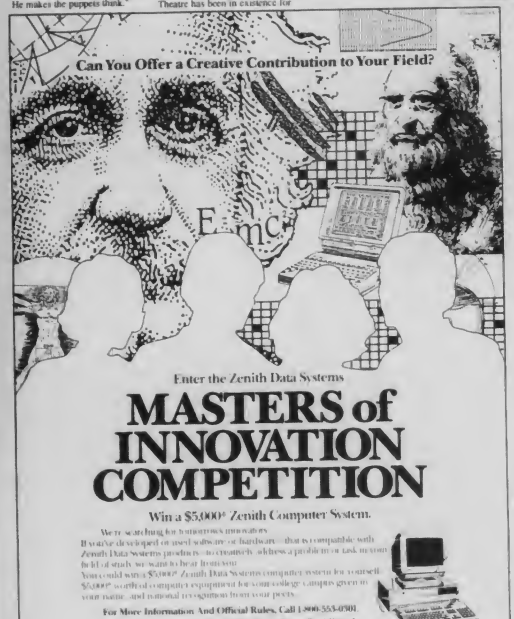

While the story of "The Toy Shop" is aimed towards children, "The Little Concert" is geared toward the adult audience. Syrotiak describes the performance as " a series of sharply drawn vignettes that reveal the spectrum of human emotion from the comic to the nightmarish."

Only a fraction of the marionettes owned by the company will be used in these performances. There are approximately 400 marionettes, which Syrotiak uses for various performances across the United States and Europe.

The National Marionette Theatre has been in existence for 30 years. They are known not only for the beautiful look of their productions, but also for their manipulation technique.

The company has won numerous awards including a Citation for Excellence in the field of adult puppetry from the Unima International de la Marionette. The National Marionette Theatre is the first American marionette company to recieve this award.

Both shows will be performed on Dec 2, with "The Toy Shop" at 10 am and 12:30 pm, and "The Little Concert" at 7:30 pm. Admission for "The Toy shop"will be free for Harper students and $1 for the public. Tickets for "The Little Concert" will be $1 for Harper students and $2 for the public. For tickets or more information, call the Harper box office at 397-3000 ext.2547.

Oh, no, not another disappointing album! After releasing one of the best albums of 1987, the powerful "Tiny Days", Bostonia's Scruffy the Cat comes back with "Moons of Jupiter", their fourth release.

Stana Fitch has left the band, replaced by Burns Stanfield on keyboards. The band seems to have gone for a bigger sound here, and the way they (or their producer, Jim Dickinson) went about it was to record lead vocals twice on two tracks, a fairly common practice to get a fuller sound. The problem with this technique is that it softens the vocals too much. They are mixed low to begin with, and with much of the personality of the band coming through the vocals of Charlie Chesterman, this hurts the music quite a bit.

Five songs go by before the album gets interesting. The following four tracks are the highlight of the album ('Nova 55 1968', 'Kissing Galaxy', 'Bucknaked', and the title track). There are sixteen songs in all. The CD comes in what appears to be the very first gatefold CD box, with a cutout Scruffy the Cat airplane on the inside.

Scruffy the Cat is a band well worth listening to, but listen to "Tiny Days" or "High Octane Revival" first. As is the case with Big Country, they need a different producer.

Rating out of 5: 3.

Mike Rutherford's side project away from from Genesis, Mike + The Mechanics, has released their second album. Of the two albums reviewed here, this is easily the best of them. Paul Young (not THAT Paul Young) once again shares vocal duties with Paul Carrack, who made a successful solo comeback this past year.

The songs, written by Rutherford and various other writers, range from predictable but good ('Poor Boy Down') to one of the best lyrics I've heard recently, on the title track. Sung by Carrack, the song concerns a man who wishes he had talked more to his father before the father died. This song might be autobiographical for Rutherford and is all the more poignant because of it.

Although not as well-rounded as 1985's "Mike + Mechanics", this sophomore album is still quite good, and technically superior to that debut.

Rating out of 5: 3-1/2.

HARBINGER DOUBLE FEATURE

Everybody's All-American' Film

By Scott Noidl
Entertainment Editor

One boring evening, when nothing seemed too exciting, I suggested to my girlfriend we could go see a movie. When we arrived at the theatres and scoped out the "Now Playing" litt, nothing thrilled me. So I asked her, "What do you want to see?" Her reply: "I don't know, it's your turn to decide." So we decided to see Everybody's All-American.

Warner Brothers Everybody's All-American is the story about Gavin Grey, alias "the Gray Ghost", (Dennis Quaid) who is a football star starting in college and continuing through his retirement from the National League.

Gavin's three loves in his life are, football, his nephew Donnie, alias "Cake", (Timothy Hutton) and his steady "Magnolia Queen" Babs Rogers (Jessica Lange).

The story begins in 1956 when the afore-mentioned are attending college in Louisiana. Gavin is the starting running back for the college football team and the college hero. Donnie is a freshman concerning himself with watching Babs and keeping her company, while Gavin is preoccupied, and Babs, while being Magnolia Queen for the year, says that she is majoring in herself and Gavin.

Moving into the '60s and early '70s things have changed for our hero. Gavin has married Babs and is playing pro-ball for the San Francisco 49ers. Babs has become the stereo-typed housewife, barefoot and pregnant in the kitchen. And Donnie has published a book.

Finally completing the tour through the lives of our characters, we end up in the early '80s with Gavin as a "has-been" football pro turned resident golf-pro at the local country club. Now a woman of the eighties Babs has become the principal bread winner for her family of six. Donnie has achieved his goal of becoming a history professor.

The conclusion occurs at the twenty-five year reunion of the 1956 Louisiana football champions. Gavin is in a deep depression because he thinks Babs is having an affair, and has no intention of making a speech at a dinner where he is the guest of honor. He is, however, persuaded to speak and what he says relieves much of the conflict in his marriage.

Quaid's performance as Gavin Grey is one that should be highly commended. His depiction of how Gavin copes with the many changes that occur in his life didn't leave a dry eye in the house.

Lange gives yet another outstanding performance as Babs Rogers. This is definitely, in my opinion, a vehicle for her next Oscar.

Hutton was a definite surprise to me. He has finally dropped his boyish character and developed something very impressive to any viewer.

I have to admit I was not overly enthusiastic about seeing this film. This was probably good, for i didn't have a chance to be disappointed. But this film was far from disappointing; in fact I cried at the end of the film. What people don't understand is it takes a great deal of effort and talent for any movie to make me cry. (I didn't even cry when Old Yeller was shot.)

I do recommend that you see this film, but see it with someone you care about deeply, because it is a movie about sharing in a relationship. If you do take my advice you won't regret it.

Not Necessarily In 'High Spirits'

By Scott Noidl
Entertainment Editor

Steve Guttenberg is fortunate enough to be in two first run shows at the cinema last week. The problem with this is neither of the films are destined to become blockbusters.

Friday, November 24 saw the release of his second so-so film of the two, High Spirits.

High Spirits is a story of an American gentleman(who's name escapes me probably because I didn't care to remember) played by Guttenberg, who comes to Ireland with his wife to stay at a "haunted castle."

The owner of the castle, one Mr. Plunkett (Peter O'Toole), has set up a hoax to attract guests to visit the castle, for a slight fee, to enable himself to pay the rent.

When the hoax is revealed to the guests, Guttenberg finds that the castle is doomed to be moved to Malibu thanks to his father-in-law, who holds the lease. So O'Toole and Guttenberg decide to drink away their sorrows.

On the way back to his room, Guttenberg stumbles upon an old room in the castle he had not noticed before. While examining this room, a screaming female enters quickly followed by a male in 17th century garb yelling at her. The strange figures bicker and the man ends up stabbing the woman and then the two of them disappear.

Guttenberg, who is now stammering drunk, tries to decipher what had just occurred when the sequence resumes except this time Guttenberg intervenes and the sequence is broken.

The woman ( Darryl Hannah) announces that her name is Mary Plunkett and then declares her love for Guttenberg.

Later, Guttenberg falls in love with Hannah and they both live "happily ever after".

To start out with, Guttenberg is reliving the role of the innocent optimistic he has come to play so many times (Three Men and a Baby). This time, however; it's not only redundant it is less than his standard performance.

Hannah seems to be recreating the role of "Roxanne" to see if it works just as well. It didn't.

Finally Peter O'Toole, who I consider a very talented actor, did not impress me in the slightest. I haven't even determined if his character was necessary to the film.

Overall, the most I can say about this film is that it was cute, kind of, and if your looking to see nothing but repetative characters from other movies, pay the big bucks and see it now. My personal advice, though, is wait until it comes to the second run theatres.

(Dennis Quaid and Jessica Lange in Everybody's All-American)

Who's Who Awards Program

Harper Students may now apply for inclusion in the 1988-89 "Who's Who Among Students in American Junior Colleges" program. The deadline for turning in applications is December 14, 1988.

Since 1968 Harper College has participated in the "Who's Who" program, which provides recognition for outstanding students in junior and community colleges across the country.

Each student selected for this recognition is listed in a biographical volume which has become a respected reference source for colleges and businesses, and, as a lifelong service, they may use the Who's Who office as a permanent reference source/file for prospective employers. This recognition means a great deal to the students selected.

At Harper, the selection committee is comprised of students, faculty, and staff. A three-fold criterion is used for evaluating applicants; 1) Academic standing, 2) Participation and leadership in curricular and co-curricular activities, and 3) Community Service. In addition, candidates must have completed 24 semester hours by the time they are considered.

If students feel they may possibly be qualified, forms are available in the Student Activities Office in A-336.

Harper Community to Trim Tree

By Susan Berne
Upcoming Editor

For the first time in a number of years Harper College is holding a holiday gathering.

Student Activities and Club and Organizations are hosting a tree trimming party on Tuesday, December 6, at approximately 12:30 p.m. by the Fireplace in Building A.

Members of the Harper community are encouraged to bring an ornament that represents their organization or division office to decorate the tree which will be donated by Knupper Nursery.

The tree is not representative of the Christian holiday; it is a symbol of the Harper community spirit.

Each club is asked to bring a refreshment, such as cookies, brownies, soda, etc. for all who participate.

Entertainment will be provided, including a pianist who will play seasonal songs.

For more information about this event contact Michael Nejman in Student Activities at Ext. 2242.

Phi Theta Kappa's Initiation Includes Awards

By Susan Berne
Upcoming Editor

Harper's chapter of Phi Theta Kappa, a national honorary fraternity for two-year colleges, initiated 100 new members and presented five awards as the fall initiation ceremony.

Members are initiated into Phi Theta Kappa each semester after completing 24 credit hours while maintaining a minimum G.P.A. of 3.5.

The Phi Phi Chapter Faculty Advisor, Dr. Larry Kent, presented Trudy Herbst, chapter president, and Mona Isa, a new initiate, with the Phi Theta Kappa/Pepper Construction Company Scholarships, each worth $500.

Kent also presented a new Advisor's Award worth $100. He established this recognition which will be awarded each semester by Kent to an officer of the Phi Phi Chapter who has demonstrated outstanding leadership to the chapter. The first Advisor's Award was presented to Susan Berne, Vice President.

The members of the Phi Phi Chapter also established a new award to be given in recognition of service to the community and support of Phi Theta Kappa. Susan Berne presented the first two service award plaques to Steven J. Catlin, Harper College Director of Admissions and Registrar, and to Pepper Construction Company. These newly established awards are engraved, "In appreciation of your outstanding efforts contributing to the growth of Phi Theta Kappa."

In addition to the presentations, Phi Theta Kappa members and their guests heard an address on "Words, Power and Leadership" by Harper's President, Dr. Paul N. Thompson.

NEW LOOK FOR HARBINGER

By Marc J. Balke
Business Manager

And the winner is...Tom Metz. "Tom's graphic (a Greek "H" with a quill through it) best represents what we wanted," said the judging committee. Metz won a one-year membership at the Woodfield Fitness Club in Schaumburg for his logo.

Over the years, the front-page nameplate changed many times. Yet, once again, the staff changed it, but with a new twist--the addition of a logo. The logo will appear on the front page for the remainder of the school year. The Harbinger staff wanted a logo, and thought that a contest was an appropriate way to develop one. A contest allowed student participation. Special arrangements were made with advertisers in order to secure contest prizes.

On Tuesday night, after four weeks entries, the distinguished panel of judges chose the winners that best represented both Harper College and the newspaper.

Although the contest plans did not include a change in the letterhead, the suggestion was made on the merits of Catherine Norman's entry. Norman's second place winning graphic will be used on future Harbinger letterhead. Second prize is five sessions at the Bahama Sun Tanning Spa in Palatine.

Jim Dinse, the third place winner, receives a dinner for two at Swensen's Ice Cream & Restaurant in Schaumburg. Dinse's bird caricature, a harbinger, is being considered for the Sports pages.

The fourth place winner, Augie Meichert, receives a ten dollar gift certificate from a soon-to-open restaurant, Chilli's Bar and Grill in Hoffman Estates.

There will be another contest during spring semester. The contest theme is not yet decided. Ideas are welcome.

The Harbinger appreciated the creativity and interest in the contest. Congratulations to the winners are in order.

'Tis the Season . . . for Colds and Flu

Millions of people get a cold, the flu or both every year. the flu from December through March, and colds usually during the winter months, but are not uncommon in other seasons. At any one time, nearly a third of all Americans had a cold during the previous two weeks.

Several hundred different viruses can cause colds or the flu. This is why people recovering from one cold can suddenly get another. Although the body may have built up antibodies to the virus that caused the first cold, along comes another virus for which the body has not yet acquired resistance.

Typically, colds begin slowly after 18 to 48 hours after exposure to a virus. The first symptoms are usually a scratchy, sore throat followed by sneezing, running nose, and the feeling called the "blahs". A cough can develop several days later. The brunt of a cold usually lasts four or five days, sometimes less, with symptoms gradually diminishing. After ten days or so, the symptoms are usually completely gone.

The flu, likewise, often begins with a sore throat, stuffy nose, and cough, but the symptoms quickly become more severe than those of a cold. In addition, the flu is usually accompanied by muscle aches in the back and legs. Fever up to 104 degrees and headaches are common. Flu symptoms begin to subside after three or four days, although fatigue and weakness may continue for days or even weeks.

Cold and flu-like symptoms sometimes mimic more serious illnesses. Strep throat, for example, often begins much like a cold with a sore throat and fever. Strep is distinguished from a cold by a severe sore throat, difficulty swallowing, high fever, and in some cases, rapid heartbeat. Diagnosis and prescriptions for strep throat are available for students free of charge in the Harper College Health Service, A362.

In general, if cold or flu-like symptoms last for more than a week, become severe or localized in the throat, stomach or lungs, or if other symptoms such as vomiting and behavioral changes occur, consult your physician at once. For an appointment with the Health Service physician, call ext. 2268.

What can we do to protect ourselves from becoming infected with a cold or the flu? Dress warmly in winter, keep up your natural resistance by getting plenty of rest and eating good meals, maintain indoor humidity at 20-45%, avoid sick persons and crowds and don't smoke in the best advice. Science has yet to devise a certain cure for colds or the flu.

If you get a cold or the flu this winter, most physicians and scientists agree that the best thing to do is to take some medications to relieve the symptoms, hunker down for a few days, and wait it out.

IS IT A COLD OR THE FLU?

| Symptoms | Cold | Flu |
|---|---|---|
| Fever | Rare | Characteristic High (102-104) Sudden Onset; Lasts 3-4 days |
| Headache | Rare | Prominent |
| General Aches and Pains | Slight | Usual, Often Quite Severe |
| Fatigue and Weakness | Quite mild | Extreme, Can Last 2-3 Weeks |
| Prostration | Never | Early and Prominent |
| Runny, Stuffy Nose | Common | Sometimes |
| Sneezing | Usual | Sometimes |
| Sore Throat | Common | Sometimes |
| Chest Discomfort, Cough | Mild to Moderate Hacking Cough | Common; Can Become Severe |

with our mom

Liz Brouseau
Staff Writer

Just a couple of years ago when I was a little girl, I used to be perplexed by the adult complaint that time was passing by so quickly. And I remember wondering as I tried to fully comprehend this idea, what time is, and just what is time anyway? An undefinable notion which is measured by a clock that measures replenishing itself with a fresh, full cycle each new day.

To the little girl, time traveling in a circle as does the clock that measures it, cannot run past, as it will come around and repeat itself.

To the adult, time never travels in a circle, it travels in a line, accelerating and never waiting for it's victims to catch up.

We adults are the victims, hurrying to met each deadline as though our lives depended on it, and never daring to miss anything scheduled into time as though it were a stone you had carved into.

And we perpetuate ourselves to becoming our own victims as we bait the trap by expecting more and more of ourselves, never granting forgiveness for the marks we have left in the stone unaccounted for--the cancelled appointments, or the commitments we could not keep.

As the holiday season approaches, I become increasingly more aware of how quickly time is passing. Each day is charted out with longer etchings meaning only that the day will be fuller than expected. And I find myself becoming anxious, and overly concerned with making all my holiday arrangements, so it can be a fuller, more wonderful holiday than ever before.

And now I realize that I have baited, and fallen into my own trap. I have eluded myself by believing that I have control over the beauty of a moment. And in this belief, I am certain to miss the beauty of anything. Am I not?

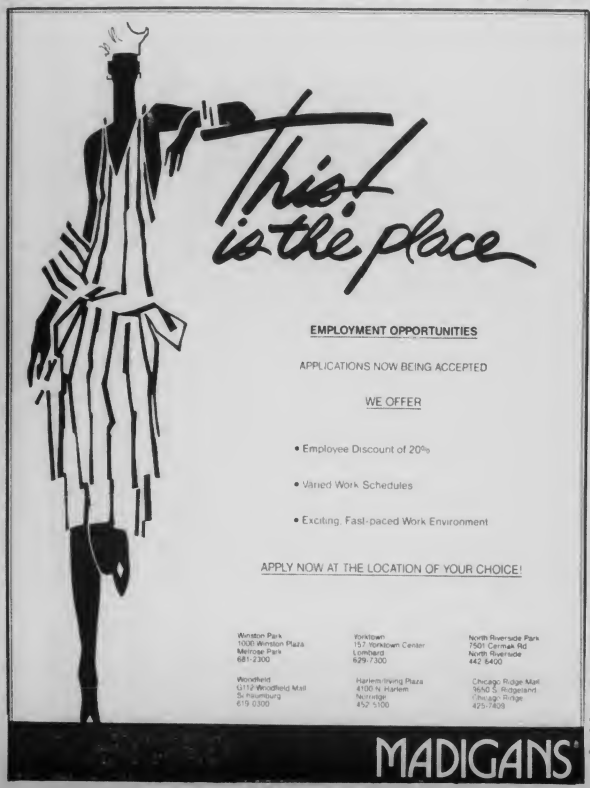

So this day, I have decided to perform the ultimate holiday feat. That is to be living as well as feeling the moment. Perhaps it will not be grand, or beautiful, but I will be there instead of the corner department store, or with my head in an oven freaking over whether I can crank out these 28 dozen cookies or not.

Rather, I wish to spend this season basking in the expressed joy of those who surround me every day, and hoping to give joy to more of the same.

And for those who have learned the lesson, and who spend each day living, and not timing, I give thanks for what we timers can learn from you. And if we learn our lesson well, we will never become "old timers".

Let us all "live it" this season, and share the moments together, and perhaps, time will no longer pass so quickly, and measuring will have less importance than it has.

What I am wishing you all is the makings for the beginning of a season which travels in a circle into the years to come, which replenishes itself, and comes around again and again.

Hawks fall in Cola Bowl, 29-0

by Sandy Salvatore
Staff Writer

The Ellsworth Panthers defeated our Harper Hawks 29-0 in the Royal Crown Cola Bowl last Sunday. The victory was Ellsworth's second in a row over Harper in the annual Cola Bowl. Last year the Panthers beat the Hawks 41-9.

The main factor of both games was Harper's inability to hold Ellsworth in the second half. Last year the Hawks trailed 9-3 at halftime and then let the score escape them. This year the score was 8-0 at the half and the Hawks, once again, could not keep the Panthers in check.

Ellsworth scored their first touchdown of the day when quarterback Mike Virden handed off the ball to Robert Rivers for a four-yard run. The extra point kick by Dan Miller was blocked by Harper's Rod Latham.

The Panthers made it 8-0 on the first play of the second quarter, when Harper's quarterback, Al Snyder, fumbled his own snap and fell on it in the end zone for a safety. This was as close as the Hawks could keep the Panthers, because after the half, the Panthers opened the score with three big plays.

With 6:07 left in the third, the Panther attack struck again when Virden teamed up with Steven Lester, who zipped by Harper's defense, untouched, into the end zone to make the score 15-0.

The third touchdown for Ellsworth came on their next possession, when fullback Kevin Hart ran up the middle into the end zone from Harper's 45.

The Panther's wrapped up the night when Virden handed off the ball to halfback Robert Rivers, who passed it to wide receiver Vince McKinney for a 29 yard touchdown.

Hopefully, for the Hawks, they will improve their second half play, and return to the Cola Bowl for a third straight year.

Wrestlers Working Hard

by Sandeno Palmer
Staff Writer

A tough schedule lies ahead for the Harper wrestlers. They will compete against teams that are mainly composed of juniors and seniors.

There is no age limit in the competitive wrestling arena. "You may wind up with a 27 year-old construction worker standing in front of you," said Eric Bakey, a freshman who won his tournament in Southwest Michigan November 12.

"NJC Wrestling is a lot tougher than high school wrestling, however, I feel very positive about winning the upcoming Whitewater Invite." Although Bakey wrestled good, he feels, "The team's intensity level isn't there yet."

Rob Malecke and Jason Finucane also did well, wrestling in the 140- pound weight class. Keith Demann ranked as a semi-finalist in the 167 pound weight class. Coach Lovelace commented, "Keith is one tough wrestler, our diamond in the rough!"

Rey Villar also ranked as a semi-finalist and was one point away from winning his weight class. Mark Cecchi wrestled his way to a second place finish in the 190 pound weight class.

Todd Carlig is expected to do well in the next match but unfortunately, brother Brad Carlig, is out for the season due to an accident.

Coach Lovelace is working hard with the Hawk wrestlers, and he feels, "As the team gets closer together and puts more heart into it (wrestling), we'll do better."

MVP's Named at Banquet

By Peter Soby
Sports Editor

The coaches of the fall sports named the Most Valuable Players last Tuesday night during the Awards Banquet. The big surprise came when the MVP for football was named. With the kind of year the Hawks football team had, it was hard to predict which player would get MVP. It wasn't an offensive standout like Al Snyder or James Haywood, but defensive standout Jeff Topel.

MVP's for the other fall sports came as no surprises. Janice Word was named as volleyball's MVP. Word received honorable mention from the conference also.

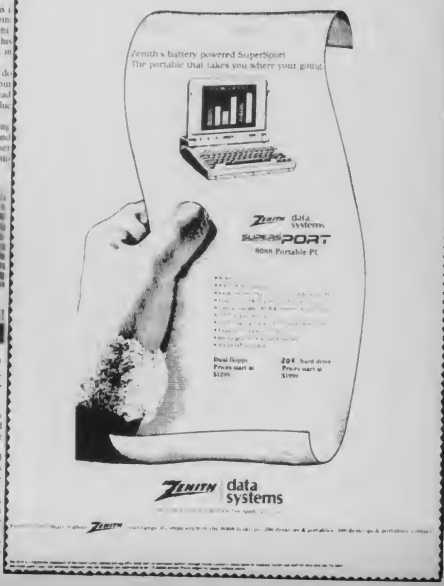

Cheryl Piszczek was named as tennis's MVP. Piszczek was named MVP of the conference also.

Tom Irons was named as cross country's MVP. Irons was the only Harper runner to qualify for Nationals.

Congratulation to the above MVPs and all their teammates for a great season of fall sports.

It's no accident I've been getting into a different kind of sport at school (hint, hint)

Men's B-ball struggles early

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

At the rate that things have been going so far, Head Coach Bill Probst may want to forget about this season as well as last.

The Hawks are currently sporting a dismal 1-6 record after losing to McHenry (52-47) and Waubonsee (100-61), defeating Wheaton (65-61), and losing both of their games in the Harper Thanksgiving tournament to Lake County (68-62) and Richland (76-71). They also lost to Wright (66-63).

Still despite it all, Probst has been maintaining a positive outlook on the situation. "We've made good progress in getting our turnovers down and in getting a good intensity on defense. We need a 40-minute effort and on offense we need more patience and poise."

In their loss to McHenry, the hawks squandered leads of 19-7 and 21-11 before McHenry was able to cut the deficit to five at 21-16 at the end of the first half and get back into the game. They also committed 43 turnovers and shot only 41% from the field.

Their next game against could have easily called "Nightmare on Algonquin Road" because it was something that everybody would have easily liked to forget. Forty-five turnovers, 35% shooting from the field, and a 47-15 halftime deficit made it a very long night for the Hawks.

Finally, Harper was able to tack something onto the "W" column by defeating Wheaton. Leading the way for the Hawks was Travis Perry with 18, Scott Shopinsky with 14 and Joe Passi and Donald Pierce with 10 points each, behind slam dunks from Passi and Pierce, Harper raced out to a 43-28 lead at halftime, but Wheaton dominated the second half with a furious rally that cut an 18 point lead to two before freshman Scott Shopinsky sank both ends of one-and-one with nine seconds remaining.

Unfortunately, the Hawks' winning ways were put to a halt as they suffered back to back heartbreaking defeats in the Harper Thanksgiving Tournament. In their first game against Lake County, a tremendous team effort was wasted by what Probst called "the four point swing". A four-point swing takes place when a team fails to take advantage of a missed shot, and in turn the other team scores. It seemed that everytime Harper was ready to stage a comeback they would run into one of those four-point swings again and remain behind.

In their next game against Richland, Harper had made a remarkable comeback after trailing at one time by 14 points. Leading the way for the Hawks were Kevin Simpson, Joe Passi, and Jason Brooks. Simpson put together a 22-point, four rebound performance after not scoring at all the previous night against Lake County. Passi added eight points and matched his career-high for rebounds with 15. Brooks scored 16 points, had eight rebounds and dished out four assists before fouling out with less than four minutes to go. Unfortunately the Hawks comeback attempt fell short as John Townsend's three point shot attempt was partially blocked by Richland's Rodney Grayned with two seconds left, and in the process was fouled by Townsend with no time left. Grayned made both free throws, which were meaningless because the Hawks fate had been sealed, to finish the game.

One of the bright spots for Harper in the tournament was the stellar performance of freshman Jason Brooks. The St. Viator grad was named to the all-tournament team by putting together two sensational performances in which he scored eleven points on Wednesday night against Lake County and sixteen points Saturday afternoon against Richland. He also hit seven three-pointers during the tournament, keeping the Hawks close in both games.

In their 66-63 loss to the Rams, Harper blew a 14 point first half lead, wasting tremendous efforts by Travis Perry (23 points, 7 rebounds) and Joe Passi (13 points, 11 rebounds).

The Hawks will be on the road for the next two games. On Saturday, at 3 p.m., they'll travel to 14 Spartan Drive, Elgin to face the team that eliminated them on a tip-in at the buzzer in the section tourney last year. Then, on Tuesday, the Hawks will travel to Elmhurst College, 190 Prospect Ave., Elmhurst, to play the Bluejays at 5:15 p.m.

Lady Hawks off to 2-1 start

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

With only one starter returning from a team that lost everybody to graduation, one would expect to find a team struggling to do well, right?

Well in the case of the Harper Lady Hawks, that doesn't seem to be the case. The Lady Hawks are off to 2-1 mark after taking second in the Harper Thanksgiving Tournament.

They have proven to be one tough team. With a big 75-46 win over Wright in the semi-finals and a 57-53 loss to Kishwaukee in the title game that saw the Lady Hawks come from behind several times, playing very tough until the end.

They came away from the tournament impressing a lot of people, including their head coach, Tom Teschner. "We're doing a nice job, we're way ahead of where we were last year. We're learning to play well under pressure. We are making a lot of mistakes, it'll come. It's to be expected by our lack of experience."

In their semi-final win over Wright Friday afternoon, the Lady Hawks were in control from the opening tip. They jumped out to a 10-2 lead with 15:46 left in the first half. Wright would get no closer than four at 10-6 when Theresa Simon sank a pair of free throws and scored on a basket to keep the Rams close.

Then the Lady Hawks put the game away with nine unanswered points, keyed by Amy Koziol's field goal from a steal to put Harper ahead to stay at 19-6 with 11 minutes left in the first half.

Koziol paced the Lady Hawks with 24 points while Pascale O'Donoghue added 22. "It was impressive for the first time out of the box, we'll always score. We just have to play defense," Teschner said after the game.

With the win, Harper advanced to face Kishwaukee, a 77-31 winner over Lake County, on Saturday night's title game.

For the first fifteen and a half minutes, both teams battled back and forth until a 12-2 run by the Kougars put them on top 28-18 with 1:17 left in the first half.

Kishwaukee could have easily added on to it and put the Lady Hawks away, but they went cold and allowed Harper to crawl back into the game on baskets by Amy Koziol with 34 seconds left and Patty Cancholia with 18 seconds left to cut the Kougar lead to 28-22 at the half.

The second half saw the lead change hands eight times. Both teams refused to buckle under. In fact, nobody had a lead of more than two points by the 7:28 mark when a O'Donoghue field goal put Harper ahead 43-42.

Then Kishwaukee scored six unanswered points topped off by Sandra Ford's basket with with 5:40 left in the game to give the Kougars a 48-43 lead. The Lady Hawks weren't ready to throw in the towel just yet. A 10-2 run led by O'Donoghue and Cancholia brought Harper back in a 53-50 lead with 1:46 left on the clock.

Unfortunately for the Lady Hawks, the lead didn't last. Kishwaukee kept the lead for good on back to back baskets by Karen Exner with the second coming with 54 seconds left, that along with a basket by Sandra Ford put the Kougars ahead at 56-51, 35 seconds remaining.

Still, Harper had one last chance to tie the game up, but Amy Koziol missed a three point attempt and Ford, who came up with the rebound was fouled, made the second of two foul shots to put the game out of reach to give Kishwaukee the game and the Tournament Championship. Still, the Lady Hawks played their hearts out and had nothing to be ashamed of.

The Lady Hawks rebounded by holding McHenry to check 57-45. Harper never trailed in the contest as they were led by Monica Prerovsky with 17, Pascale O'Donoghue with 16 points and Amy Koziol contributed with 13.

The Lady Hawks will be in action this afternoon as they host Highland in the gymnasium at 3:00p.m.. They will also be at Elgin, Saturday at 1:00 p.m. and then will come back to host Oakton Tuesday at 5:00 p.m..

Area high school graduates choose Harper

By Allen Chinlund
Staff Writer

"Harper College is the college of choice for many in-district high school graduates," said Bev Hoffman, coordinator of admissions outreach.

The number of graduates from area high schools enrolled at Harper this fall increased by 7.3 percent over last fall, according to a Harper College admission's report.

"Tuition is sky-rocketing at four-year public and private schools. And, at the same time, the government is cutting back on funding for financial aid. There's not as much money available to students to make these schools affordable. We are much more affordable," said Hoffman.

Of the 1988 area high school graduates attending college, Harper was frequently selected. 36.4 percent from District 211, 26.7 percent from District 214, and 19.7 percent from District 220.

In District 211 schools, 45.8 percent of the 1988 college-bound graduates from Hoffman Estates attend Harper, as are 40.5 percent from Conant. Elk Grove High School-leady District 214 will 30.4 percent of their college freshman studying at Harper. The largest increase in high school graduates who attend Harper, is from Buffalo Grove High School. Of their college-bound freshmen, 24.3 percent enrolled at Harper this fall, which represented an increase of 5.8 percent from fall semester 1987.

Phil Troyer, a counselor from the Center for New Students, believes that some of the college-bound graduates are recruited through the Student Ambassador program. Student ambassadors are students who visit local high schools and relay their Harper experiences.

"I think that young people believe their peers more readily than they do us old folks over 45," said Troyer. "The student ambassadors honestly share their experiences, their likes and dislikes, with prospective students," added Troyer.

Troyer cites these reasons for Harper's success in attracting area graduates:

•The student is not ready to leave home.

•The student desires technical skills that a community college provides.

•The high school student's GPA was not high enough to be accepted into a selected four-year school.

•The student is uncertain of a major.

•The student delayed making a decision.

•The student has job commitments.

Harper earns National Finalist honors

By Jamie Beeson
Staff Writer

Harper College was officially recognized as a "National Finalist in the Secretary's Award for Outstanding Adult Basic Education Programs." Thirteen schools nationwide received the award, two of which were community colleges. The other community college to receive the award is Seattle Community College in Washington.

The award was presented at a reception at Harper College by Brian Carey, a U.S. department of education representative. Patricia Mulcrone, associate professor/chair adult education development; Paul N. Thompson, president of Harper College; and Kris Howard, board chairman, were on hand to receive the award. Guests included at the luncheon were Philip Crane, U.S. representative; Virginia McDonald, state senator. A congratulatory message was received from Governor James R. Thompson.

The entire process of earning the award took approximately nine months. A questionnaire which included program information, the number of students, and a self-evaluation had to be sent in.

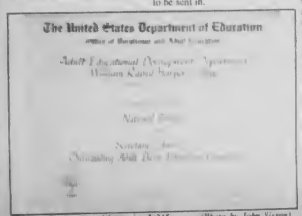

Harper had to respond to ten different areas. William R. Langner, education program specialist, did an on-site visit in May. After the site visit, the choices were narrowed to two schools in the state of Illinois. Then it was cut to two schools in the Midwest region, which included six states. Then Harper entered the nationals.

The Adult Education Department at Harper is proud to have been nationally honored. In response to the award, President Thompson said, "It is nice to come to work in the morning knowing that our school has been nationally recognized, especially after being here for less than four months."

"I hope to have more opportunities such as this," he added. "The significance of this award is that only two community schools nationwide received it."

Mulcrone said, "I am pleased and excited. This award shows hard work and dedication by our staff, and it shows ongoing institutional support by the College."

To sum things up, President Thompson said, "No single person deserves special recognition. There are so many people that make it work. It was a team effort."

A vision for Harper College

By Mona Tsa
Staff Writer

As Harper College plans for the future, the Institutional Planning Committee (IPC) will continue in its role to gather and develop future goals.

The IPC consists of twenty members, who each represents a major division for a five-year term.

The committee translates, through an analysis and data-gathering mode, possible goal ideas, which are then incorporated into a planning process. The main focus of the institutional planning process is to involve all members of the institution, to obtain feedback on the current goals, and to interface with budgetary procedures. This agendum initiates in the fall and operates on a yearly cycle.

The President initiates the planning process by his support and encouragement of participation. The IPC formulates a survey which is sent to faculty, staff, and students for suggestions on future goals.

During the phase "Synthesis", the IPC brings together and evaluates the responses, and then submits them to the administration as recommendations.

The Chair of the IPC, Pat Mulcrone, stated "What we turn in to the administration are purely recommendations. It's the duty of the administration to look at the recommendations and to formulate the goal statements, using the IPC and other sources of information."

In turn, the administration, annually sends an official set of goals for Harper to the Board of Trustees. The Board of Trustees adopts the institutional goals.

Most of the recommendations of the IPC are adopted by the Board of Trustees in July. The institutional goals adopted in July 1988, consisted of four main ideas.

Focus one revolved on quality programs and curriculum. Some features under this focus included the development of programs to increase student retention, research on student success and effective production of college publications.

Focus Two incorporated the idea of an "effective employee development", which can concentrate on "student-oriented and service-oriented marketing philosophy."

Focus Three and Four were relative to continuing facility and space needs, with respect to funding.

Graduates

•The student prefers small class size.

•Harper is in a convenient location.

•The cost is within the student's means.

•Competitive programs are less threatening at community colleges.

According to an Admission's report, many of Harper's new freshmen will attend here for two years, and then transfer to a four-year college or university to complete their bachelor's degree.

Other freshmen decide to enroll in two-year career programs to prepare them for immediate entry into the job market. Harper offers more than 60 programs in the areas of business, technology, and engineering, as well as in the related fields of food service management, child development, journalism, design and merchandising, and allied health careers.

"Harper College has a good reputation in the community and I think our credibility with high school students is increasing," assesses Hoffman.

Information about specific programs and majors is available from the Admissions Office, Ext 2405.

Vision

"My instruction to the community is to say, which of these current goals need to be continued. We don't lose sight of what's current," said Mulcrone.

The IPC, also, involved with long-term range plans to advert the direction in which Harper should be moving during the next ten years. The institution may broaden its view to fifteen years.

The IPC is reflecting and developing adequate goals for Harper, there is also an involvement with a nation-wide document titled, Building Communities.

"Building Communities is a report on the commission of the future of community colleges. It is a document drawn by a panel of different leaders in the community college movement," stated Mulcrone.

The document is not only nation-wide, but also applies locally. It consists of general ideas, directions in which community colleges may consider to improve student outcomes and the effectiveness of the institution.

Harper's vision in the future is continually focused on enhancing opportunities for the student, institution, and itself. In order to implement all or any of these goals, the IPC must receive responses from all segments of Harper College.

Plans for nursing scholarship

By Alisa Ulvinlund
Staff Writer

Plans are underway to set up a Nursing Scholarship Fund honoring retiree Joanne Heinly for her 23 years of service to Harper College. The fund will be set up as an endowed scholarship. Every year the interest will be awarded to eligible nursing students.

The first scholarship is expected to be set up by spring of 1990. The eligibility and fund requirements are to be determined at a later date.

Heinly was hired by Harper College in 1966 to develop the associate nursing degree curriculum. She was the first nursing educator at the college. Heinly served as Director of the Nursing Program from 1966 to 1973. During her 23 years at Harper, she has made many contributions to the education of more than 1200 nurses.

You can make a donation to the newly established "Joanne Heinly Scholarship Fund." Make your check payable to the fund. Send the check to the Development Office at Harper College.

Fourth place for speech team in last tournament

The Harper Speech Team received its Christmas present by placing fourth against 16 schools at Elgin Community College on December 2-3, the last tournament of the semester.

I'm very proud of the team's performance. The way the students work together is very impressive, commented speech coach Marcia Latrenta.

The team also took nine individual trophies, led by Linda Lang, who brought home four awards.

Lang, a second year member of the team, placed sixth in Communication Analysis, third in Speech to Entertain, second in Informative Speaking, and first in Persuasive Speaking.

First year member Rosemary Langer also did well by taking three trophies. She won fourth place for Persuasive Speaking, third in Informative Speaking, and first place in Novice Impromptu Speaking.

Also placing for Harper's team were Peter Lindstrom, Scott Neidl, and Tari Vaughn. Lindstrom placed sixth in Informative Speaking, and Neidl and Vaughn took the fifth place trophies for their Duet Acting scene.

Other members contributing to the team's success were John Gardner, Wynn Grippe, Dina Photo, and Doug Ray.

The team will compete next at College of DuPage in late January. For more information, call Marcia Latrenta at 397-3000, ext 2424.

Harper College will be offering a new program, Business Information Management (BIM), under the direction of Professor Zilkowski. The State Board of Community College says, "This will be a model program for the rest of the state."

This program trains personnel to become managers of the terminal operators and purchasers of computer equipment. Either a two-year degree or a 30-semester hour certificate is available.

The student will have the ability to work in the information center of a company, learn how to buy computer hardware and software, and purchase his own equipment.

During spring semester, Information Applications and Technologies (BIM 170) and Enterprise-wide Information Analysis (BIM 175), will be offered on Tuesday and Thursday evenings to obtain maximum enrollment. Class times are 6:25-9:05 p.m.

For more information, call Professor Zilkowski at 397-3000, ext. 2555 or stop-in at Building 1, Room 214.

The trouble with numbers

By Alisa Chinlund
Staff Writer

Do you hate to balance your checkbook? Do large numbers make you nervous? "Do you sweat when you hear the word "MATH?" Do you feel like no matter how hard you try you will never understand math problems? And do you realize that final exams are just around the corner? Well, if you experience any of these problems - YOU AREN'T ALONE!

According to Phil Troyer, student development counselor, approximately 95% of all women eliminated themselves from 80% of their career options due to math anxiety. The original research conducted by Sheila Tobras, 10 years ago, still holds true today.

"Our culture seems to dissuade women from going into math related areas; women had permission to stop learning math earlier than boys," says Troyer.

As a result, they lack the basic skills needed to get along in our math-oriented world. They become math anxious and many women avoid math at all costs.

Math anxiety affects mostly women. But it is not exclusively a female dilemma. Troyer believes that anxious men exist but are more reluctant to seek help. He believes that some men feel that "their maleness is being attacked" if they ask for help.

Math anxious men and women can now join together and receive help dealing with their anxieties, without fear or embarrassment.

Starting October 7 the Math Lab/Faculty and Student Development Personnel will offer a self-help group for any Harper student or member of the community who is afraid of math. The person does not need to be currently enrolled in a math course.

The group, led by Phil Troyer, Math Lab Assistant Val Bagratian and Associate Professor of Math Margret Scott, will meet on the first and third Fridays of December from 12:30p.m. 2:00p.m. in D106.

This support group is not a lecture or tutoring group. It is intended to help individuals overcome their anxieties in mathematical situations.

Topics to be covered during these sessions will include: What feelings do students have about math anxiety?; What triggers those feelings?; How do I control those feelings of insecurity?; What techniques are there to deal with math anxiety?

The group leaders will share their own experiences of math anxiety and facilitate participant interchange about their own experiences.

The members will find out they are not alone in their fears and that help is available. There is no charge to join the sessions and students can join at anytime.

Groups such as this one have been successful at community colleges and four-year schools throughout the United States.

An example of a success story is "We beat it, so can you!" videotape 3438 available in the LRC media circulation desk.

For more information about math anxiety Troyer recommends these two books Mind Over Math by Stanley Kogelman and Joseph Warren and Math Anxiety by Sheila Tobras.

If you have any questions or need more facts please contact Margret Scott @ ext. 2401, Val Bagratian @ ext. 2395 or Phil Troyer @ ext. 2208.

Art interpretation

By Vickie Milewski
Staff Writer

"Outside the studio the sculptor's internal dialogue gives way to the dialogue that a sculpture sets up with the environment it was created for. Outdoor sculpture responds to the dynamics of a community, or of those in it, who have a use for sculpture. It is this aspect of use, of utility, that gives public sculpture its vital and lively place in the public mind. The challenges utility brings to the sculptor's mind, and art, are as varied as the people and sited encountered with each commission."

This is a quote from Richard Hunt whose sculptures surround the Harper College community. What is this sculpture's utility? What did Richard Hunt want to convey to the viewer? When viewing these sculptures, what takes place within the viewer's mind. What process, or shall I say, experience occurs?

Here are some ideas that I came up with. Large Hybrid- free form flower unleashes form and allows it to take shape. Form brings style, style is a manifestation of one's identity, character, and soul. If this sculpture "frees form" for me, it can also allow me to release my imaginative mind and go exploring. It gives me the ability to push aside the confines of school and studying, remembering and forgetting, facts and/or figures. Unleashing creativity to run among silver flowers larger then the confines I feel.

Ascending Angel- brings back reason ; angels we all are, yet fallen and walking upon the ground. We have a chance to fly free from these confines of sin and lust. Angel on the bottom can be angel on top.

Flyaway- returns me to school, to my books. Growth in steel encased within design. Seeing something trying to fly makes me realize I need to walk upon the ground.

Use quility. What use do the students of Harper have with Richard Hunts sculpture? Possibly, abstraction of reality, relaxation from pressure, escape into imagination, or just a chance to experience art. It is your choice. Just sit in A Building main floor and look up.

Health Corner

Many of us look forward to the holiday season as a festive and joyous. Because it is the season to be jolly, there are more opportunities for socializing and drinking.

Ways to meet the demands of social drinking and avoid drunkenness are:

•Know your limit.
•Eat while you drink.
•Drink slowly. Sip for enjoyment, don't gulp for effect.
•Only accept a drink when you really want one.
•Cultivate taste, choose quality rather than quantity.
•Skip a drink now and then.
•If you must drive home after you ate dinner out, have your drinks with dinner, not afterward.
•Beware of unfamiliar drinks.
•Don't drink to relax when you really need a change of pace or some sleep.
•Remember that the purpose of a party is togetherness, not impatience.

If you plan a holiday party or family get together, show real hospitality. Plan interesting activities and encouraging conversation. Alcohol should enhance conversation not dominate it.

In order to promote party togetherness and keep control, provide enough seats for all and plan for people movement.

Choose a banquet [illegible] known discretion -one who does not give every glass an extra "shot". Since people try to pace their drinks, doubling up isn't hospitality, it's rude.

Serve drinks at reasonable intervals. A drink per hour schedule means that good company prevails.

One out of three adults chooses not to drink at all, so don't push drinks. When a guest says, "No, thanks," to an alcohol drink- don't insist. Offer a choice of non-alcoholic beverages.

Encourage snacks while your guests are drinking, not only after. Food slows the rate at which alcohol is absorbed into the blood stream, and also slows the rate at which people drink.

If it's a dinner party, serve on schedule. A cocktail hour is supposed to enhance a fine dinner, not compete with it.

After too many drinks, guests lose their ability to make good judgements.

Decide in advance when you want your party to end. A considerate way to close the drinking phase is to serve a substantial snack.

A hearty snack provides some non-drinking time before your guests start to drive home.

However, if a guest has had too much to drink, it is your responsibility to see that he or she gets home safely. Don't let the person drive!

There is no quick way to sober someone up. One hour is necessary for the body to metabolize the alcohol in one average drink.

Often the best thing to do for someone who is drunk is to provide him or her with a comfortable place to sleep it off.

Have a joyous holiday season. Remember the holiday spirit comes from within- not from a bottle!

Holiday Bill of Rights

•You have the right to take care of yourself: eat right, exercise regularly and get enough rest.

•You have the right to have mixed emotions: happy, sad, frustrated, guilty, afraid, thankful.

•You have the right to solitude--for planning, thinking, reflection, introspection, prayer and relaxation.

•You have the right not to accept party or dinner invitations.

•You have the right not to listen to I'm Dreaming of a White Christmas more than 25 times. Purchase ear plugs.

•You have the right to ask for help and support from friends, family, your church/synagogue and/or community service agencies.

•You have the right to give presents that are within your holiday budget.

•You have the right to say no to alcohol, drugs, cigarettes and a second piece of pecan pie a la mode.

•You have the right not to ride with a drunk driver.

•You have the right to take away the keys of a drunk friend or relative who wants to drive, and to call a taxi for them.

•You have the right to smile at a grumpy sales clerk or an angry driver, and give them a PEACE of your mind.

LRC looks back:

Accomplishments of a busy semester

The library added several new programs during this semester to serve your campus needs.

Easy access to newspapers from over 450 cities across the country are available. This service is provided by NEWSBANK, a microfiche collection of full-text articles, and is arranged by broad subject areas.

–A face lift of sorts is in progress at the LRC. Attractive and functional chairs in gray and navy replaced lost and broken furniture.

All ceiling light covers have been scrubbed, permitting a brighter glow in the stacks. Two small study areas were recently created by adding doors to corner spaces.

The automation project has added to the face lift. A computer room, complete with raised floor, has been constructed and filled with equipment.

Soon computer catalog terminals will march down the center of the library on tables providing space for printers.

Instead of having to comb through annual and quarterly printed volumes of journal articles, patrons will be able to access several years of information instantly.

The four indexes offered are: Business Index, Social Sciences Index, Humanities Index, and Readers Guide to Periodical Literature. These resources are available on a CD-ROM based computer system.

Printers are also part of this system so patrons can obtain a paper copy of their search results.

The LRC was open and offered personal assistance for 3,440 hours. Despite limited access, 166,400 people passed through the gate into the Library on second floor.

Over 64,000 books and AV items circulated. LRC faculty answered 17,750 reference questions. Cataloging added 2,938 new books and 2,214 new AV materials.

Inter-library Loan borrowed 1,000 items for Harper patrons and filled 1,200 requests from other libraries.

We created fifteen separate exhibits in the LRC.

Print Shop produced approximately 9,500,000 offset copies to meet campus needs. Graphics worked on 1,428 projects for the Harper community.

TV production completed 286 projects for faculty and students. AV Distribution broadcasted 4,950 programs over campus TV channels and distributed 16,625 pieces of equipment to classrooms.

The Photo Lab produced 14,720 slides and 12,994 photos. Media Services added two satellite dishes for tele-conference and other direct program distribution.

LRC faculty and staff worked on automation specifications, reviewed vendor products, and recommended an on-line library computer system for the LRC.

As the library puts on a new face for next semester, the staff asks that you join them fresh and early next year!

The Bunger Awards: And the winner is...

The time has come to say "thank you" and "farewell" (sorry Liz and Trudy). My semester began back in July, when the Harbinger staff consisted of about three people. We decided to take on the nearly impossible task of putting out a summer orientation edition of the Harbinger. Throughout the semester the staff has grown both in size and closeness. Everyone has worked hard to create a good image for the Binger.

First I would like to thank Trudy Herbst: secretary, copy editor, inspirator, PR person, and "mom". Trudy is the only staff member who has probably put in more hours than me (and I was putting in more than 40 hours a week for the better part of the semester). She helped me organize all of the Binger's files, train our business manager, assign articles, proof articles, motivate the staff, make the paper's name known to businesses, set up staff meetings, clean up the office after the paper is out, and make sure everyone is doing their homework.

Managing Editor Robyn Davis has been with me since July (fool), which is quite an accomplishment if you look at our track record. Out of nine editors, three have been replaced and one was vacant until our third issue. She has spent more than her share of Tuesday nights working on the paper (when I say Tuesday night, I really mean early Wednesday morning). Next semester she is moving to Chicago and will no longer be attending Harper. To Robyn I also say farewell.

Without photos this paper would look pretty bland, and without John Sisson, photography editor, there would be no photos. Until recently John was taking and developing all of the photos.

My pet project this semester (well, one of them) was Club News on the Upcoming page. Sue Berne is one of the only editors to meet our Monday deadline. She has pennoted the Club News column making it a success.

For three years I doubled as News Editor and Editor-in-Chief. (Well, maybe three weeks. It seemed like three years.) While Jeff Freebus wasn't exactly thrilled with the idea, I managed to persuade him to take News Editor for me. Without Jeff, either the paper would not be going out, or I would have a permanent residence in a mental hospital (I already have a temporary residence).

Like Jeff, Scott Neidl replaced a vacancy and kept the paper going. His pages improve weekly, adding to the professional look of the paper.

Pete Soby brought a new meaning to the "Sports page". Pete is the only editor I can think of foolish enough to ask for three pages and capable enough to fill them.

Money-man Mark Balke has increased the revenue of the paper at an almost unbelievable pace. But that's not all. He lays out comics (and just about anything else he can get his hands on) and even writes for us occasionally.

I would also like to mention Andy Balazs, Entertainment Editor and Byron Blanchard, Sports Editor, who were unable to complete the semester with us. This is probably the extent of acknowledgment they will get, which is a pity. Andy Balazs worked hard and donated a lot of personal time as photographer, writer, and editor. Byron also spent many a Tuesday night slaving over his pages. Good luck to you both in your future endeavors.

To all of the Binger Staff, "Thank you".

Over the past two years, Harper has become bigger and better than ever before with an expanded and improved campus and curriculum. To the Administration, Facutty, and Staff for their achievements, cooperation, and support, I also extend my thanks.

Editor-in-Chief

Off Her Rocker with our mom

So-long, farewell, auf wiedersehn, good-bye

By Liz Brouseau
Staff Columnist

I have always hated good-byes. Some folks say they can't stand long farewells, but me, I hate any type of so-long.

This regretful shortcoming has always had a mixed affect on my life, as I have generally dealt with my distaste for fond farewell by refusing to bid one to those departing.

On the one hand I have lost many relationships as those who have looked forward to the wonderful (for moment) or glorious good-bye have been disappointed by my total nonchalance. I mean how could she just blow off saying good-bye?

But that's okay because those are those other true friends who have eventually forgiven me later when I have contacted them by letter or telephone. Usually they will tell me that they understand and forgive me because they know I am a lousy, rotten, selfish so and so but they love me anyway.

I suppose this proves to be a very effective way of finding out who one's true friends are according to the measure of how well they can tolerate my good bye. But this is not the reason I avoid this unpleasant situation, rather, I just can't conform to saying so long.

Don't get me wrong, I do not begrudge anyone who can conform, but usually it is the understood who will drop me like a hot potato after my long client, story.

Generally I am able to come up with some pretty good excuses, ploys, and dodges to avoid the unpleasant task. A few of them include: I have to go shopping. I have irreversible plans. I have homework, it's time to clean out the oven, I need to climb a mountain, or the ever popular, I'll call you back in a couple minutes, as I am quickly grabbing for the back door.

Because so many folks will get the wrong idea when they feel they have been mistreated, I would like to clear up a couple of things.

First, if a person doesn't say good-bye it is not necessarily a reflection of their true feelings. It is more a display of one's inability to cope with the loss they are about to endure.

Second, if people's paths are meant to cross again, the fellow who is not so fond of farewell is probably going to be the very fellow responsible for initiating the reunion.

Third, if I may be excused, I have to go write a term paper.

Naked Stupidity, Sheer Fun

By Scott Neidt
Entertainment Editor

Because this is the last issue of the Harbinger this semester, here's a review of a movie for the holiday season that breaks up the monotony of all the Christmas films. This weekend I went to the cinema, walked up to the box office and said, "I would like one ticket for The Naked Gun, I think."

The Naked Gun, from the files of Police Squad, which is its full name, is a bizarre story about Lieutenant Frank Drebin(Leslie Nielsen) of the Los Angeles Police Squad.

Drebin's partner and close friend (O. J. Simpson) is hospitalized by a bunch of players in a drug ring. (Pretty funny so far, Huh?) Drebin then swears that he will find the men who shot his partner./There, we now have a plot!)

While investigating the attack, Drebin comes across a very interesting villain, Mr. Victor Ludwig (Ricardo Montalban). (Yes, Mr. Roarke.) Ludwig is a bigwig in L. A. who covers his tracks very well, until tracks cover him. (If this last sentence needs clarification, see the film.)

Ludwig plans on assassinating Queen Elizabeth when she visits the City of Angels by using a form of hypnosis to control a person long enough so he/she can become an assassin. (Notice how we have deviated from the original plot.)

The lovely Miss Jane Spencer(Priscilla Presley), a current employee for Ludwig, enters the scene as Drebin's love interest. Drebin thinks she, Spencer, is just there to throw him off the scent.

This entire film is under the direction of the demented mind of David Zucker.

Zucker, who previously involved in the Airplane movies, Top Secret and the Police Squad television program, does not let down the audience in this new motion picture. He has all the worst puns you can think of, mixed with an overriding Stooges type of silliness.

Nielsen, who starred in the T.V. Police Squad program, once again leaves the movie-goers laughing. The character of Drebin is one of sheer heroics combined with extreme idiocy, and Nielsen portrays this in a very comedic form.

Montalban tries his luck as a villain in a comedy, a Wrath of Khan, villain turned silly if you will, and does a very funny job.

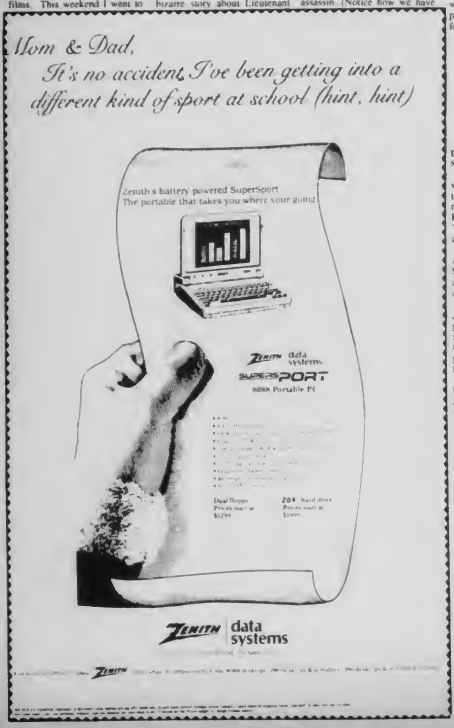

Presley, after the death of her husband, has really come into the spotlight. Her performance as Spencer made me wonder if it was Priscilla Presley on the screen.

Due to the nature of this film, rating it becomes very difficult. On one hand the movie was incredibly stupid, and should appeal solely to those who enjoy very bad jokes that make you say, "Oooo, that hurt."

But, on the other hand, the movie made me laugh at incredibly goofy lines like Nielsen saying, "By the way, I faked every orgasm!"

The solution I came up with is to give the movie two ratings, the first based on the overall stupidity of the film, and the second rating is because I think anybody who wants a light-hearted night out should see it.

Just let it be said that I warned about the film... kind of.

No Words Needed

By Alisa Chinlund
Staff Writer

He can tell stories without words. He can convey emotions through the movements of his marionettes. On December 2nd, David A. Syrotiak's puppets "came to life" to entertain audiences at Harper College.

Syrotiak, the founder and Artistic Director of National Marionette Theatre, delighted audiences with two performances of The Toy Shop at 10am and 12:30pm assisted by puppeteer Jon Boutiler. Syrotiak also performed one showing of his solo performance The Little Concert at 7:30pm. All three performances were held in J-building room J143.

Before The Toy Shop began, Syrotiak informed his audience that parts of the show would be similar to Chinese Theatre. The actors in Chinese Theatre, like Syrotiak and Boutiler, wear black gloves and a hood when they want to disappear.

Although Syrotiak and Boutiler were still on stage, the audience couldn't see them during certain sequences.

Syrotiak also asked the audience, composed mainly of young school children, what their interpretation of fantasy was. Some of the children's responses were "like a puppet show" "make believe" "what you imagine" and "something that comes to life".

The Toy Shop, appropriately, is the story of a toy shop where the toys come to life at the stroke of midnight. The background music for the stories are selections by Ibert, Rossini and Shastakovich.

The two main plots in The Toy Shop are the love triangle between the toy soldier, the ballerina, and the mouse king; and a curious toy clown's search through a Jack-in-the-Box to find out what's inside.

One of the sub-stories was the tale of a mother duck and her three ducklings. During this story the children cared about a little duckling and spoke about their concerns. The children in the audience commented "no duckie, no" when one of the ducklings strolled in the opposite direction of the mother duck. Children also said, "duckie fall" every time the duckling toppled over.

By the end of the tale the duckling was on the right track thanks to the help of the mother duck.

This story has a valuable moral. Love your children, and give special attention to the children that lag behind. Pick them up when they fall.

The second show, The Little Concert, is a series of short emotion filled vignettes, from the 105 minute show In Concert. It was geared to an adult audience.

"Each vignette tells a complete story in three to twelve minutes," stated Syrotiak.

One of the vignettes was about a boy determined to learn how to roller skate. The moral of the tale is to be patient, follow your dreams and you can do any thing if you put your mind to it.

Do you want to be a puppeteer? Syrotiak offers this advice, "start as an avocation. Decide how you want the puppet to look and move, then bring the puppet to life. You either have the talent or you don't. There are no guarantees in this business."

Syrotiak offers, "Puppetry is a synthesis of the arts and the puppet itself, it is an Everyman with no limitations. . .it is the crystallization of the imagination of the puppeteer."

EDIE BRICKELL AND NEW BOHEMIANS

A New Sound for Changing Times

By Scott Morton
Staff Writer

It's been nearly 15 years since Jon Landau, then a music critic, penned the words "I saw the future of rock 'n' roll and its name is Bruce Springsteen." Whether you're a Springsteen fan or not, it's hard to deny that he has held the most dominating presence in the rock industry during the post-Beatle era.

The future Landau spoke of is now our present, or perhaps even our past. Today the future of rock and roll has a new name: Edie Brickell and the New Bohemians.

This six-member band hailing from Texas put on a show like I have never seen before. I'm still struggling to gather the details of what actually took place on the intimate Park West stage last week.

Several days after the show, I'm still invigorated over my newfound faith in the American music industry. How a truly talented band could slip through the cracks of pop politics without being 16 years old, wearing a mini skirt or using tinted hair mousse is still beyond my comprehension.

Before I thrust this band into sainthood, I must say that they do have a few short comings, as unnoticeable as they may be. As with many new bands, they do not have a very powerful stage presence, but that usually overcomes itself with time. Even towards the end of the show, band members, especially Brickell, showed signs of improvement and actually displayed some energy, which was in contrast to the first half hour of the show.

The concert opened with Little Miss S and went thankfully into Love Like We Do. Then, in the middle of the third song, The Wheel, Brickell stopped and asked that the front spotlights be turned off so she could see the crowd.

It was odd, and some may even say it was unprofessional to stop for that, but it added a relaxed, down to earth atmosphere that the crowd was looking for.

Just a few songs later, during She, Brickell's microphone and a couple of amps on the left side of the stage lost power.

Without delay the band fell into a 10-minute improv, and then when power was restored, they ripped back into She from where they left off, without pausing to recuperate. The crowd was impressed and with good reason.

By the time they played What I Am, most of the standing room only crowd had gathered in front of the stage.

In addition to all 12 cuts from their sassy debut album Shooting Rubber Bands at the Stars, the Bohemians also played four new songs that gave the promise a second album would be just as enjoyable.

The set, which lasted nearly two hours, was one thrilling mood swing after another and ended after two encores with a melancholy version of Lou Reed's Walk on the Wild Side.

When you hear a band play this well together, you can't help but wonder how long it will last. The Beatles, The Rolling Stones, and The Police all fell apart over "artistic differences." Even Bruce has split with the E Street Band twice, and now U2 is showing signs of descent.

In a recent interview, Brickell said she didn't like her name in front of the band's title, and bassist Brad Houser remarked that she would be nothing without them. The fact that she has writing credit for all the lyrics on the album and he only gets credit for collaboration with the rest of the band for the music on five of the tracks obviously shows nothing, right?

She probably wouldn't have broken through like she has without the same band, but it goes both ways. Brickell's sweet, appealing voice is just as valuable a commodity as the band's cohesiveness. Both are good by themselves, but the chemistry together is what makes it irresistible.

This band has the potential to be the next R.E.M. or Springsteen. Whether or not the future I saw on Tuesday night becomes the present depends on them. I can only hope.

TOP 10 COUNTDOWN FOR '88

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

We're almost made it all the way through 1988 on an uneventful year for music. No matter how bad a year can be though, a critic can still come up with a top ten for the year, and even stretch to my list if necessary. Here are my picks for the ten best album releases of the year.

10. The Pogues If I Should Fall From Grace with God. An album that takes you from Ireland to Australia and onward to Spain with stops along the way until you finish in Ireland.

9. Timbuk 3 Eden Alley. You don't have to agree with the issues to enjoy the music. Besides what album can arise tolerance/protest in one song and sing about Tarzan in another? A pleasant album.

8. Talking Heads Naked. Talking Heads continue to make great records and be successful despite moving from the dizzying happiness of Little Creatures to their current mix of politics and music. A good dose of reality seems to be a career for the artists formerly known as.

7. Thomas Dolby Aliens Ate My Buick. Seems as an artist involved in soundtracks and collaborations from disco rather pop to genius, something from material and crystallized in his. Alternative will mean from his previous album. Both prove that he's still got it.

6. R.E.M. Green. Not quite good enough to make the top 5, but McJagger Stipe and company always have a hard time producing an album that isn't pretty darn good. Green is an album that mixes politics, ambivalence and as usual the music doesn't suck because of it. You would expect it to be not the opposite? R.E.M. is getting better at show songs, too.

5. Midnight Oil Diesel and Dust. This is probably the most political of all the 1988 releases. Instead of getting obsessed with making a point (and not proving attention to the music), Peter Garrett's sheer dedication for his subject makes the music better. With this album, Midnight Oil finally ... worlds of recognition ... deserved for many ...

4. That Petrol Emotion End of the Millennium Psychosis Blues. Here is another album that runs the gamut of musical styles, from funk to punk, but the star of the album is Steve Mack's terrific voice. As far as politics goes, these boys are from Ireland, enough said. This is an excellent follow-up to last year's Babble.

3. Shriekback, Go Bang! Shriekback just keeps moving despite the loss of co-leader Dave Allen. This is a collection of superb material (including their cover of 'Get Down Tonight') that unfortunately clocks in at over 30 minutes. Although Shriekback may never match the greatness of 1985's Oil and Gold, they continue to make excellent music.

2. Cocteau Twins, Blue Bell Knoll. Impossible to describe, Cocteau Twins' music has to be heard, or rather experienced. Instead of singing, Elizabeth Fraser uses her voice as another instrument to blend beautifully with the other instruments to create sonic, absolutely lovely music.

1. The Icicle Works, Blind The Icicle Works have been improving since their debut. Their combination of great music with near-perfect songwriting reaches new heights with Blind. The hooks and melodies on this album are some of the catchiest I've heard. Unfortunately, recent reports have said that Liverpool's Icicle Works have split up. Chris Sharrock and Chris Layhe have left the band leaving Ian McNabb all by himself. All good things come to an end.

Albums that are also worth mention are the 1988 releases by Wire, Siouxsie and the Banshees, Crowded House, Ministry, the Northern Pikes, Vamper Van Beethoven, and the Smithereens.

1989 should see much more action in the music scene, with new releases from such big-name college chart artists as The Cure, New Order, The The, and Kate Bush. Hopefully, I will be here to cover them.

Santa visits Harper

Community spirit revives

By Douglas Ray
Editor-in-Chief

The Holiday Reception and Tree Trimming Party organized by Michael Nejman, coordinator of student activities, and the Student Clubs and Organizations was the first community effort to celebrate the holiday season in over five years. The event took place in the A Building lounge near the fireplace and featured nearly $700 in cookies and punch given free to the community. People helped decorate the "community tree" with ornaments representing their Club, Organization, or Department. Dean Malambri played seasonal music on the piano, and the fireplace, "lit for the first time in years", added to the atmosphere.

At about 12:30 p.m. President Thompson, cheered by an anxious audience, lit the eight foot balsam fir donated by Knupper Nursery. Nejman and members of the planning committee were impressed with the turn out and plan to sponsor the event next year. The tree will remain near the fire place until December 15. (Photo spread by John Sirson.)

Toys for Tots Collection on Campus

By Susan Berne
Upcoming Editor

Traditionally, the holiday season is a time to give gifts. Again this year, the Food Service staff is providing the Harper community the chance to make this a happy holiday season for area children through a Toys for Tots collection.

Last year Toys for Tots collected and distributed 65,000 toys to needy area children with the help of church groups and non-profit organizations. Now in its fifth year, the group hopes to fill requests for 80,000 toys with the help of Harper's collection. [illegible] is the Chicagoland sponsor and Danny Thomas is the National sponsor.

To help a needy child have a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year bring brand new [illegible] unwrapped toys to the bin located in the Building A cafeteria. [illegible] are needed for children up to age [illegible]. The collection will continue through December [illegible].

Greek Study Tour Meeting

A meeting to explain Harper's summer study tour to Greece and Turkey is set for Friday, January 20, at 7 p.m. in the Building A Board Room. A question-answer session, slides, and refreshments are planned. The meeting and tour are open to all.

The dates of the Harper College study tour, however, are changed. The tour will be from June 23 - July 8, 1989. It was originally scheduled for June 16 - July 1.

The tour includes a week on the Greek mainland and a seven-day cruise to Istanbul, Izmir and several Greek islands.

The tour cost of $2199 includes round-trip airfare from Chicago, touring, hotels, most meals, and lectures on Greek history and culture. Students may earn three Humanities 115 credits.

Brochures are available in F-313, or contact Martha Simonsen, at Ext. 2285.

Christmas wish list

Each year Harper strives to reach its goal, Excellence in Education. Unfortunately, an institution this large always has room for improvement. This is the Harbinger staff's wish list for Harper College: (The list was fairly redundant, so I cut straight to day number 12.)

On the twelfth day of Christmas our Board of Trustees will give to us--Twelve hundred pencil sharpeners (V.P. Vern Manke gave us an early present),

Eleven groups of trees to break wind (cold wind, not warm),

Ten million stars (to gaze upon with a new Observatory),

Nine thousand books for an enlarged library (see the first day of Christmas),

Eight hundred new pieces of furniture (if the President can do it, so can we),

Seven less days of school (finals week),

Pause and take a breath.

Six new art pieces (something from the realism category), and FIVE (minimum) buildings remodeled for handicapped access,

Four clean stairwells (remove the tobacco stains from the walls in F building stairwells),

Three thousand student parking places (closer to the buildings),

Two electron microscopes (If we can afford an Observatory, why not?),

and One Liberal Arts Building.

Football Season Overview

The Harper Hawk football team-Regional Champions. (photo courtesy of Harper College)

By Sandy Salvatore
Staff Writer

The Harper Hawks Football team finished an outstanding season with a 9-2 mark. They also accomplished their goal of making it back to the RC Cola Bowl in Iowa.

"Our goal this year was just to make it back to Iowa," said freshman defensive lineman Ken Hall.

That goal was seriously questioned when Grand Rapids defeated Harper 20-17 in a very close game. "We really should have beat them," commented sophomore defensive back Tom Thrawl, "it was just like everybody sort of thought we had it in the bag. They were a good team and they came back and beat us." Grand Rapid's scoring was the result of Harper's turnovers and bad punts.

Hard work finally paid off for the Hawks when they came away with a big victory over Joliet 30-15.

The mighty Trojans of Rock Valley were left with severed pride as a direct result of the Hawks annihilating them 61-12. The Hawks tied a school record for most points scored in a game. The Hawk defense only allowed the Trojans 175 total yards. The Hawks offense accumulated 413 total yards.

The Hawks took sole possession of first place in the North Central Community College Conference by coming away with a victory over the College of DuPage. The game was extremely close as Harper slipped by 24-23.

The long trip to Olesby, Illinois to take on the Illinois Valley Apaches was worth the trip. The Hawks improved their winning ways by defeating the Apaches 28-19. Harper's main man James Haywood led the team's comeback in the second half by scoring three touchdowns.

Harper followed that win with an impressive victory in their Homecoming against Moraine Valley. The Hawks defense remained intensely dominant and kept Marauder standout Roy Richardson to limited yardage.

The 5-1 Hawks traveled to Rock Island to take on Augustana. They proved why they were in first place by coming away with a 29-0 whipping of Augustana.

The Hawks outlasted the Triton Trojans 35-29. The game went in a third overtime and finally ended when Steve Turzynski intercepted Triton quarterback Eric Keller's pass in the end zone. This victory secured the Hawks a spot in the playoffs.

In the first game of the playoffs, the Moraine Valley Marauders were knocked out 35-0 by Harper. This big win was a sign in the right direction for the Hawks on their road to the Cola Bowl.

Next on Harper's road was a much-awaited rematch between Harper and College of DuPage. The game would decide the Regional Champions. Even though Harper scored its fewest points of the season, the game ended in dramatic fashion during the third overtime with Harper winning 11-8.

It was on to the Cola Bowl for the Hawks.

Could've, should've, would've but didn't could well have been the slogan for Harper in the Cola Bowl. The Ellsworth Panthers defeated the Hawks 29-0 in the year-end game. The victory was Ellsworth's second in a row over Harper in the annual bowl. The main factor of the game was Harper's inability to get past the Panther defense to score. "Defensively, we had a good game," commented defensive back Scott Miller, "our offense had a little trouble getting going."

Defensively, Harper's defensive line rose to the occasion refusing to let their opponents dominate the game.

Harper's offense was also commendable with many standouts as well as a solid offensive line.

An Insider's View

by Hanna Schmalbeck
Team Manager

I remember waking up to Johnny B. saying, "Good Morning, Chicago." "It's going to be yet another record breaking hot August week, so try to stay cool."

"Stay cool! That will be impossible with the dreaded doubles starting today!" Most people aren't aware that football practice begins a week before the semester starts. Practice is for three hours, twice a day, six days per week. Thus, is the term, dreaded doubles.

This year was even worse because of the heat. The 80 degree mornings were tolerable when compared with 105 degree afternoons. With the help of George Cwik and the trainers, the team survived.

Doubles is the time when the coaches separate the men from the boys. On the first Monday of practice, the team had 110 players. By Saturday, only 85 men remained.

This season had a rough start. The first game was lost to Grand Rapids. This early loss created doubts among the fans. Comments included, "Well, it looks as if they won't have a season like last year." And, "Maybe their luck ran out."

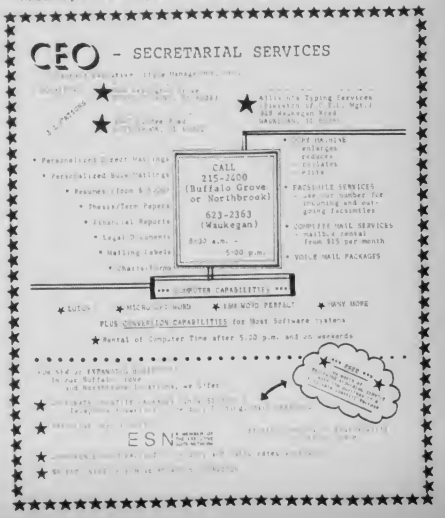

From Joliet on, the Road Warriors (a nickname given to the Hawks because of their heavy road schedule) had no problem winning.

Nor did the Hawks run out of luck. Their talent earned a second undefeated year in conference play.

Then, very nervous players headed to the RC Cola Bowl in Iowa. They survived the dreaded doubles, weather, close games, injuries, and even Coach Eliasik.

Tension filled the air as the Road Warriors took the University of Iowa's field. Each Hawk deserved to be called a champion. The unfavorable outcome did not diminish the respect earned throughout the season.

Although the season ended on a low note, the Harper Hawks established another record-breaking season. Six coaches and 60 players made this awesome season possible.

As you might realize, this is the last issue of the Harbinger for this semester. Below, you will find a schedule that includes all of Harper's sporting events throughout the semester break. I especially point out that the Harper wrestling team has their only home invite on Saturday, Jan. 14, at 9 am, and the Harper swim team has their only home meet on Friday, Jan. 13, at 1 pm. The Harper men and women basketball teams also have some home games over the break.

Lady Hawks Facing Problems

Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

Despite all of the problems the Lady Hawks have gone through in the last ten days, they still have been able to play solid basketball. The problems have resulted in the Lady Hawks losing two of their last three games. They lost to Highland 71-66 last Thursday, beat Elgin 72-57 on Saturday and lost to Oakton 56-53 Tuesday to make their record 3-3 for the season.

Among the problems that the Lady Hawks have had to face are the loss of freshman Kellie Dennis, who is mourning her mother's death. She has been out of the line-up since the Harper Thanksgiving Tournament. In addition to that, she was involved in a car accident which will put her out indefinitely.

Another problem has been injuries to Freshman Amy Kozial and Patty Canchola. Kozial's knee gave out on her midway during the second half in the Highland loss. In Canchola's case, she has been playing with an injured elbow all season long.

"We've been hurting all night," said Head Coach Tom Teschner.

In the loss to Highland, the Lady Hawks made a remarkable second half come-back after trailing the Cougars by as many as 15 points earlier in the half. Sophomore Pascale O'Donoghue led the Lady Hawks with a 37 point, 20 rebound performance. That was her second highest performance in a Hawk uniform.

Against Elgin, the Lady Hawks were once again trailing at the beginning of the second half 35-30, when they put the clamps on the Spartans. A strong defense and an explosive offense led the way. Amy Kozial scored 20 of her game-high 26 points in the second half. She also established a new single-game record with four three-pointers. O'Donoghue poured in 22 points enroute to the Hawks outscoring the Spartans 42-22 in the second half. "They shut us down in the first half. Amy Kozial had the hot hand and Pascale O'Donoghue came through on the inside," Teschner said after the game.

What pleased him even more, was the total team effort that featured great performances from Freshman Karen Pyatt, Kari Noonan, and Monica Premvsky. "It was a nice job. We're starting to play together as a team, instead of putting the pressure on one or two players to carry the load," Teschner said.

Tuesday night, the Lady Hawks could not get their act together. Despite 23 points by Pascale O'Donoghue and 20 points from Amy Kozial, visiting Oakton led most of the way. The Lady Hawks missed a lot of shots and didn't take advantage of some good situations.

B-ball improves

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

Although the Harper Men's Basketball Team may have a 1-8 record now, they may have found the way to start winning.

The team met Monday to straighten things out and make sure what their roles were after a 61-51 loss to Elgin on Saturday Afternoon. When they came out on Tuesday Evening to face Elmhurst they put together a solid team effort despite losing 67-64.

Head Coach Bill Probst commented about his team's performance. "We're playing well in spurts, but we need to get over the mental mountain."

In their loss to Elgin Saturday Afternoon, the Hawks played well in the first half led by solid performances by Freshmen Levi Thurmond, Donald Pierce, Dean Petrulakis, Jerome Hardnick and Sophomore Travis Perry. Harper was only down by four at 27-23 at the half.

The Spartans then took over. Rich Rogala, Adrian Hogan, and Tim Moritz led an Elgin surge that took a 6-point lead with 10 minutes left to 14 with eight minutes left to put the game away for keeps.

In the Elmhurst game it was close from the opening tip-off to the final buzzer as the lead never got to more than four points for either team.

In fact, the Hawks had the last shot at winning the game when Elmhurst's Mike Yeakel missed both ends of a one-and-one with 8 seconds remaining but Jason Brooks missed as he was coming in from the corner and the Bluejays' Dave Yates was fouled by Joe Parisi as he came down with the rebound; making both ends of the one-and-one to preserve the victory for Elmhurst.

Leading the way for the Hawks were Travis Perry with 25 points, 6 rebounds and 5 assists, Joe Passi with 20 points, and 15 rebounds; tying his career high, and Kevin Simpson with 9 points, 7 rebounds and 10 assists.

The Hawks will be in action Tuesday evening at 7 p.m. as they host Truman. They'll also host Waukesha a week from Saturday at noon. They'll need to win both these games to get some momentum for the Conference season opener at Illinois Valley, January 3rd.

Wrestling presses on

By Bill Steele
Staff Writer

The wrestling tournament's only highlight was Ray Villan's 11 second pin on his opponent from Oshkosh. In the Wisconsin Invite, the Hawk wrestler's won equalled the losses, and no one placed. Coach Lovelace said, "We need to get exposed to high- level, intense wrestling. Some of our guys need to get harder nosed and tougher. We need more experience."

Mark Cecchi, Eric Bakey, Jason Fantuzzi, and David Collins were all one match from placing.

Injuries and sickness plague the Hawk wrestlers, but they press on. They are getting ready for the Parkside Wisconsin Open. Whatever the outcome, it will be a definite plus to gain experience for the young Harper wrestling team.

Enrollment on the Rise

Mona Isa
News Editor

Harper's full time student enrollment increased seven percent last fall and four percent this spring according to preliminary figures.

Last fall 22,650 students were enrolled at Harper College. This figure indicated a 3.5 percent increase in the number of credit hours taken by students over previous years.

As of Tuesday, 17,012 students enrolled at Harper for this spring semester compared to 16,360 students during the spring semester 88.

Full time equivalency (FTE) hours indicate a 4.6 percent increase in the number of credit hours students are now taking.

FTE hours are the lumpsum of credit hours all students are enrolled for whether they are full-time or part-time. This sum is then divided by 15, the average number of credit hours for full-time status. FTE hours at the opening of enrollment through January 17 totalled 6696.2 over last spring's semester of 6399.5.

Figures also show a 4.6 percent increase in the number of credit hours students are now taking over the spring of 1988.

"This semester's figures look larger than last spring but we can not total our final figures until late registration and continuing education registration ends," said Dean of Admissions and Registrar, Steve Catlin.

Students are taking more courses and a greater number of credit hours this spring, providing there is little change in current figures.

As Harper's enrollment increases over the years, there is a slight decrease in the amount of enrollment at four-year universities because of the lack of funds received from the State.

"Universities, such as University of Illinois-Champaign, Northern, Illinois State University, and Eastern, receive less funds from the state and therefore must reduce and limit their enrollment of incoming freshman," added Catlin.

In order for four-year universities to compensate for this loss, tuition and standards are raised.

In turn, for the first two years, prospective students are turning to community colleges, such as Harper to reduce their cost of education.

Harper has become a reputable school for education and is receiving a second look among potential students.

College News Update

The Observatory:

The Student Senate postponed to Feb. 28, its decision on granting a $5,000 class gift to aid in financing the college observatory. The Student Senate will designate another gift if information on the final cost is not received from Paul Sipiera, director of the project, and an architect. Last year's senate approved reconstruction of the fireplace in Building A lounge as the alternate gift. The redesigned fireplace would be less expensive to operate and could be lit more frequently.

Harper's VP Heads State Group:

The Vice President of Administrative Services at Harper, Vern Munkel has been elected chairman of the ICCCFO, the Illinois Community College Chief Financial Officers.

The ICCCFO focuses on the financing of community colleges throughout Illinois. Topics for this year are purchasing, working cash funds, and special levies.

Workers take a break from installing new traffic lights at Euclid Avenue.

Every day on radio and television, students are bombarded by the slogan "Just Say No." Are Harper students listening to this important message?

According to a recent survey of 2,000 Harper students, faculty and staff, 67 percent said they had a relative or friend with a drug or alcohol problem. Eighty percent of those surveyed said they would accept counseling if offered.

With access to federal grant money, Harper started a Drug, Alcohol and Wellness Network (DAWN). Implemented in September of last year, DAWN helps substance abusers and their families.

"A primary goal of DAWN is to educated the dangers of drug and alcohol abuse at Harper," according to Rosemary Murray, the program's director.

"We are hoping more students will become involved with the upcoming programs," Murray said. "There are several goals of DAWN, and one of these goals is to expand the education of not only the students, but also Harper College's faculty and staff. Forty faculty and ten students recently attended a three-day training seminar at Parkside Cove Group of Mundelein. The purpose of this seminar is to teach people how to assist those with substance abuse problems."

Students interested in attending the next seminar should contact Rosemary Murray or Phyllis Zubinsky extension 2626.

Tutoring equals success

By Alisa Chinlund
Features Editor

Are low grades getting you down? Do you need a little push to raise your grade point average? Do you just want to maintain your current G.P.A.?

Whether you need help understanding basic math concepts, simple verb-agreements, or just a little reinforcement, the staff of the tutoring center is here to help.

"The tutoring center is a support service. We provide tutoring for any currently enrolled student. The student must be registered for the course which he is seeking help. Our purpose is to be an aid in achieving academic success," said Nimi Jonadoss, supervisor of the tutoring center.

Free tutoring services are available to students throughout the year in over 60 classes. Factors such as the type of class and availability of tutors determine which classes utilize tutors.

Tutoring is available in a wide variety of subjects from A to Z (accounting to zoology). Tutors in high-demand areas such as accounting, math, data processing, English, and science are available by appointment and on an unlimited walk-in basis. Tutors in low-demand subjects such as foreign languages are available to students for one half-hour appointment per week.

Harper College staffs over 80 tutors in four categories: the professional tutor, who holds a degree in his field; the area coordinator, who also holds a degree in his field and is in charge of student tutors in his area; the student tutor, who has received an A in the course and an instructor's recommendation; and faculty volunteers who donate their office hours to tutor students at the center.

According to Jonadoss, every semester Harper's student tutors and area coordinators attend an extensive seminar where they learn about the different types of students and their needs. They learn how to identify problems such as a student failing a test, or not understanding the lecture due to difficulty of material.

The tutors also learn about listening and study skills, and are introduced to topics like stress management and behavior modification. Tutors do not provide counseling to students but may offer suggestions to improve their academic success.

Jonadoss also connects Harper students and community members with private tutors. The private tutors set up their own meeting times and fees.

Other services of the tutoring center include providing students with study guides on certain subjects; holding review seminars in math, accounting, and chemistry; and workshops such as "How To Use A Calculator."

The tutoring center services are available Monday through Thursday 8:30a.m.-9p.m., Friday 8:30a.m.-2p.m., and Saturday 9a.m.-2p.m. in F132, ext. 2539.

Now, for 10 points: What is a College Bowl?

By Jamie Berson
Staff Writer

The Association of College Unions International will sponsor Harper's first College Bowl competition next Thursday.

But what is College Bowl? It is sometimes referred to as "The varsity sport of the mind." It is a game of broad knowledge and last recall. Very simply, College Bowl is a competition of trivia.

It deals with a variety of topics: literature, science, history, current events, religion, philosophy, art, mythology, music and drama, rock n' roll, sports and movies.

On Thursday, our very own Harbinger team will be matched against the Student Senate as an exhibition to demonstrate a competition. The match will be held at noon in Building A lounge.

The first tournament will be held Feb. 2, Building A lounge at noon. The winning team of the Inter-school Competition will advance to regionals at Elgin Community College (ECC) on Feb. 10.

The ECC Tournament is restricted to two-year schools, but the College of Dupage (COD) will host the Regional Championship Tournament Feb. 24-26 where both two and four year schools will compete against each other. COD will also host the International Tournament on April 21.

If you are interested in competing, form a team of three to five members and sign up during the exhibition match Thursday, Jan. 26, or sign up individually and you will be matched-up with a team. For more information contact Kevin Geiger at the Box Office, x2549.

$2,000 BONUS PLUS PART-TIME INCOME.

Qualify to train in one of several selected skills at a nearby Army Reserve unit, and you also qualify for a $2,000 enlistment bonus.

In addition to the bonus, you will earn over $80 per weekend to start, to train one weekend a month (usually two 8-hour days). During the year, you will attend two weeks annual training at full Army pay.

If you're a student on a restricted budget, both the bonus and the part-time income could really help. To find out what skill training is available in the Army Reserve near you, call:

PLEASE MOM AND DAD

My hands are small. I don't mean to spill my milk

My legs are short. Please slow down so I can keep up with you.

Don't slap my hands when I touch something bright and pretty. I don't understand

Please look at me when I talk to you. It lets me know you are really listening

My feelings are tender, don't nag me all day long. Let me make mistakes without feeling stupid

Don't expect the bed I make or the picture I draw to be perfect. Just love me for trying.

Remember, I am a child not a small adult. Sometimes I don't understand what you are saying.

I love you so much. Please love me for just being me. Not just for the things I do.

WINTER-WISE WORKOUTS

First, the good news. More fat burns when exercising in cold weather than in warmer temperatures-up to 12% more calories and 32% more fat.

Now the bad news. Outdoor winter exercise increases risk of injury. Besides the obvious hazard from ice and snow, cold temperatures add to your chances of pulling or tearing muscles and tendons. Fluid in the joints is more viscous, and muscle contraction is slower. Knees and feet are especially injury prone. To get blood flowing, stretch at least 10 minutes to warm up by jogging or aerobic activity where it's warm (indoors).

During cold weather, your body needs more fuel to keep your energy high. Eat heartily, include plenty of complex carbohydrates such as cereal, fruits and grains. Drink plenty of nonalcoholic and nonkaffeinated beverages.

To minimize injury from ice, run or walk with shorter strides than you would on dry pavement. And try to move as flat-footed as possible, lifting the foot straight from the ground with as little pushing off our toes as possible. It is safest to plod along, keeping a steady pace. Most slips occur from a sudden change of in direction or acceleration. When making turns, shorten your stride for better traction.

Be weary of hypothermia and frostbite. Symptoms of hypothermia (subnormal body temperature) include a cold feeling and shivering. Then, suddenly shivering stops, a sudden loss of direction or feelings of drowsiness, confusion or unexplained argumentativeness. It can occur when the temperature is between 30 and 50 degrees if you are wet, tired, or working in a high wind. Frostbite is localized freezing of tissue which results from prolonged exposure to ice and snow. Symptoms include gradual numbness, hardness or pale color of a particular part of the body.

Pain, tingling or burning after the body is rewarmed. A change of color of white to red to purple; shivering after rewarming; and, blisters filled with clear fluid. Both hypothermia and frostbite require a doctor's care. The first priority is to move the victim indoors and warm affected areas with direct body heat, do not massage, rub or use dry radiant heat, immersion in warm (not hot) water is advised.

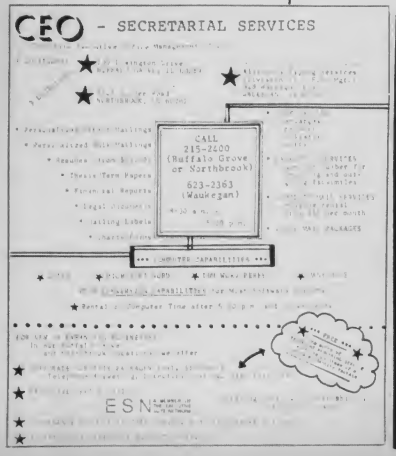

Dressing in two or three layers can keep you warm on the coldest days. Layer one, next to your skin should pull perspiration away. Cotton is best, polypropylene is also good.

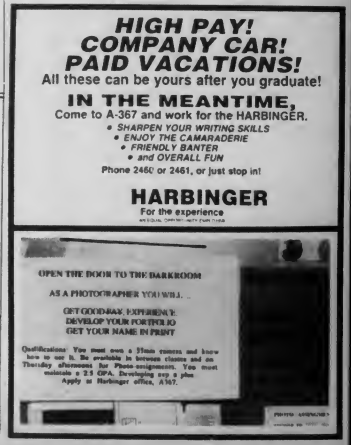

Layer two should act as an insulator to trap warm air. Good choices include down and wool. Layer three is a protector of wind and wetness. Suggestions include polyester insulation and nylon. Down and wool are effective in dry weather.

The most important garment for winter warmth is a hat. Up to 40% of body heat is lost through the top of your head. Cover it with a wool or polypropylene hat that covers the ears. Also protect hands and feet.

Mittens keep hands warmer than gloves and feet can be protected by wearing wool socks; waterproof shoes and insulated insoles.

Protect skin, (especially on your face), by rubbing on petroleum jelly before going outdoors and using a moisturizer after your outdoors workout.

Harper Trivia: Everything you wanted to know (and some things you didn't) about Harper.

College Bowl '89 starts Feb 2. So to prepare you for competition, and to inform you about some little known but sometimes useful trivia, I have compiled a list of questions AND answers about Harper. The categories are: school policy, what you get for your money, who's who at Harper, why things are the way they are and what to expect from the coming years.

School policy:

1 If you get a surprise grade in the mail you feel is undeserved, what, if anything, can you do?

It is standard policy at most colleges, including Harper, to dispute any grade you feel is unfair. While the process can be lengthy, if not satisfied after talking to the instructor, eventually you can meet with Vice President of Student Affairs, Dr. Bonnie Henry.

What you get for your money:

2 Does it ever seem to you that food is too expensive here? (part II) Aren't there ever any sales?

Yes, it does seem that food is overpriced. And yes, there is at least one sale. Every Friday the bookstore sells candy 20% off.

3 During registration an activity card fee was charged. How much is charged for that beautiful blue activity card, and how much does it cost to replace a lost or stolen card?

The student activity fee is based on the number of credit hours you have. Students enrolled in at least 12 credit hours are charged $15.00, summer school students and students enrolled in less than 12 credit hours are charged $7.50. It costs an additional $2.00 to replace a student activity card.

Who's who at Harper:

4 Who is Harper's President?

Dr. Paul Thompson was recently selected to replace James J. McGrath. Dr. Thompson, a former math teacher, is very supportive of student activities and is actively attempting to acquaint himself with the seemingly endless population here at Harper. Harper's President is chosen by the Board of Trustees.

5 Who is that infamous William Rainey Harper?

Dr. Harper was dedicated to academic excellence and made an impact on the community as a teacher, a scholar, a writer, an administrator and finally as the first President of the University of Chicago. But, Dr. Harper is best known as the father of the community college.

6 Who is the current Chair-person of the Harper College Board of Trustees?

Kris Howard has been Chair-person and Board member for many years. She feels that she has accomplished all of the goals she originally set, and at the end of her last term she declined to run for the position again. Barbra Barton was selected as the new Chair.

Why things are the way they are:

7 While many people view Harper as a young campus, it is celebrating an important anniversary this year. How long has Harper's campus been around?

Harper is celebrating 20 years at its Palatine campus. The school first operated out of Elk Grove High School (1967-1969), but Harper began its classes for the first time on the Palatine campus in the Fall of 1969.

8 Is the Harbinger part of the Journalism Department?

No. Perhaps through mutual consent (back in the dark ages), it was decided there would be total separation of the Journalism Department and the Harbinger. (This is the subject of another Editorial).

9 Can I tune-in WHCM on my car stereo?

Once again, no. The reasons are long and perhaps a bit confusing, but are the opinions of the WHCM management and the majority of the vocal DJ's. (For more on this, see my Editorial in Sept. 29 issue of the Harbinger.)

What to expect from the coming years:

10 Buildings J, K, and M opened for classes in 1979-80. Are there any plans for any new buildings?

Building F was originally intended to house only the LRC and Library. Due to space restrictions, many Liberal Arts classes are offered on the third floor. During the last couple of years studies have been done to optimize use of the space on campus and to determine the need for another building. Administrators have been battling bureaucratic paperwork and redtape, and are currently working on finalizing a proposal for the Board of Trustees. So, yes there are plans, but they are very tentative at this time.

11 The curriculum is ever-growing at Harper. Will there be any new courses available in the fall?

Yes, last fall Art Graphics, ART 240, was added. This upcoming fall semester promises a new speech class, Forensics. Watch for a news story on future course offerings closer to fall registration.

If you have any further questions, first consult the Student Handbook being given out for FREE near the Information desk in Building A. If you still have questions you can either drop a line in the SGIQ boxes, write me a letter-to-the-editor, or ask someone in the Student Activities Office.

MARILLION: A NAME TO REMEMBER

by Steve Hill
Staff Writer

So here I am once more... reviewing a band that is unfamiliar to many people in this country.

Actually, the fact that many people do not know Marillion is the main reason that this album exists. Marillion's lead singer Fish, whose real name is Derek W. Dick, decided to quit one of the most phenomenally successful rock bands in the United Kingdom mainly because of their lack of stateside success. This double-live album, The Thieving Magpie <La Gazza Ladra>, was released to "commemorate the end of an era" for the band.

Frankly, Fish never gave it enough time. Perhaps the Marillion's rapid success in England fooled him into thinking they should become just as successful and as quickly on this side of the ocean.

Marillion actually sold out two nights at the Hammersmith Odeon on the basis of one single from a newly released album. That album, Script for a Jester's Tear, is a stunning example of what a debut album can accomplish. Marillion was on the verge of success in America with the single Kayleigh, from their major label release, Misplaced Childhood. Unfortunately their next album did not come close to matching the success of Childhood. Fish's disappointment [illegible] his band.

The studio album, The Thieving Magpie <La Gazza Ladra>, is a good summation of a six year performing career. Marillion's musical style is often justifiably compared to Yes or early Genesis (when Peter Gabriel fronted the band and Phil Collins was just pounding the drums), and hauntingly familiar influences from many other early-to-mid seventies progressive rock bands.

Fish's voice of four years ago is frequently compared to Gabriel's of sixteen years ago. To an old-time Genesis fan, this makes a Marillion album akin to a newfound religious experience.

The live album (CD version) comprises two discs. The first disc is a collection of songs from various live performances over the years. Disc One opens with an introductory recording of Rossini's La Gazza Ladra, complete with audience reaction. The band jumps in at the end of the classical piece with Slainte Mhath from their 1987 album, Clutching at Straws. The second disc is the entire live album, Misplaced Childhood, which is the way Marillion played their support shows for Rush in 1986.

Fish's extraverted personality doesn't come through fully on the recordings, but the talent of each individual bandmember is easily demonstrated throughout the album. The highlight of Marillion's music is the lyrics, written by Fish, and (as self-important as this may seem) are all very poetic. The best tracks which represent this style are Chelsea Monday, Sugar Mice, Script for a Jester's Tear, and the aforementioned Slainte Mhath.

Critics rarely see Marillion in good light, and frequently call them 'pompous' and 'overblown'. But, Marillion will please those who enjoy more meaning, feeling and intricate arrangements in music. The Thieving Magpie <La Gazza Ladra> is available at most record stores that specialize in imports, such as Turntable of Hip Cat Records.

Rating out of 5: 3-1/2.

HOORAY FOR HOLLYWOOD

Entertainment just keeps on coming

By Scott Seidl
Entertainment Editor

Welcome back to a brand new semester, and a new issue of the Harbinger. Although school had taken a temporary vacation, things did not stop buzzing in the world of cinema.

While school recessed for a month I had plenty of opportunities to view the good and not so fine celluloid produced from the many motion picture companies in the United States. I have decided to pass on the knowledge to all of you, who make my job seem important. Okay, I'll be honest, it is just a cheap ploy to see a movie once a week. When your on my budget you need to justify the spending of six dollars (twelve if you bring a date) a week for movies.

Now on with the show... the envelope please.

Oliver and Company

Disney Studios once again brings smiles to the general public. The story of Charles Dickens' Oliver Twist is brought to life by the Disney animators with the help of voices from Billy Joel, Bette Midler and Cheech Marin. More could be easily said about this film if I only had more room. I'll just say it is a must see for all ages.

★ ★ ★ ★

Dirty Rotten Scoundrels

This is the tale of the confidence game and two major players, Steve Martin and Michael Caine. Martin is a small time artist from the States, while Caine is a big time player from London. Martin talks Caine into showing him the ropes so he can score the big bucks. The movie gives two hours of fun dished up the way only Martin and Caine can bring it to you. It doesn't disappoint at all and the ending is worth waiting for.

★ ★ ★ ★

Working Girl

Another story of rags to riches entered the Christmas scene this year. Working Girl is the story of Melanie Griffith trying to make it in the business world, but nobody will give her a chance, so she arranges it herself. With the help of Harrison Ford she climbs to the top, steals her boss' boyfriend, and gets her boss, Sigourney Weaver, fired.

Although it had the same plot as The Secret of my Success, it went about the subject matter in a totally different way. It was definitely an enjoyable film.

Twins

Arnold Schwarzeneger teams up with Danny DeVito as "not so" apparent twins. Together the two of them take on a pair of sisters, discover their origin and bizarre parentage, and escape a psychopathic mercenary. As strange as this plot may seem, it was a film worth looking into.

(Melanie Griffith and Harrison Ford in Working Girl)

Naked Gun

This is just a brief reminder that I still think that this is one of the funniest movies to come out during the holiday season. Leslie Nielsen has definitely found his niche in the cinematic world.

My Stepmother is an Alien

Okay all you Kim Basinger fans, now you can stop reading and oggle over the enclosed picture while the rest of my readers listen to what I have to say about this so-called film.

There is not much to say except Basinger plays her standard bimbo opposite Dan Akroyd. It's okay, so-so, mediocre, and all around mundane. That's all I can say.

You Kim Basinger fans can resume reading now.

Scrooged

Now the second of the Dickens' tales to grace the silver screen this Christmas contradicts the first. This was a disappointment to all Bill Murray fans. That is not to say that Murray gave a poor performance, it is just to say that it destroyed a classic Christmas tale. Murray did come through in his impray pep-talk at the end and I left the theatre psyched, but the first half was more lame than our new Vice President.

The Land Before Time

Don Bluth and Steven Spielberg team together once again to bring you this tale of Little Foot. Little Foot is a brontosaurs who goes through all the trials and tribulations of any quest. Unfortunately, it becomes a total rehash of about seven previously made Disney films. It's only an hour and fifteen minutes long but it goes on for days. Overall, I'd call it Bambi and the Time Machine.

Well there it is folks, 'the good the bad and the ugly' of the Christmas season. As with any review I ask that you use your discretion, but if you see The Land Before Time... I don't want to hear about it.

CLUBS AND ORGANIZATIONS DAY

By Susan Berne
Upcoming Editor

Once again Student Activities has organized a Clubs and Organizations Day where students will have the opportunity to find a club or organization they might like to get more involved with.

Harper has about 25 active clubs and organizations to choose from. Any students interested in finding a club or organization to join should plan to stop by Building A from 9 a.m. - 2 p.m. or Building J from 5:30 p.m. - 8:30 p.m. on either Monday, January 23, or Tuesday, January 24, for Clubs and Organizations Day.

Representatives from most of Harper's clubs and organizations will be on hand to answer any questions and help students find a club or organization that interests them.

If there doesn't seem to be a club that interests you, and you have an idea about forming a new club, stop by the Student Activities Office in A-262 to find out how to do it.

Greek Study Tour Meeting

A meeting to explain Harper's summer study tour to Greece and Turkey is set for Friday, January 20, at 7 p.m. in the Building A Board Room. A question-answer session, slides, and refreshments are planned. The meeting and tour are open to all.

The dates of the Harper College study tour, however, are changed. The tour will be from June 23 - July 8, 1989.

The tour includes a week on the Greek mainland and a seven-day cruise to Istanbul, Izmir, and several Greek islands.

The tour cost of $2,199 includes round-trip airfare from Chicago, touring, hotels, most meals, and lectures on Greek history and culture. Students may earn three Humanities 115 credits.

Brochures are available in F-313, or contact Martha Simonsen, at Ext. 2285.

NURSING INFORMATION SESSIONS

Each month Harper's Health Information sessions for prospective nursing students and LPN's interested in the LPN completion program to prepare for RN licensure.

The sessions will be held on the third Wednesday of each month at 1:00 p.m. in J-351. The next session will be held in February.

For more information about these monthly sessions, or the Nursing Program, call Ext. 2433.

Wrestlers finish second

By Jamie Breson
Staff Writer

Coach Lovelace and the Harper wrestlers took second place in Olivet Michigan at the last open tournament of the season. As the season progresses they keep getting better and better.

Many of Harper's grapplers placed in the tournament. Jason Finucan, 142 lbs., placed first. He pinned every opponent he faced. Eric Bakey, 158 lbs., pinned his way through the tournament taking first in his weight class also.

Ray Villar, 126 lbs., placed second to Tony Cook of Olivet. Bob Maleckie, 134 lbs., also placed second in a tough match. Maleckie lost in the final eight seconds by two points' 11-9.

Dan Bakkenmo and Keith Damann placed fourth and Mark Cecchi placed third.

Coach Lovelace "...very pleased with the tournament, said. The kids looked as good as they have all year. They wrestled sharp and they wrestled as a team."

Final results: Olivet Michigan, first; Harper, second; University of Chicago, third; Dupage College, fourth.

Swimmers start their season

After winning their first meet on January 6 by default, the Men's and Women's Swim Team lost a triangular meet against College of DuPage and North Central College.

Men's first place finishes include the 400 Medley Relay - 4:08.45 (Joe Potthast, Jeff Smith, Mark McAvoy, Brian Brown); 200 Individual Medley - 2:16.91 (Mark McAvoy); 100 Breast - 1:09.78 (Jeff Smith). Peggy McCann took first for the women in the 200 Individual Medley with a time of 2:35.25.

Although the score represents a substantial loss, there were many best times recorded by this developing team.

Men: Harper 56, College of DuPage 73, North Central 126.

Women: Harper 49, College of DuPage 103, North Central 76.

Women swim to boost team

The Men's and Women's Swim Team won the triangular meet on January 13 against Triton and Truman due to the depth of the women's team.

The outstanding performance of this meet is the Men's 400 Medley Relay as the team of Joe Potthast (Backstroke), Jeff Smith (Breast), Mark McAvoy (Butterfly) and Brian Brown (Freestyle) came within one second of qualifying for the National Junior College Athletic Association meet in Fort Pierce, Florida.

Women's first place awards were earned in the 400 Medley Relay - 5:03.81 (Carolyn Brooks, Melissa Budde, Julie Nefcryk, Stephanie Kopecky); 1000 Freestyle - 12:47.86 (Jenny Stasch); 200 Freestyle - 2:45.57 (Peggy McCann); 50 Freestyle - 27.48 and 100 Breaststroke (Kim Jurczak); 100 Freestyle - 1:03.71 (Melissa Budde); 100 Backstroke - 1:10.09 (Julie Nefcryk); and 400 Freestyle Relay - 4:29.26 (Peggy McCann, Staci Ergish, Lisa Ace, Kim Jurczak).

Men winners include 400 Medley Relay - 4:01.81 (Smith, Potthast, M. McAvoy, Brown); 100 Butterfly - 58.33 (Mark McAvoy); 100 Freestyle - 53.18 (Tom McAvoy); 100 Breaststroke - 1:07.80 (Jeff Smith).

The trademark of this team is improvement. As each individual posts new best times, the team strengthens. Women's and Men's captains Julie Nefcryk and Joe Potthast commend new teammate Susan Berne on her positive attitude and enthusiasm.

Men: Harper 89, Triton 98, Truman 28.

Women: Harper 101, Triton 32, Truman 12.

Men's relay wins national berth

Men's Swim Team reached its first goal as they swam to a National Junior College Athletic Association cut in the 400 Medley Relay against University of Wisconsin Whitewater and Green Bay. On Saturday, Men's Captain Joe Potthast led off in the Backstroke and was joined by teammates Jeff Smith (Breaststroke), Mark McAvoy (Butterfly) and Tom McAvoy (Freestyle) on their 3:59.62 effort, a significant drop from the previous day's swim (4:01.81).

Head Coach Roy Kearns praised his swimmers, "I think it's the proof of the action that hard work pays off! We're just scratching the surface here. Each swimmer has his own talents and must make an improvement, or national cuts in relays are impossible."

Kearns cited Men's Captain Joe Potthast for his leadership. "Joe makes it happen. He sets an example by his effort in practice. Joe improves his time in every swim, and has not yet reached his potential."

Despite this loss, season bests were posted in the 50 Freestyle (Tom McAvoy 24.14, Peggy McCann 27.09 and Kim Jurczak 27.23); 100 Freestyle (Peggy McCann 59.21); 200 Freestyle (Brian Brown 2:06.81); 500 Freestyle (Brian Brown 5:54.45 and Jenny Stasch 6:21.45); 100 Backstroke (Julie Nefcryk 1:18.20 and Carolyn Brooks 1:21.28); 100 Butterfly (Julie Nefcryk 1:19.13); and 400 Individual Medley (Julie Nefcryk 6:10.26).

Leadership is not only evident in the men's captain. Women's Captain Julie Nefcryk continues to post season bests in all of her swims.

The swim team's second meet stands 2-2, as the Hawks continue to develop in strength.

Men: Harper 41, Whitewater 132.

Women: Harper 52, Green Bay 91, Whitewater 137.

Emotional games for men's basketball

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

The Harper Men's Basketball Team experienced the full circle of emotions during the semester break. Jubilation, Satisfaction, Accomplishment, Heartbreak, and Frustration were just a sample of what the Hawks went through during the break.

There were some outstanding individual performances during the break as well. Sophomore Trave Perry was named NJC Men's Basketball Player of the Week during the week of December 12th for his outstanding efforts against Truman and Waukesha Tech. Freshman Levi Hartman who has played for the football team has proven to be a rebounding force at basketball with 16 against Waukesha Tech, 11 against Illinois Valley, and 14 against Rock Valley.

Sophomore Joe Pavia is one of the NJC's leading rebounders with 89 in five conference games with 23 against Illinois Valley, 19 each against Joliet and Moraine Valley, 11 against Rock Valley and DuPage.

We've been disappointed at our record because we're a better team than that. We have breakdowns during the course of the game, but we're confident we can be competitive in the conference and do very well in it," said sophomores Kevin Simpson and Travis Perry.

Against Truman, the Hawks were behind most of the game and were not able to get closer than 10 when Jason Brooks hit a three-pointer to cut the margin to 68-58. Perry started his Player of the Week honors with a 31 point, 6 rebound performance. Chuck Williams 23 and Ken Ebeths 18 led the way for Truman.

A second half defensive show headed by Perry, Thurman, Simpson, and freshman Donald Pierce overcame a 36-32 halftime deficit to defeat Waukesha Tech. Perry had 26 points, 13 rebounds, and 3 assists to lead the Hawks. Simpson followed with 14 points, 9 rebounds, and 14 assists and Pierce scored third with 13 points and 12 rebounds. Pierce also forced five second-half turnovers.

Against Oakton, Perry continued the work that made him Player of the Week with a 25 point, 10 rebound performance to lead the Hawks through a very tight contest. Freshman Chad Hall had a season-high of 15 points and Simpson added 12.

The conference opener at Illinois Valley proved to be a tale of two halves as the Hawks traded 53-32 at the half, but came back to win the second-half 38-37. They were able to get to within 16 of the Apaches, who were at one time rated number one in the country. Perry had 12 of his 19 points in the second half and Joe Pavia had 16 of his 23 rebounds in that second half. Considering that the Hawks lost by 38 points down at Oglesby last season, this was a moral victory.

"I didn't like the first half, but I liked a lot of the second half," Head Coach Bill Probst said after the game.

The Joliet game was a heartbreaker as the Wolves were victorious on Connell Lurry's three-pointer with 17 seconds left won the game after Freshman Dean Petrulakis made both ends of the one-and-one with 29 seconds left. Harper still had one final chance to win it after turning the ball over as Joliet's Andy Carlson was called for walking on the ensuing inbounds pass with seven seconds left. Travis Perry inbounded it into Petrulakis who took it just inside the free throw circle where his jumper fell short to end the game.

The Hawks were able to rebound by crashing past Rock Valley. Perry scored a career high of 32 points, with 16 in each half. Thurman added his season high of 14 points. The Hawks forced the Trojans to turn the ball over nine times.

After Saturday evening's contest with COD, Probst, assistant coach Lou Benedetto and the entire team may have wanted to have Alka-Seltzer after digesting what the Chapparals did to them in the second half. Du Page, a team that had chronic free throw shooting problems all season and had only shot 3 of 8 in the first half finally found their mitch in the second half as they hit 21 of 25 free throws as they outscored the Hawks 40-25 to win the game, "42-40 and we let it go." Assistant Coach Lou Benedetto said referring to the lead that the Hawks with 15 minutes remaining in the game.

Against Moraine on Tuesday Night, The Hawks went cold in the second half, shooting 16 of 38 as the Marauders broke away from a 30-all tie at halftime.

The Hawks will travel to South Holland to face the Bulldogs of South Suburban Saturday Night at 7:00 p.m. and will play host to Triton Tuesday evening at 7:00 p.m.

Women's basketball win four over break

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

Through all the problems that Women's Head Basketball Coach Tom Teschner has had so far this season, he should give serious consideration for NJC Women's Coach Of The Year if the Lady Hawks can go over the .500 mark or better in the conference standings. With the way the Lady Hawks are playing lately the .500 mark is certainly attainable.

Currently, the Lady Hawks stand at 7-10 overall and 2-3 in the NJC. They have been able to win despite freshman point guard Monica Pierovsky's knee sprain put her out of action until the Lady Hawks travel to Joliet on January 31st.

The team is able to win even though 3 freshmen Karen Prests and Kellie Dennis were declared academically ineligible temporarily in Dennis' case.

And, still they win despite the presence of two rookie basketball players, sophomore Stacey Kirchner and freshman Nicole Ryatt.

"We've played extremely well. You know what we've got out there - the history of our basketball players. You can't ask anymore of them. I couldn't be more pleased," Teschner said.

After five straight losses, the Lady Hawks were moved out of their slump in a big way by downing Wright 69-40 as Pascale O'Donoghue connected for 32 points and 19 rebounds, Amy Koziol had 17 and Kellie Dennis added 12. The Lady Hawks led from the beginning and never looked back.

In their win over Highland, the Lady Hawks got revenge after the Cougars dealt them a 71-66 loss at home on December 1st. Highland led only once at 52-53 with less than four minutes left. O'Donoghue's 28 points and Karen Prests's two free throws with six seconds left, put it away for Harper, 65-61.

After two successful games, the offense went cold against Illinois Valley. The Lady Hawks could only muster 38 points during the game, shooting 13 of 56 the entire night and 4 of 22 in the second half.

Their cold spell continued onto the first 11 1/2 minutes of the Joliet game. The Lady Hawks were behind 34-11 until a 15-4 run brought them back to within 12 at halftime, 38-26. The Lady Hawks came closer and closer until an Amy Koziol hoop gave Harper their first lead at 55-53 with 4:09 remaining. Unfortunately, Joliet's Sandy Russell hit two of her six three-pointers in the final three-and-a half minutes to beat Harper.

The Lady Hawks rebounded by destroying both Rock Valley and DuPage. In both contests Amy Koziol and Pascale O'Donoghue had the hot hands as O'Donoghue had 33 and Koziol followed with 27 against Rock Valley. Koziol had a career high 33 against DuPage, followed by O'Donoghue's 29 as Harper won by margins of 37 and 41 points.

Unfortunately on Tuesday they ran into the #14 team in the nation and the #1 team in Region IV in Moraine Valley. The Marauders broke a 33-all tie in the final 1:15 of the first-half scoring nine unanswered points to take a 42-33 lead at the half. Moraine proceeded to go on a 10-2 run in the first five minutes of the second half to put the game away. Amy Koziol's effort led the Lady Hawks with 26 points.

State grant powers doors

'Handicapped use only'

By Tari Vaughn
Staff Writer

While on campus this semester, you may have noticed several additions to the scenery at Harper. One of these additions is a series of pads next to doors marked " Handicapped Use Only".

Better known as Power Assist Doors, these pads aid the growing number of handicapped students at Harper. Currently, about 30 Harper students use wheelchairs. The new doors will make it easier for them to enter and exit buildings.

The pads are wired to an electrical circuit in the door. When the pad is pressed, the circuit disengages the automatic door closer, making it easier for the handicapped student to open the door.

In addition to the Power Assist Doors, a new fully automatic door was installed in Building J by the theatre, and installation has begun on a set of automatic doors for the front of Building A.

The project of installing the new doors was funded by a special grant from the State Capital Development Board. Originally, the funds were allotted to install a number of fully automatic doors at key locations on campus. When it was discovered that the automatic doors would not be possible within the budget, the Power Assist Doors were installed instead.

The A Building doors have been under construction for about one year now, but the project has been delayed due to some unexplicable state problems. At present, the completion date is unknown.

Tom Thompson, director of Disabled Services, commented that the doors help the handicapped student who has good upper body strength, but do little for the student with a weak upper body or back injuries.

Thompson also added that fully automatic doors are still needed in Buildings D, F, and I, however funds are not available at the present time.

Disabled Harper student Peter Soby attempts to use the Power Assist Door at Building A. "The doors are of no use to me" said frustrated Harbinger Sports Editor Soby. According to Pete, simply depressing the pad which controls the Power Assist Doors is difficult, due to lack of upper body strength. (Photo by John Simon)

New traffic light to ease rush-hour tension

Jeff Freebus
Layout Editor

One hundred thousand dollar stoplights were installed at Harper's North entrance on Euclid Avenue to ease the traffic for Harper commuters.

Harper College, Palatine Park District, and Fluke John Manufacturing Company split the cost on the payment for the newly installed lights. Harper is paying 40,000 dollars for the lights and will continue to pay 1,000 dollars a year for maintenance and electricity.

In addition, Palatine Park District is investing 55,000 dollars for their share and placing a bicycle path across the intersection.

"Palatine Park District obtained a state grant for the bicycle path", added Vern Manke, Vice President of Administration.

Fluke John Manufacturing Company, on Euclid Avenue across from Harper, is also contributing 5,000 dollars for the lights.

Since the stoplights are part of the massive reconstruction of Euclid Avenue, the Cook County Highway Department became responsible for the engineering, building, and installment cost.

Construction began on September 13, 1988 with the underground work. In the second week of January 1989 the poles and arms were constructed and on January 26 the lights were tested at 10a.m.

The stoplights will make it safer for students of Harper and employees of Fluke to enter onto Euclid Avenue. Previously, it was difficult for drivers to merge into four lanes of nonstop traffic.

Public Safety will have no manual override/control of the lights) unlike the lights on Algonquin Road.

Grammy nominee Joan Jett appears February 7 in Building M. Admission is $10 in advance for Harper students.

Speech Team out scores four-year universities

By Tari Vaughn
Staff Writer

The Harper Speech Team captured the sixth place slot last weekend at their most challenging tournament of the season.

A total of 16 schools attended the meet, which was held at the College of DuPage. Harper's team performed well as one of the two attending junior colleges competing against four-year universities such as Bradley, Illinois State, and Palomar.

The team was led by second-year member Linda Lang, who brought home 5th place trophies in both Persuasive and Informative Speaking.

First-year members Rosemary Langer and Peter Lindstrom also fared well at this tournament. Lindstrom won the 5th place award for Impromptu Speaking, and Langer took a first place, also for Impromptu Speaking.

Other students contributing to the success of the team included Dave Emmens, John Gardner, Cathy Machalski, Keith Miller, Scott Neidl, Doug Ray, and Tari Vaughn.

The team will travel to Northern Illinois University for the State Championship Meet on Feb. 17-19. Shortly afterward, on March 4, Harper will host its own tournament.

Anyone interested in more information should contact Marcia Litrenta at 397-3000 ext. 2944.

Chair lifts disabled students

By Dave Rebman
Staff Writer

Good news for Harper swimmers. The swimming pool has just replaced its old chairlift with a brand new streamlined model. The chairlift will make it easier for a person with a handicap or physical injury to get into and out of the pool.

According to Denny Ryther, one of the staff members responsible for the purchase of the new chairlift, "The new chair works off water pressure provided by the pool, which is more effective than the old hydraulic chair. The only time the chair will not be set up for use, is when Harper hours area swim meets."

Harper's pool is open to all for recreational use. Monday through Thursday from 12:00 pm to 1:00 pm., Tuesday and Thursday evenings from 6:00 pm to 7:00 pm, Friday from 12:00 pm to 2:00 pm, and Saturday from 12:00 pm to 4:00 pm.

"The chair gives all Harper's students, faculty and staff a chance to use the pool and participate in swimming classes," added Ryther.

Funds for the chairlift were raised by several different sources including student-pledges from Ken Carroll's brainchild swim-a-thon and The Harper College Foundation.

The swim-a-thon, assisted by the Phi Theta Kappa, was held to raise additional funds for the chairlift.

For further information regarding the use of the chair or the pool, call 397-3000 ext. 1771 during normal working hours.

Studying, no problem, thanks to LAC

By Dave Rebman
Staff Writer

How many times have you or one of your friends said, "How could I have bombed that test? I thought that I had all the answers." Harper students can have all the answers just by taking advantage of the Learning Assistance Center (LAC).

The Learning Assistance Center (LAC), located on the first floor of Building F, offers courses, seminars, and testing that are designed to teach and analyze the most efficient study methods.

One very popular LAC course is Psychology 106, College Learning Strategies (practical psychology), which is scheduled to start on February 13. "Over the last two semesters, we have enrolled over 1,000 students for this course," stated Lee Vogel, LAC director. Other course offerings include reading, writing and mathematics.

Students who can't fit another course into their schedule but feel they need help in a subject are always welcome at the Tutoring Center. The Tutoring Center helped 14,000 students last year," said Vogel. "Although the majority of students using the center are A and B students, we would like to help all students to successfully get through a class. But (some students) hesitate to come into the Tutoring Center." The center helps many students achieve A and B grades.

Appointments for tutoring can be made by calling ext. 2539. For your convenience, be sure to call ahead of time to insure availability. Some tutoring is available on a "walk-in" basis. Remember--the only stupid question is the one not asked!

FEBRUARY IS NATIONAL HEART MONTH

• Reduce saturated fats and cholesterol in your diet. Eat more fish and skinless poultry, eat less eggs and red meat. Cook with liquid vegetable oils and polyunsaturated shortenings. Fingerstick cholesterol screenings are available in the Health Service, A162, for $1 for students and $3 for faculty and staff. Comprehensive cholesterol screening is available through the Human Performance Lab for $30, contact ext. 2468 for further information.

•Don't smoke. The heart attack rate is 50-200% higher for cigarette smokers. At Harper College, smoking is permitted in designated areas only. The Health Service offers assistance in achieving a non-smoking lifestyle. Individuals may also enroll in the Quit Smoking Clinic offered through Continuing Education.

•Avoid excess weight. Harper's Nutrition Resource Center offers programs to help you develop health habits for lifetime. Cook with liquid vegetable oils and polyunsaturated shortenings. Fingerstick cholesterol screenings are available in the Health Service, A162, for $1 for students and $3 for faculty and staff. Comprehensive cholesterol screening is available through the Human Performance Lab for $30, contact ext. 2468 for further information.

•Control high blood pressure. If high blood pressure goes undetected and untreated, the chances of stroke or heart attack increase. The Health Service staff will check your blood pressure anytime. Blood pressure screenings will be done on Wednesday, February 22 at various sites across campus.

•Exercise regularly. Vigorous exercise benefits overall cardiovascular health. Physical Education and Recreation (PEAR) offers individually tailored exercise programs.

•Have regular medical check-ups. A physician can help you to develop a healthy heart program.

Pick a little, talk a little, cheap, cheap, cheap

I am not accustomed to writing outside the field of entertainment, but something has been brought to my attention that I thought the Harper Community should be aware of. What, you may be asking, am I talking about? The answer is easy, the new Harper College chairlift for the campus swimming pool.

Last week I overheard a conversation pertaining to the run-around occurring when trying to find out about: the whereabouts, the progress on and the knowledge concerning the chairlift. I decided to find out for myself, so I called the one person I thought would know, Tom Thompson, Director of Disabled Student Services. Unfortunately, he didn't know much, but he did explain what he knew.

Thompson told me that the idea of the chairlift was the brainchild of Ken Carroll, an ex-swimmer who is now a disabled student. Carroll decided to hold a swim-a-thon to raise money for the lift.

Ray Devery, Director of Development, then said The Educational Foudation would match or beat any funding Carroll could raise. Thanks to the Educational Foundation, Phi Theta Kappa, and the Student Senate, Devery received the funding.

So everything is hunky-dory, right? Not quite here is where the story goes awry. The project passed through many hands including those of John Gelch and Dennis Ryther of PEAR. In hand-off of the lift from person to preson, some information never reached the necessary people.(Like Tom Thompson and Ray Devery, perhaps?) Confusrd? Now you know what it was like for me, trying to find all of this lost information.

Who then, is actually in charge of this endeavor? Allow me to paraphrase. Carroll started the project which moved on to Drvery who received the money and ordered it. When the lift arrived Gelch undertook it and then installation was the responsibility of Ryther. Ryther then asked the physical plant to install it.

Through another series of phone calls (and believe me there were quite a few) I discovered the final information to make this Fairy-tale complete, and like all Fairy-tales it has a happy ending.

After a brief conversation with Ryther I found that the chairlift is completely installed and fully operational, and it is now common knowledge.

The only question I am left with is, "Why was it so hard to keep track of an item that would benefit an important part of the Harper populous?" We may never find out the answer to this question, but we can only hope that in the futurr, we bridge the communication gap.

Pray Freedom (F'n Censorship)

(Dedicated to Robyn Davis)

My Entertainment Editor approached me this week with a question. He wanted to know if he could use bullsh-herp-t in his movie review. I replird, "yes." In context the word is appropriate, "...bureaucratic bullsh-herp-t."

The moral of this story is: If you want to see the word "bullsh-herp-t" printed in full, simply turn to page 4 and read Tutenq. Fortunately, (I pray to God it won't even change) the Harbinger is not censured.

Our Advisor, Jon Oxman, does exactly what his title suggests...he gives advice that keeps this paper in its professional status. (Many thanks Jon!) He does not, however, have the authority to add, delete, or change in any way any part of any article without consulting me first.

The only papers threatened by censorship are those produced through the Journalism Department. Students from these papers often receive college credit for lab time on the newspaper, which allows advisors to censor according to the Haselwood decision. But the Harbinger is run out of Student Activities. The only links to the Journalism Department are the few staff members that study Journalism.

To salute the Freedom of the Press Month (January) I offer this prayer:

We pray for freedom of the press
So that we may self-express
The thoughts we have with all the muck,
With useful words like damn and f*reg-ck

Concerned Students Compile Comments and Ideas List

I hope this semester you will take note of 3 maroon boxes labeled "S.C.I.Q." (Student Comments, Ideas and Questions). The boxes are located on the third floor of Building A in front of the Student Senate Office, on the first floor of Building F across from Media Circulation and on the first floor of Building J in front of the Box Office.

The S.C.I.Q. boxes were developed to help voice your concerns to the Harper Board of Trustees who meet every fourth Thursday of the month.

Last month I passed out copies of this list to the trustees:

Facilities In the smoking area of the cafeteria on the east side, vents should be put in. There are examples of these in Building I upstairs by the windows.

Harper needs more clocks. Especially in the library and in the main hallways.

Replace or at least clean the water fountains. They are all in need of major maintenance and the water tastes bad. Not everyone likes to drink pop.

The Student Center Lounge needs to have better lighting as night. Cutting costs gives a bad impression of Harper.

The Building E classrooms need to be improved. Lighting is dim and inadequate. The acoustics are echoey. There are boards over windows and chains outside the doors. Since these rooms are the first impression students have of Harper College when they come for ACT tests, we should do our best to make a good impression.

Building M is in dire need of being air conditioned. Think of all the summer programs we could do (outside revenue generating events).

Snack Bar A snack bar stand with real food and coffee would be nice in the L/I Building areas.

I'd like to see the "Front Porch" reopened in the Student Center Lounge. It should feature deli sandwiches, burgers, and an extended salad bar (like Wendy's).

Also, it should feature contemporary treats like frozen yogurt. Also, it would be great to have a satellite food outlet in the Building J lounge that would offer fresh fruit, frozen yogurt and coffees (especially expresso and cappucino).

Campus Appearance Harper seems like it is always trying to improve the looks of our campus, and over all, the campus looks very nice. A small improvement that could be made is: not leaving an open bed truck full of garbage from the cafeteria right outside the cafeteria bay windows to ruin an otherwise nice view.

Campus Art The artwork makes the campus look unattractive. More conservative artwork would be appreciated.

Student Ideas I feel disposal companies will eventually make it mandatory, so why not get students and faculty aware of the situation with special bins for cans only.

An Observatory would be a great addition to the campus.

How about a battle of the bands where at least one member of the band is a Harper student.

In running an establishment this big, finance is a problem, but a growing concern is having to read tests and handouts printed on the old hard-to-read "ditto" blue copy.

Get a few video-games.

It is extremely hard for a disabled student to open doors here on campus. What about lighter, two-way swinging doors to make it easier?

Building F Please try to get orange juice back in pop machines. The "orange-pineapple" drink used now is only 20% juice.

would be beneficial to implement a recycle program on cans. The

Please place typing machine pads under typewriters so the noise level is not so distracting.

The above list comes from concerned students and staff. If you are concerned let me know. Put a line in an S.C.I.Q. box.

Correction

As of January 30th the bookstore no longer offers the 20% off yearly sale on the last day of the week. We are sorry for any inconvenience this may have caused.

Sometimes I sit before the old word processor not knowing what I'm going to say about a film I have just seen. This is solely because I just don't know how to describe the movie, whether it was good or bad. I now find myself running into this difficulty when trying to write a review of Talk Radio.

Talk Radio is the story of talk-show host, Barry Champlain (Eric Bogosian) who has a very distinct radio personality, either his listeners love him, or they really hate him.

Champlain is a cynic in a world of total optimism. He is the number one talk-show host in Dallas, and is given the opportunity of national syndication.

INTENSE!

The nation-wide debut gets postponed due to "bureaucratic bullshit" Champlain won't conform to any rules the syndication sponsors have.

This may sound like a very weak plot for any movie, but the final product is one of grand proportions. The callers and the way Champlain handles them is the key factor in this films potential.

Bogosian is and has been a very powerful actor in the theatre community, and this quality is carried over to the silver screen as Champlain. Bogosian's ability to portray the complex emotions Champlain is experiencing in this movie is unsurpassed by any other actor I have seen in the past four months.

Ellen Greene plays Champlain's ex-wife Greene (Little Shop of Horrors) shows the audience that she is capable of taking on a serious role. She is convincing when she shows movie-goers a woman who comes to the realization that she is still in love with her husband.

Oliver Stone directs this fictional look into radio. Stone's film credits include Platoon and Gardens of Stone. He once again has produced a strong piece of cinematic entertainment. His knowledge of the appropriate camera angles and its effects on the viewer only boost this film further into the four star realm.

To prevent ruining this film for any curious viewer, I will sum up my opinion in as few words as possible. This is a must see for everybody. This show takes you out of your seat a puts you into a mind filled with a mixture of emotions and anxiety, the mind of Barry Champlain.

For those of you who consider Dynasty a powerful drama, this show may be harardous to your already weakened mind. For the rest of you, however; I can only recommend this film so much and the rest is up to you.

Ministry Is Back With A New Sound

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

Chicago native Alain Jourgenson, a.k.a. Ministry, has certainly changed directions since his start. Just compare song on the first Ministry album, With Sympathy, to one on the Land of Rape and Honey, the latest Ministry project.

You will hear radically different styles, the first being nearly disco, and the second bordering on punk/thrash, a style that I believe is currently called "industrial" music. The change in the music cannot hide the fact that Jourgenson is enthusiastic when it comes to his work. A raw, vibrant energy pervades this album from start to finish.

The material on this album is without a doubt an acquired taste. I am giving it a good review, and I did not like it at first.

The hardest of the songs has a definite dance beat, and a nearly irresistible one at that. Sometimes it's hard to accept that you can dance to songs like Flashback, with lyrics such as "I'm gonna break his legs off, I'm gonna rip his head off," (The rest is unprintable).

The vocals are mostly, if not always, sung through various bits of electronic equipment that distort and overamplify. This understandably makes the lyrics difficult to understand, but when you do figure them out, you often wish you hadn't. For example, the opening track Stigmata's line is "I'm chewing on glass, and eating my fingers." and it makes me wince. Every time I get an image of someone actually chewing on glass.

Jourgenson won't get any awards for lyric writing, but it's the music that matters with Ministry. When Ministry played at the Holiday Star Theater in December, most of the music was either on tape or in sequencers. There's run much chance of making a mistake that way...maybe Jourgenson is faster than I thought.

Ministry's live performance also proved that they (Jourgenson and his supporting musicians) are much better at their own stuff that they are at covering songs by Skinny Puppy and Peter Murphy.

The track sequence is uneven. The first three tracks (Stigmata, The Missing, and Deity) are good lead-ins for the next three songs on the album, which are the more interesting tracks. A rebound and the best songs come from tracks 7 to 10.

I imagine Jourgenson preferred a strong finish over a more even mix.

The production by Hypo Luxa and Hermes Pan is good, especially on tracks like You Know What You Are, Flashback, and the title track, but I would expect Jourgenson to be producing his own material by now.

Not for the faint-hearted, and certainly not pop, but still danceable and fun as long as it's not loud enough to pierce your eardrums.

'Pest Fest' is Coming

By Lari Vaughn
Staff Writer

Dozens of killer ants storm South America; mutant cockroaches descend on unsuspecting humans; Los Angeles is terrorized by giant ants; and a mutated octopus attacks San Francisco. All this killing! All this destruction! All in one night!

Usually, this would be an event of catastrophic proportion, but don't run for your Raid cans yet. The bugs are all on screen, and at Harper's 7th Annual World's Worst Film Fest, sponsored by the Program Board.

This year's festival theme, "The Pest Fest", will feature four movies. The worst of the worst are "Bug," "It Came From Beneath the Sea," "Them," and "The Naked Jungle."

Aside from the films, the event will include roach motel and fly swatter door prizes, free bar/bugs and paper wads, and a $1 rebate to anyone who stays through all four movies. Also, anyone who comes dressed as a mutant cockroach will get in at half price.

The film festival will take place on February 3 in J Building room 143.

Tickets for the event will be $3 for Harper students and $5 for the public. For tickets or more information, call the Harper Box Office at 397-3000 ext. 2547.

Swimmers push for faster times

By Trudy Herbst
Staff Writer

Top competition from Illinois Divisions I, II, and III, National Junior College Athletic Association (NJCAA) and National Athletic Intercollegiate Association (NAIA) schools pushed Harper swimmers to faster times and impressive swims this weekend at U of I-Chicago. The Illinois Intercollegiate offers comparable competition to a national-level meet.

Top Harper placewinner, Peggy McCann ranked fourth in the 100 free with a 57.68, .33 seconds from a national qualifying time.

With less than two months left in the season, the pressure is on to achieve season goals.

Lady Hawks 8-12, 3-4

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

After their loss to Kankakee last Thursday, the Lady Hawks returned to conference play where they lost 56-49 to South Suburban on Saturday and they won 70-54 over Triton on Tuesday to bring their record up to 8-12 overall and 3-4 in the NAC.

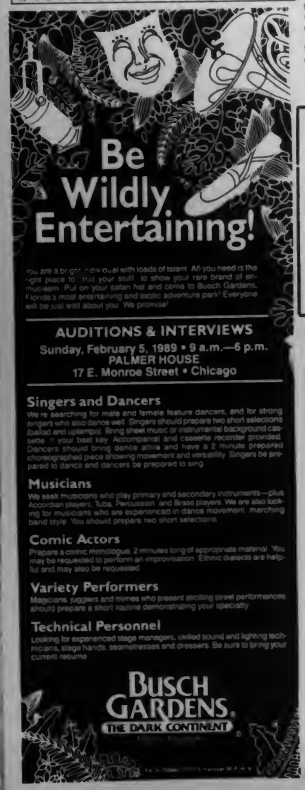

In Saturday's loss to South Suburban, the Lady Hawks fell behind by 8 at 12-4 with a little less than five minutes gone in the contest. They were able to come back and tie it up at 12 with an 8-0 run, culminating with a Patty Canchola lay-up at the 11:42 mark. But South Suburban (7-12) was able to make a pair of spurts, including an 11-0 run in the final 7:39 to take a 31-16 lead at the intermission.

Still, The Bulldogs would not be able to win this one going away as the Lady Hawks came back with a 17-0 run in the first six minutes to take a 33-31 lead in which Amy Koziol had 7 of her 18 points.

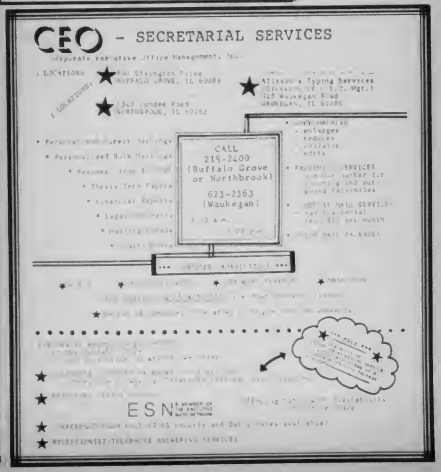

Then the Lady Hawks proceeded to go cold as they were outscored 17-6 as South Suburban took its biggest lead of the night at 54-41 with 4:08 remaining.

But the Lady Hawks would not throw in the towel. The Lady Hawks were able to go on a 8-0 run as time ran out.

"We should've beaten them. If we had something in the first half. And then we came back and then we just quit." Head Coach Tom Teschner said after the game.

The Harper Men's basketball team losing streak grew to five as the Hawks dropped both of their games last week, a 103-69 decision to South Suburban on Saturday night and a 72-70 decision on Tuesday night to Triton at the buzzer on Fred Leggin's 16 foot jump shot from a John Trogni inbounds pass which cleared through three Hawk defenders. The losses dropped Harper's record to 4-15 overall and 1-6 in the N4C.

The host Bulldogs (12-9) were able to jump out to an 8-0 lead in the first three minutes of Saturday's game behind buckets by Rob Respress, Victor Graver, Derrick Reed. Finally, a Donald Pierce lay-up with 16:32 left put the Hawks' up on the board. The Hawks were able to battle back and closed the gap at five, 18-13 with ten minutes left.

After a Joe Pasti basket, it was all South Suburban. A 10-0 run in a span of two minutes made it 28-13. By halftime, the Bulldogs were able to increase the margin to 20, at 50-30. The Bulldogs continued to dominate in the second half as they outscored the Hawks 53-39.

Leading the way for the Bulldogs were Respress & Reed with 18 points each, followed by Graver with 15. Kevin Simpson paced the Hawks with 18 points while Travis Perry added 15, all in the second half.

Against Triton on Tuesday night, the Hawks saw a 13 point early second half lead and some great defensive performances from Simpson, Perry, Pierce, and Jason Brooks' slip away as Triton finally caught up when Anthony Palm's jumper with 3:22 remaining gave the Trojans (14-8, 5-2) their first lead of the night at 64-63. The Trojans were able to pull away to a 70-67 lead when Mark Benford missed the front end of a 1-1 with 14 seconds left, giving the Hawks one last chance to tie.

Chad Hull snared the rebound then handed the ball to Perry, who in turn passed it to Brooks who fired a desperation shot in the face of three Triton defenders. The shot rimmed out and in through the net tying the contest up at 70 with seven seconds left.

Unfortunately for the Hawks, the Trojans were able to call time out with three seconds remaining and set up the winning inbounds play.

Benford led the Trojans with 16 points. Palm added 12 while Perry led the Hawks with 22, including 4 for 4 from the 3-point line.

Lady Hawks go down to KCC 72-46

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

The Lady Hawks ran into a buzzsaw Thursday Afternoon as they fell to unbeaten Kankakee 72-46. The Lady Cavaliers, (15-0) rank second behind Moraine Valley in the Region IV poll.

Kankakee jumped out to a 16-0 lead with 18:37 remaining in the first half before an 18 footer by Amy Kozzol put Harper (7-11) on the board. That began a 14-6 run which closed the Kankakee lead to 22-14 with seven minutes remaining in the first half when Patty Canchola scored on a lay-up.

That was as close as the Lady Hawks could get as the Lady Cavaliers outscored Harper 12-5 in the final seven minutes giving Kankakee a 34-19 halftime lead.

Through the first six minutes of the second half, the Lady Hawks were able to stay within 15 points. A 10-2 run put Kankakee ahead to stay, 57-34 with 7:04 remaining in the game.

"They're scholarship players they could have beaten us by more if they had used the press on us," said Head Coach Tom Teschner.

The Lady Cavaliers were led by a balanced scoring attack as Lisa Robinson and Christy Whaley had 10 points apiece and Teri Steichen, Kris Baron, and Lori Miller had 8 points apiece. Robinson also added four assists and five rebounds.

Pacific O'Donoghue led the Lady Hawks with 22 points while Amy Kozol added 14.

Bakey leads Harper wrestlers

By Jamie Bezon
Staff Writer

Eric Bakey (158 lb.) led the Hawk wrestlers to a second place finish at the Harper Invite. Bakey's first place victory earned the honor of outstanding wrestler of the tournament.

Despite good overall placing, hard luck continues to haunt the team. At the beginning of the season, academic ineligibilities plagued Hawk grapplers. Now, injuries plague the wrestlers. The team has overcame their troubles with strong back-to-back finishes.

Strong contributors to the second place finish were Ray Villar (126 lb.), Keith Demann (167 lb.), Mark Cecchi (177 lb.) and Rob Malecke (134 lb.), all placing second. Malecke separated a shoulder during his bout adding to the team's injury problem.

Jason Finucan (142 lb.) placed third overall and was defeated in his final match 9-8. Todd Carlig (150 lb.) placed fourth. In the heavyweight class, David Collins contributed points, but was not a place winner.

Coach Lovelace was satisfied with the tournament, "We were hanged up, but the kids wrestled nicely," praised Lovelace. Enthusiasm has been good. In no way am I dissatisfied. We just need some healing time for our wounds."

Final Results: Triton First; Harper Second; Forest Park, Missouri Third; Belleville Fourth.

Exploring additional child care

By Lisa Aust
Staff Writer

Child care, a national issue, is a factor of increasing importance in the relations between the work place and work force.

By naming child care a 1988-1989 institutional goal, Harper College addresses this issue. The goal commits, "to explore the feasibility of a comprehensive evening child care service in partnership with the existing college service, business and industry."

Harper College currently provides an Early Childhood Education Service for five hours or less per day to children between the ages of two and a half to six. These limited hours diminish the confidence of the working parent that full-time day care will be available, and child development students cannot experience a 'full' day in a work situation.

Recently the Child Development Department sent out surveys to assess current and potential need for comprehensive full-time day care. Dr. Lucas, director of planning and research, is analyzing the results which should be ready sometime in March. Licensed, affordable, quality, and comprehensive day care is hard to find and a concern of parents.

The statistics on this problem, compiled from the United States Department of Labor, the United States Department of Commerce Bureau of the Census, the Children's Defense Fund, and the Chicago Tribune, are staggering.

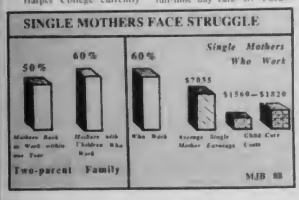

According to their survey,

- Fifty percent of all new mothers are back in the work force within one year.
- Sixty percent of all mothers with small children work.
- Sixty-eight percent of single mothers work.
- Nine out of ten single parent families are headed by a female whose yearly income averages $7,035. The cost of child care, per child, can range between $1,560 to $1,820 yearly.
- Five to twelve million children are left alone for part of every day.

Professor Carol Neuhauser, chairperson of the Child Development Program, explains, "When the center opened in 1971, child care was not like it is today. We don't have the facilities for evening care. For years, students have been asking for this as a teaching facility for proper day care."

A breakfast was held on January 26 with various local

Board of Trustees' first meeting in '89

Board updates policy manual

By Andy Schneider
Staff Writer

The College Board of Trustees revised the "Board Policy Manual" with a 6-1 vote. Every three years the Board reviews its policy manual to consider new policies, make revisions to existing policies, delete any existing policies that are no longer appropriate and to ensure any new laws passed by the Federal or State Government are incorporated.

The manual sets forth the policies adopted by the trustees. College personnel, trustees, students, and community members use the policy manual to govern responsibilities relative to the operation of the college.

A policy revision or addition must be submitted in writing to a board representative, who will present the suggestion at a board meeting.

If the board reviews and approves the change at a preliminary and final review meeting, it is implemented at once. The change does not have to be printed in the policy manual in order to be enforced. All suggestions are reviewed two final times every third year and changes will appear in the updated manual.

Once Policies are approved the college administration creates and sets up procedures, rules and regulations to achieve the policies objectives.

At last Thursday's board meeting, the board made its final review of all the proposed changes to the policy manual since 1986. There are now approximately 56 revisions and additions to the manual, all of which will be in the next reprinting some time this year.

One of the board members, Larry Meats, disagrees with the majority vote to approve a new

Presently, the policy reads, "To provide adult education and remedial instruction."

The board approved the revision which states, "To provide adult education, and "remedial education necessary to achieve the competency level required of first-year college students."

Meats said he approves of the revision but would like some parameters on remedial education. He added he doesn't believe that Harper College should offer courses to students whose only goal is a high school diploma (G.E.D.), unless they have plans to continue their education. John Cook, another trustee, expressed the same concern with this issue.

The board passed the amendment until satisfactory substitution can be made and revised at the next meeting, Feb. 17.

Elite students awarded

By Andy Schneider
Staff Writer

Out of more than 18,000 students enrolled at Harper last fall, just 26 are awarded the Student Service Award.

Students who actively take part in the schools clubs and/or organizations are recognized in the form of either a full or a half tuition rebate. Of the students chosen, 21 will receive half of their fall semester tuition and the most outstanding contributors will receive full rebates.

These students are selected based on performance, position and responsibilities, leadership and length of service.

These are the students and the club or organization that they represent: JoAnn Hausen, Harper's Bizarre; Patrick Ford, C.L.A.D.; Carrie Sinem, Food Service Management.

Recipients from the Harbinger were: Sue Berne, Robyn Davis, Trudy Herbst, Scott Neidl, Douglas Ray, and John Sisson.

Suban Buttarri and Charlie Peredo from the International Club, Ron Lovatt, Political Science Club were also awarded.

Jim Cabig, Jenny Hergerost, Dean Morgan, Phil Seifritz, and Brad Underwood received awards for the Program Board. Also were: Robert Hoptner, Science Fiction Club; Rosemary Langer and Peter Lindstrom Speech Team; Laura Jacobsen, Student Trustee; and Debbie Majcher, Theatre.

Finally WHCM members Dianna Dickson, Steve Hungsberg, Tony Laramie, and Scott Morton received awards.

By Mona Isa

"I Like Me When I'm Drug Free!" is the motto of this spring's National College Drug Awareness Week held at Harper College from Monday, February 6 to Friday, February 10.

The Drug, Alcohol, and Wellness Network (DAWN), sponsor of the event, hopes to assist and educate the Harper community on alternatives of substance abuse.

"We want to concentrate on the individual gaining personal information. You don't have to be involved with substance abuse, but just learn about it," stated Phyllis Zabrocki, DAWN Coordinator. During Drug Awareness Week, various events on alcohol, drugs, and health alternatives will be presented.

On Tuesday, the Self Help Fair offers community service and self-help organizations the opportunity to respond to concerns, questions or information. Films will be shown in Student Center, A Building, and the Dupage County Sheriff's Canine Unit will demonstrate drug detection.

The Imagination Theater Company, a professional group from Chicago, will provide live entertainment on Wednesday at 12:30pm. Four vignettes titled 'Party Pooper!', 'What's Your Excuse?', 'Drinking Is.....', and 'Creative Cover-up Shop' are featured.

Thursday, the Narcotics Division of Chicago Police Department will present slides on street drugs and its affects.

"We really are trying to establish the proper contact and provide resources for individuals who need it," stated Zabrocki.

One of the main objectives that the DAWN program hopes to gain from the Drug Awareness Week, is response or interest in student participation in support groups. The support groups will cover a vast range of topics of pertinent issue to the individual(s).

- A personal growth group is being formed to help young adults in working with difficulties such as leaving home and coping with college life.
- Adults are offered an opportunity to increase their self-awareness and learn how to cope with stress at work.
- Former substance abusers, led by a counselor, will be formed to provide emotional support.
- Another group associated with problematic eating patterns will help to attain healthy food change alternatives.

Future workshops are also scheduled to help substance abusers and their families. Any one interested in attending the workshops or support groups should contact Phyllis Zabrocki, extension 2626.

businesses to gain support for the revision of the child care program at Harper. The initial reaction seems to be favorable.

Fuelling to the major problem of facility expansion. This is why Harper is aggressively courting the local businesses. Professor Nachaiser stated that, "Even with supplementation, the cost could be too much for Harper's own students and employees to be able to actively participate. However, it is premature at this point to make reliable forecasts."

The Department visualizes a "comprehensive child care center in the trees" near Euclid and Roselle Roads. The center foresees extended program available up to 10-12 hours per day for infants, toddlers, three to four year olds and kindergartners (full and half day programs). Night care for infants through the age of twelve and a half, and flex-time are other alternatives.

If anyone has any suggestions for the expansion of the early childhood program/child care services contact the Child Department at extension 2262.

Point Of View Showcases Talent

By Vicki Milewski
Trudy Herbst
Staff Writers

Take out your favorite pen, pencil, paintbrush, camera or crayon. The deadline for the Point Of View (POV), our literary, photography and graphic magazine, is approaching.

Students and employees alike are encouraged to submit creative material in the following categories: two and three dimensional art, photography, short stories, essays, songs with music, and poetry.

Students are responsible for publication decisions. Bradley Mulack, (literary) and Nufri Asani (graphics) were chosen as this year's editors. Any student may join either selection committee.

Between 30 to 40 visual pieces and 20 to 25 literary materials are published annually. The size of POV depends on the quality of the submissions, not the quantity.

After the selection process, editors prepare the material for publication. The graphics editor is responsible for the layout as well as the cover design and color.

Point of View advisors, Frank Smith and Mike Knudsen, guide students through the selection process. Literary Advisor, Frank Smith, sees his role as a "teacher". "The editor has a great chance to learn about the publication process," commented Smith. "I am only here for answers and support."

Inclusion in the POV, "is a permanent way for artists to exhibit their work," encourages Mike Knudsen, visual advisor. "Published work is an impressive addition to a portfolio."

"Considering the benefits," comments Knudsen, "It's ironic that there are not more submissions. But, I feel by the deadline there will be more." Put your creative energies to work, and help make this year's POV a magazine that showcases the talents of Harper College students.

Guidelines are available from either the visual or literary advisor. All entries must be received by February 17. Literary pieces should be submitted to Frank Smith, F313; Mike Knudsen will accept visual submissions in the Graphics Office, C216.

Student Trustee
A reflection on the year

By Lisa Aust
Staff Writer

Get ready gang, election time is right around the corner again. In late March the student body will vote for a new student trustee. The field of candidates is still wide open, the hats have yet to be thrown into the ring. Laura Jacobson, the current trustee, takes time to reflect upon her experiences of the past year.

Jacobson took office last April 15; her term will expire April 14. In addition to this responsibility, she is a member of the Student Senate, Student Activities, the Program Board, Phi Theta Kappa and on occasion, writes for the Harbinger.

Candidates do not need to be as involved as Laura. To qualify a candidate must be 1) a registered student with at least nine credit hours in both the fall and spring semesters, 2) a resident of the Harper College District 512 and 3) a new applicant for the trustee position.

Webster's Third New International Dictionary defines trustee as a "member of a board entrusted with administering the funds and directing the policy of an institution or organization."

The Board can formulate policy for the school as well as administer funds. A 1973 Illinois law, states that all boards governing higher education must have a non-voting student representative.

How much influence does a student trustee actually have over the Board and their decisions? Jacobson sighed the answer, "Not much."

Aside from this frustration, Jacobson has implemented some pet projects with Michael Nejman, the Student Activities coordinator. This fall's Student Leadership Orientation For Two-Year Schools seminars involved a series of lectures given by some of Harper's staff and faculty.

The Club and Organization Roundtables is another Jacobson project. Roundtables provide an opportunity for the campus clubs and organizations to discover each other, and more importantly, the services available to them. One result of this exchange was last year's Christmas party.

After attending meetings last year, Jacobson found the exact obligations of the job to be elusive. Each new trustee has brought a new focus to the job. She confides, "I never knew what to report." With help from her Advisor, Jeanne Pankanin, she has defined what exactly her role should be. "I try to represent the student perspective."

Her best source of information of the students' opinions is the Student Comments, Ideas, and Questions box (SCIQ). On checking for results, she used to find mostly garbage, literally. She is quick to interject, "But I expected that at first." Suggestions now out- number the refuse.

Jacobson takes the suggestions and compiles a list for all the members of the board. "So they don't forget," scolds Jacobson. Some of the more interesting comments range from "the nice view of a garbage truck, while trying to eat in the cafeteria," to "poor ventilation in buildings E and M."

With all these activities could Jacobson possibly have time for more? Yes, she could, and does. Outside of school, she is an Assistant to the Director at the Dwight D. Eisenhower Junior High School Observatory in Hoffman Estates. A third grade tour peaked her interest, and in the sixth grade Jacobson volunteered to help out.

Student Trustee Laura Jacobson

In the beginning, Jacobson was "Not to keen on the idea of going here. I was a brat and wanted to go away to a four year institution. I would still be hating Harper if it weren't for my involvement in these activities. Fortunately I met the right people, and became interested."

Evidently Jacobson has made many friends. Fellow program board member Jim Cabaj simply says, "She's great."

Jacobson feels the best thing for students to do is to, "Get involved more at Harper. There are so many opportunities here, don't ignore them. Go for it!"

March is over a month away. There's still time to attend a board meeting, and decide if becoming Harper's next Student Trustee is the right thing for you.

Anyone interested in the position is encouraged to attend a board meeting to witness the job in action. The meetings are open to the public on the fourth Thursday of each month, at 8:00p.m., in the Building A board room.

"Friends" Serve Community

By Jamie Beeson
Staff Writer

Friends of Harper, established in 1980, is a volunteer group which speaks to the community about the importance of the college as a cultural and social resource.

Friends of Harper President Sam Oliver said, "Our goal is to serve as a two-way conduit for communication. We are constantly being educated about Harper's programs (so we can) spread the word to the public."

During the year, the Friends work on various projects. The Friendship Grove improves the landscaped area located outside of buildings G and H. One change is to add benches to that area. Currently, the Friends are working on a video to present to the community.

President Oliver added, "Harper is a fantastic community. It is a pleasure to be the head of such a group."

Friends of Harper has approximately 150 members in three categories: lifetime, family and individual. Approximately 50 people are lifetime members.

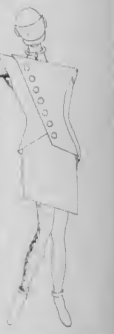

The community is invited to the Friends of Harper's annual meeting on Wednesday, May 3. For more information contact Elaine Stoermer, director of college relations at 397-3000, ext. 2279.

A Fashion Odyssey

Fashion design student, Marsha Donahue, is a finalist in the second annual "Suit of the Future" Design Contest.

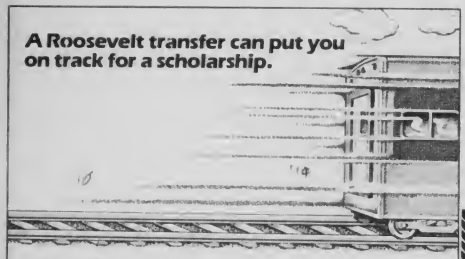

Nation-wide clothing manufacturer and retailer Anderson-Little/Rothman Brothers, sponsor of the contest, encouraged college faculty members to incorporate the contest into their curricula or assign it as a class project. Each entry was required to have an 8-1/2" x 11" design accompanied by a thoughtful concept explaining why the entry would be the "Suit of the Future".

Business Suit of the Future

Donahue's entry is best described in her own words:

The business suit of the future for women is worn over the ultraviolet protective basic body suit, with protective gloves, communication helmet and visor which are removed when indoors. The identification calculator watch is worn on the wrist, the computer belt is worn under the top, and aerobic-type boots finish the posture. (High heels are ancient history!) Jet packs or scuba tanks (for those who live in underwater communities) can be easily unhooked. This suit is thermostatically controlled, disposable, and biodegradable. No more piles of laundry!

Let the (power assist) doors swing both ways

The power assist doors for "handicapped use only" are one of the newest developments on campus this semester. All things considered, one might think the doors are a step in the right direction for the handicapped. The problem that arises is the handicapped are the only ones who can't operate these doors!

The disabled community has been recognized more and more throughout the 80's. Harper College, being a public, not private, institution, realized the need to make its own campus more accessible to wheelchair users. A few years ago, Harper realized the need to recognize the accessability of doorways on the campus.

After meetings between the Physical Plant Department and Disabled Student Services (DSS), Harper decided to install nine fully automatic doors at key entrance ways throughout the campus. This would make virtually every building on the Harper campus accessible.

The project needed approval from the Illinois State Capitol Development Board, because the state would finance the doors. The board found the cost for installing all these fully automatic doors to be too expensive.

This is where the great mistake was made. The architecture firm contracted by Harper to install accessible doors suggested power assist doors. The state told Harper College that it would fund enough money for power assist doors. Harper accepted.

One year after the meeting, which researched installation of fully automatic doors, DSS received a memo stating that the college would now install the power assist doors. That memo was a great surprise to DSS. Even though more power assist doors could be installed and the system does meet state handicap codes, DSS was never consulted about the decision and they realized the doors probably wouldn't be a great help for the disabled population of Harper.

Now, almost two years later, the power assist doors have been installed. The idea behind the doors is for the disabled person to depress a pad which releases the arc lock in the door, thus making it easier to move.

Good idea, right? WRONG!

First of all, even though the pads are low enough for a person in a wheelchair to reach, many of the pads are in a corner. If disabled persons push their wheelchaires as far as they can (until their feet are stopped by the door), it is very hard to reach the corner where the wall meets the door to depress the pad.

Second, the pads are not simple to depress. A person with limited upper body strength will have some slight problems pressing on the pad. Once the disabled person presses the pad, is it activated? It doesn't click or light, or anything, so if it didn't activate the disabled person must reposition themself to press it again.

Finally, the main reason these doors don't work: It is very hard for a person in a wheelchair, or even a person using crutches or braces, to pull a door open, and then get through it. Pushing a door open is not a problem, but positioning a wheelchair, pulling a door open, and then getting through the door is very difficult. Even once the wheelchair has gotten that far, most doorways at Harper have thresholds, which make it that much harder to proceed through.

If someone would have listened to the disabled community, maybe they might have come up with a better solution. Tom Thompson from DSS suggests three or four fully automatic doors in key spots on campus, like buildings A, F, D, and I. Why not? That would give wheelchair users independent access to a lot of things on campus. The automatic doors being installed in A and I are nice, but they only allow access to the buildings from the parking lots. That is the same with the fully automatic door already in Building M; you can only use it from the parking lot. (By the way, if you are going to Building M from Building A in a wheelchair, the only way to get there is by going through the bass parking lot).

Last semester, before I even knew the power assist doors were being installed, I submitted a suggestion to our Student Trustee who in turn gave my suggestion to Harper's Board of Trustees. (Little did I know that even if they approved it, it would take half of a decade to see any physical results). Anyway, my suggestion was for a door entry system that would be accessible, very inexpensive, and need no electricity or power of any kind. As I stated earlier, a door can be pushed open easily enough if it is not latched shut tightly. So install a door that can be pushed from either direction. Also, remove the threshold in those doorways. Simple, right? YES! And it's not too late.

Doors in all the doorways which are power assisted can be adjusted to push both ways or new doors can be installed that push both ways. This way, the power assist entrances wouldn't be a complete waste.

I feel I have given a very reasonable alternative to save face IN this situation. It's my answer. Some questions I still have are: Why couldn't just three or four more fully automatic doors be installed? Why couldn't alternative sources of funding be investigated? Why have the front doors of Building A been TEMPORARILY closed for over a year? Let's work together and make this campus accessible for everyone.

PHYSICALLY UNFIT

By Scott Neidt
Entertainment Editor

Once upon a time, in a land called Hollywood, there lived an idea by the name of Good Movie. Good Movie was young and vibrant in those days of old. Currently, he only makes an appearance on occasion. The day I went to view Physical Evidence must have been one of Good Movie's days off.

Physical Evidence starts with promise--a strong plot. It's a shame movies can not live by plot alone. From here on out, it goes down hill faster than Great America's "American Eagle."

Burt Reynolds as Joe Paris

Joe Paris (Burt Reynolds) is a police officer who has been suspended for unnecessary violence. During his suspension, a fellow cop visits to explain that, an informant Paris has used many times has been murdered, strangled with a piano wire. The wire and one of Paris' shirts, covered with blood, is found behind the refrigerator by the fellow police officer. And what do you know, Paris is being charged with murder one.

The Paris case is picked up by a female attorney named Jennifer Hudson (Theresa Russell) who is suffering in a chauvinistic legal society. Hudson persuades her way into the job of defense attorney to prove herself worthy of "serious cases." A little melodramatic, but good so far.

Now let's give a warm welcome, while our friend Ned Beatty enters the picture as the prosecuting District Attorney, James Hicks. Hicks is sure, beyond any doubt, of Paris' guilt, and this is reflected within his crude and insensitive stubbornness.

Theresa Russell and Ned Beatty in Physical Evidence

Now we'll get down to the nitty-gritty, starting with Reynolds. Reynolds is back in his customary role of "the cocky tough guy", which is extremely redundant. His portrayal of Paris is no different than his portrayal of any other character he's played. So if you like Reynolds, he did great. If not, he did_____(fill in the blank).

Russell does not even come close to her performance in Black Widow, which was okay. When a public attorney shoots a man in his tracks, feeling no remorse that she has just murdered a human being, we tend to lose any sense of realism the film was supposedly providing. If the viewer has never seen her before you may ask questions like, Why did she ever get cast in this movie?"

For what it's worth, which really isn't much, Beatty gives a fairly decent performance. He may be the only other redeeming quality about the movie (the first being a plot that has some potential).

The screen-writer, Bill Phillips, had better pray for Social Security. With a flare for creative lines like Russell's teaser, "Paris, can't you do anything right" stated in light humor after shooting the "bad guy", has enched Phillips a special place in the "Movie Hall of Has-Beens."

Aside from the many fine attributes to this bit of quality entertainment (yes, I am being sarcastic), when viewing this classic the audio was out of sync with the video. This, although not intentional, was one of the best parts of the film.

For those of you who read my reviews regularly, you may remember my review of Dead Ringers. Even though I gave credit to the wrong production company (it was a 20th Century release, not an Orion) I retitled the movie, "Dead Lingers (like a bad taste in your mouth)."

I feel this movie is also worthy of such an honor, henceforth I shall refer to this movie as Physically Dense, enough said.

Recipe for Fishbone delight

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

RECIPE
FISHBONE
TRUTH AND SOUL
In a large bowl mix
1 c. ska
1 tsp. hard rock
2 fl. oz. funk
4 c. soul

Add a dance beat and some horns. Bake at an outrageous temperature for 41 minutes. Serves a lot of people.

Okay, I'll get serious now. Here's another one of those albums that moves from one musical style to another, yet still retains an overall general flavor.

Fishbone consists of John Norwood Fisher (bass guitar and vocals), Kendall Jones (vocals and guitar), Angelo Moore (saxophone), Walter A Kibby II (trumpet), Charlie Dowd (keyboards and trombone) and Fish, not the same Fish from the group Marillion. Altogether they have crammed their musical range from playing all ska to a mixture of styles on Truth and Soul.

Curtis Mayfield's classic Freddie's Dead opens the album, and Fishbone covers it extremely well. Track two is a ska tune called Ma and Pa. Under the hip-hop ska sound is a disturbing lyric about a child caught in the middle of a divorce. I have heard this song on Harper College's WHCM.

Bonin' Rain is a very attractive slow song, written by band member Dowd, and features some great vocal work. Maybe Long Way is a straight ahead rock and roll tune that would easily fit right into the top 40, if formula radio wasn't so ignorant of the lesser-known bands.

There's a song called Bonin in the Boneyard in the liner notes it says "if you can't figure this one out, then you are lame."

Thankfully, the record does not deteriorate into fun-and-games following this diversion. In fact, it gets stronger. Apart from Subliminal Emotion (which is nearly heavy metal) the remaining songs are the best.

Slow But Movin' (Howard Beach Party) is a terrific song that was featured in the movie Capeheads. The highly stylistic music on this track covers the most powerful lyrics on the album. The words deal with black segregation, a topic which is obviously close to this all black band's heart.

The last two songs are the best. Ghetto Soundwave has a generous helping of ska, and even a tiny hint of reggae. Finally, Change boasts the best vocals on the album. It's a slow song with little more than acoustic guitar to go along with the wistful echoing voice. It's a perfect way to finish off the album.

I'd like to be able to say that there is something for everyone on this album, but I know it's not for everyone. If you think you might like it, then there's a good chance that one of the ten tracks will catch your fancy. But like any good recipe, the mix is better than the individual ingredients.

New Order soars with 'Technique

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

The world's most respected dance band is back in 1989 with their new release entitled Technique. New Order's last release, 1987's Substance 1987, was a compilation album that became their biggest seller to date. Substance 1987 received recognition from places other than just the dance floors. Many of their singles moved away from WXRT-only status and onto other radio station playlists.

WXRT is still the only major station who will automatically play New Order singles, but they have been playing material from Technique since four days before its official release on January 24. This doesn't mean you won't hear it anywhere else. Technique promises to be an even bigger hit than Substance 1987.

The nine songs included in Technique are more reminiscent of New Order's 1985 LP Low-life than their 1986 follow-up Brotherhood. There is more evidence of acoustic guitar (an unusual style for New Order), but there is still the unmistakable New Order electric guitar sound (courtesy of guitarist Peter Hook).

The bass lines are still mostly keyboard created and the drums are still primarily synth-drums, which adds up to New Order still sounding like New Order. There are very few surprises on Technique, but for the New Order fan who doesn't want them to change, this is a good thing.

The first track, their current single Fine Time, is arguably the most atypical song on the album. Incidentally, the version on the album is much better than the twelve inch mix. The next track, All the Way, sounds like it could have come from the Low-life recording sessions. The following song, Love Less, is the second best track with track four, Round & Round, gathering the top honor.

The next song, Vanishing Point, starts out sounding like a cross between Fine Time and Front 242, but quickly settles into the formula New Order sound.

With its strumming acoustic guitar background, the final track is the only real surprise. If it weren't for Bernard Albrecht's familiar voice, Dream Attack would sound the least like New Order of any of the songs on the album.

Dream Attack is the only exception to an album that seems to find New Order playing it safe. There's little experimentation with new sounds, but as I said before, this won't disappoint the group's fans. It doesn't disappoint me either, because the material on the album is very good.

In these days, when every band seems to want to achieve a "new" sound for a new album, in a way it's actually refreshing to have a band continuing its old familiar sound. This album is a great start to a new music year.

'Jacques Brel' looking for singers

By Scott Seidl
Entertainment Editor

Have you ever wanted to make a name for yourself in the entertainment world? Are your vocal chords ready to carry you through a career in music? Then your time to shine, is now.

"Jacques Brel is alive and well and living in Paris" (Brel), Harper's spring musical, may offer you your big break.

Brel is a series of about twenty five songs, each telling their own story. There is little to no dialogue, so the first set of auditions will be vocal performance only, preferably with a selection from the show.

The cast consists of a minimum of four to a maximum of eight people, which makes competition stiff. If you are interested in auditioning, musical scores, scripts and tapes of the show are available on reserve in the library.

Preliminary auditions will be held in A building room A139 on Friday, February 17 at 7:00 pm and Saturday, February 18 at 1:00 pm. Callbacks will be held on Sunday, February 19 at 1:00 pm.

If you have any further questions pertaining to Brel, contact Mary Jo Willis at 397-3000 extension 2448 or leave a message at extension 2285.

Bolt named softball coach

Press release

With 22 years experience as Harper College Coordinator and Assistant Athletic Director, Martha Lynn Bolt will now assume duties as the women's softball coach.

"I'm starting with a good nucleus," said Bolt. "I feel very good about the number of returnees."

Bolt brings 19 years coaching experience to this position. As the Harper Women's Tennis Coach from 1967-86, Bolt had five teams qualify for nationals.

Bolt is assistant director of the National Junior College Athletic Association (NJCAA) Region IV women's sports and a past-president of the Coaches Association for Women.

"Martha is an experienced coach, and has been successful with her teams," said Harper Athletic Director Roger Bedsholt. "We are very excited about having her aboard."

Hawks Play "Hard Ball"

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

It's not often that a coach will tell you his team played hard after losing by 20 points. Such was the case last Thursday night, as Harper took the #2 team in the country, Illinois Valley, to the wire for almost 3/4 of the game. A couple of scoring spurts, a pair of technicals, and the Apaches abundance of talent finally did the Hawks in 98-78.

"I thought we played hard against the best team in the country," summed up Head Coach Bill Probst.

Illinois Valley (20-1, 8-0) jumped out to early leads of 10-4, 16-6, and 18-8 before the Hawks went on a 9-3 run capped off by Travis Perry's jumper to cut the Apache lead to 21-17. The Apaches broke away once again to take a 43-32 lead with two minutes left in the first half. The Hawks wouldn't wave the white flag of surrender as a 9-4 Hawk run capped off by a pair of free throws from Jason Brooks cut the deficit to only six at 47-41.

The Apaches soon became able to pull away from the Hawks permanently as the lead eventually grew to 23.

The Hawks would be able to regroup from Thursday's setback and beat Joliet 86-83 in a wild and wooly affair as the Hawks saw a 16 point shrink to two before the Hawks were able to pull away with victory behind Travis Perry's 39 points including 21 for 25 from the free throw line.

Nefczyk paces swimmers

By Trudy Herbst
Staff Writer

Women's Swim Team Captain, Jillie Nefczyk, captured two first place victories at Wright College on January 25, 100 Fly (1:17.79) and 500 Free (6:37.02).

Only six women swimmers braved Wright's aged 20 yard pool and faced unusual events such as a 60 Freestyle and 160 Individual Medley. The shallow depth of this dated facility was no obstacle for Sue Berne. Berne posted a personal best and a third place finish in the 100 Breast (2:06.60).

Teammates captured three second places. Melissa Burda, 160 Individual Medley (2:26.00) and 100 Breast (1:26.59); Staci Ergish - 200 Freestyle (2:57.00), and Lisa Smith - 60 Freestyle (45.24).

Ergish - 200 Freestyle (2:30.48).

Third place finishers were: Sue Berne - 160 Individual Medley (3:00.90), Melissa Budde - 100 Freestyle (1:14.44), Staci Ergish - 500 Freestyle (7:03.72), Stephanie Kopecky - 200 Freestyle (2:57.00), and Lisa Smith - 60 Freestyle (45.24).

Lady Hawks fall to IV

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

The Lady Hawks encounter with Illinois Valley last Thursday could have easily been two games in one. The first, which lasted a little over 35 minutes was a tightly contested game in which no one had a lead of more than three points and the lead changed hands 11 times. The second game saw the Lady Hawks turn cold.

The first half saw both clubs battle back and forth as the lead changed hands six times. Illinois Valley (IV) took its first lead of the game when Julie Judd connected on the first of her five three-pointers to give the Apaches a 7-4 lead with 16:47 remaining. The Lady Hawks were able to battle back and tie the game up at 10 before Judd's second three-pointer gave IV a 13-10 lead.

The Lady Hawks were able to get the lead back at 17-16 when Patty Canchola made the second of a two-shot foul. The Apaches took the lead back on Judd's third three-pointer to give IV a 19-17 lead with 6:52 left. That Apache lead didn't last two minutes when back to back baskets by Amy Koziol brought Harper back in front, 21-19.

The first half ended with both teams trading five-point scoring spurts.

The second half went the same with the exception that the Lady Hawks were ahead for a good portion of the half. The Lady Hawks would take their final lead when O'Donoghue banked a shot in off the glass to make it 44-43.

It was here that the scales began to tip in IV's favor. The Apaches would go on a 13-2 run in the final five minutes, breaking the game open. The run was highlighted by Judd's fourth and fifth three-pointer's of the night. An O'Donoghue bucket with 2:47 left gave the Lady Hawks their final points of the game.

For the Lady Hawks it was another loss in which they failed to get the job done under pressure. The loss brought their record to a dismal 1-8 in games that theLady Hawks lost by ten points or less.

"We blew our cool down the stretch. I thought we had it when the big girl fouled out (IV Center Ann Maller), but we couldn't get the job done. We tried, but we gotta do more than try," said frustrated Head Coach Tom Teschner.

Tuesday evening the Lady Hawks were able to hold off a vicious three point barrage and last minute three point barrage to beat Joliet 69-58. Pascale O'Donghue's 28 led the way for Harper.

Chicago sports rap-up

By Kevin Oates
Staff Writer

Michael Jordan achieved another basketball milestone in Philadelphia when he scored his 10,000th point. He did it in the second shortest amount of time than any other player besides Wilt Chamberlain.

Jordan's heroics were not enough as the Chicago Bulls lost the game to a tough 76ers team. The Bulls rebounded when they came home and pounced the Washington Bullets 117 to 106 to up there record to a fine 24 and 16. The Bulls take on Detroit and Sacramento at home this week then are off to Houston for a Friday night game.

The Chicago Black Hawks are steadily improving under Coach Mike Keenan, but unfortunately fell back into the cellar after a disappointing loss to Calgary in overtime. Monday night the Hawks destroyed Toronto 7-1 to leave the cellar. The Hawks take on Winnipeg at home this week, and with Dennis Savard and Doug Wilson out for at least two more weeks the Hawks are going to have to rely on new goalie Alain Chevrier who has been impressive in the net.

One last note on the football season. Chicago Bears coach, Mike Ditka led the NFC over the AFC 34-3 in this year's exertaing(?) Pro Bowl. Just another $10,000. Randall Cuningham of the Eagles was named MVP of the game.

Congratulations to Harry Caray for being inducted to the baseball Hall of Fame. You put Chicago baseball on the map.

Question:

Who are the Cubs going to play in left and center fields? Why can't they get a strong left fielder? Why, Why?

National Condom Week educates the public

By Chris Bogheosian
Staff Writer

Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS), gonorrhea, chlamydia, and syphilis, all common sexually transmitted diseases (STD's), may result in serious illness and sometimes death. National Condom Week is a promotion to educate the public on the proper use of condoms as a means of protection against STD's.

Methods of promotion emphasize information, innovation, visual images, and education through humor with a limerick contest. "Building humor into a sometimes embarassing topic gives people a legitimate reason to giggle or laugh," informs the Condom Resource Center. Innovative approaches draw participants into activities about STD's, AIDS, and pregnancy.

STD's are infections you catch through sexual contact. Harper College Nurse Becky Santeler explains students' attitudes toward STD's: "About one-third of the students have the 'it will never happen to me' attitude; others do not see STD's as a problem; and others accept them as a fact of life."

What Are the Common STDs?

Any of these STDs can be transmitted through sexual contact (including vaginal and anal intercourse and oral-genital contact) with an infected partner who may or may not have symptoms.

Copyright "What are sexually transmitted diseases?"; American College Health Association, 1988

| | What are the signs | Possible problems |
|---|---|---|
| CHLAMYDIA | About 70% of infected people have no symptoms. However, there may be a mild mucus-like discharge from the genitals or stinging when urinating. Also there may be pain in the testicles (men) or abdomen (women) | Painful infections of the reproductive organs which may lead to infertility in both men and women. |
| GENITAL HERPES | Sores around genitals or anus, often with small painful blisters. Some people have no symptoms but are still infected and contagious | May contribute to cervical cancer and be transmitted to infants during childbirth |
| CRAB LICE | Itching; visible moving lice in pubic hair and eggs (nits) attached to hair shafts. | None |

ALLSTATE GRANT

By Peter Soby
Staff Writer

Allstate Insurance has awarded Harper a $25,105 grant for a special computer workshop for disabled students. The grant, the largest ever received by Harper College, fills a dream of Tom Thompson, Coordinator of Disabled Student Services.

Thompson first proposed the plan to Harper's Educational Foundation explaining it would benefit more than 50 students.

Ray Devery, the foundation's executive director, recognized the proposal's importance and discussed it with Robert Leibold, President, Allstate Business Insurance, and a foundation member. Leibold and Devery then approached Allstate.

"We had a good idea. They (Allstate) would make a donation. Our proposal fit their needs and their standards of how they usually donate," commented Devery.

Devery wasn't surprised by Allstate's donation, "we knew we had a good sell, a dynamite proposal."

Anniversary awards were given to 74 employees who totalled 515 years of service to Harper College. These dedicated employees were honored at a ceremony held February 1.

President Thompson opened the ceremonies and presented Vice President of Academic Affairs David Williams with an award in appreciation of his 15 years service.

In turn, vice presidents awarded each employee in their divisions with a service award.

The Harbinger represents Harper at the College Bowl

By Susan Berne
Staff Writer

The Harbinger's College Bowl Team competes against 16 other junior colleges at Elgin Community College at noon tomorrow in the Regional Tournament of the College Bowl.

The College Bowl, considered "the varsity sport of the mind," is a game of general knowledge and quick recall. It tests the players on facts in every academic area ranging from history to sports.

The Harbinger Team of Susan Berne, Scott Nesdl, Lou Nunez, John Sisson, and Tari Vaughn qualified for the Regional tournament last Thursday. The team defeated the Dirty Rotten Scoundrels (Bob Illy, Carlos Peredo, Munish Bansol, and Erik Johnson) 115 to 90 in the first game and 150 to 30 in the second game.

At tomorrow's Regional competition, Harper will compete against 16 other junior colleges including the College of DuPage, Elgin Community College, the College of Lake County, and Triton in a double elimination tournament. In this tournament, any team losing two games is immediately eliminated from tournament play.

The winner of this tournament will travel to the College of DuPage at the end of February to compete in the four-year College Regional tournament.

STD's

STD's are definitely a fact of life, and the number of reported cases of STD's are rapidly increasing. In 1987, statistics show more than 21,000 reported AIDS cases in the U.S. In an 11 month period the following year, the number increased to more than 27,500.

Reported cases of gonorrhea showed a slight decline, from 695,000 in 1987 to 625,000 in 1988. However, cases of chlamydia (estimated to be the most prevalent STD with 3-4 million people contracting it yearly) continue to increase, as do cases of syphilis.

See the chart "What are the common STD's?".

Besides the problems listed with each disease, STD's may be interrelated. "If you have gonorrhea, there is approximately a 50% chance you also have chlamydia. And if you have syphilis, the chances of also having gonorrhea are about 50% as well," Nurse Sanseler said.

The best strategy for controlling the spread of STD's is avoidance of exposure. The most reliable method is abstinence: avoiding sexual intercourse. Also, intercourse with one mutually uninfected partner is 100% effective.

Proper use of condoms with each act of sexual intercourse can greatly reduce the risk of STD's. "Stick to one partner, keep healthy, and use protection," added Sanseler.

If you think you might have an STD, the best thing to do is to get tested. The Health Services office in room A362 offers free, confidential testing for most STD's.

Also, on Tuesday, February 14, a nurse from Health Services will be stationed in the Cafeteria to hand out balloons, posters, and pamphlets with information about STD's and the use of condoms.

"Most STD's are easy to treat, so if you think there is even the slightest chance you have one, get tested. If you are infected, you can get treatment as soon as possible," cautioned Sanseler.

Remember—no one is immune to STD's. "Everyone who is sexually active can get or transmit an STD," Sanseler concluded. "Don't be afraid."

Education is your best defense.

What are the common STD's?

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| GENITAL WARTS | Usually painless growths around the genitals or anus occur about 1-3 months after contact. In rare cases, growths may itch, burn or bleed or may not appear for years. | May obstruct the urethra or complicate vaginal delivery in childbirth; may be connected to some forms of cancer. |
| TRICHOMONIASIS | Among women, symptoms may include a vaginal discharge, discomfort during sexual intercourse, abdominal pain, pain when urinating and itching in the genital area. Most men have no symptoms, but some men may experience a penile discharge, painful urination or a "tingly" feeling in the penis. | If untreated, may lead to bladder and urethra infections in men and women. |
| GONORRHEA | Men may have a creamy pus like penile discharge and pain when urinating. However, they may have no symptoms and still be infected. Women may have vaginal discharge and pain when urinating, but often have no symptoms. | If untreated, can cause arthritis, dermatitis, heart problems and reproductive problems in both men and women. Can be transmitted to infants at birth. |
| SYPHILIS | Painless ulcer (chancre) at point of contact, usually penile shaft, around vaginal opening, or anus. Secondary stage may include a rash, swollen lymph nodes. | If untreated, may affect brain, heart, pregnancies, or even be fatal. |
| AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) | Unusual susceptibility to common infections and unusual cancers. Most people infected with the virus may show no symptoms for many years but are still contagious. | Full blown AIDS almost always is fatal. Outlook for carriers of the virus or those with AIDS-Related Complex (ARC) is uncertain. |

ALLSTATE

Tom Thompson, on the other hand, was astounded by the proposal.

"I'm surprised we got the donation so soon, it only took a few months. We are very grateful to Allstate for this generosity."

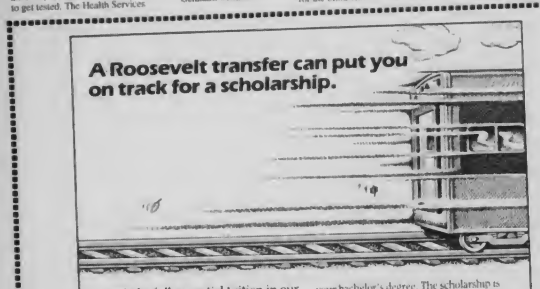

Thompson is now looking at different systems made for the adapting computers. The primary adaptive equipment will be suited for the blind student. The cost for the equipment will range between $300-$4,700.

"We'd like to get a couple IBM's adapted as well as a couple of Apples," stated Thompson.

Thompson will consult the electrical engineers for advice on which labs to put the equipment, as well as, what kind of equipment the engineers will be able to maintain.

Thompson will also contact the student coordinators for the blind and the blind students on the kind of adaptive equipment that will be beneficial.

"I hope to have everything ordered by March, and have the equipment operational by the end of this semester or the summer semester," added Thompson.

Illness loses while life triumphs

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

When people look back on the 1988-89 Harper Lady Hawks' season, they'll talk about many things.

They'll talk about Head Coach Tom Teschner and how he guided the Lady Hawks, in spite of academic ineligibility and injuries, from an inexperienced team to a sleeper team in the up and coming Region IV tournament.

'If I know Kim, she'll beat it; she'll kick its a--'

They'll remember how Sophomore Pascale O'Donoghue carried the team in many ways until the rest of team developed. And, how Freshman sensation Amy Kozial came through with her outside shooting touch and rewrote Harper's season and conference 3-point records, and went on to become one of the conference's leading scorers.

But the one thing they may forget to talk about is the fact that this season has been the culmination of a most inspiring story. Unknown outside of athletic circles, is the story of Freshman Kim Noonan and how she has fought against Leukemia for the last two years. And how she is less than two months away from winning the war.

The battle began in mid-January 1987; Noonan, a junior at Conant High School in Hoffman Estates, along with her older sister Kathy were playing Varsity Basketball on a team ranked among the state's top ten. Noonan started to feel tired, run down and fatigued.

After a doctor's exam and some tests, Noonan's worst fears became reality. The official diagnosis was Leukemia, a form of cancer in which the body makes too many abnormal white blood cells, which cause infections, anemia, and excessive bleeding.

Kim remembers the day when she and her parents were told by her doctor that she had Leukemia, Tuesday January 13, 1987, just like it was yesterday.

Noonan's worst fears became reality.

"After the doctor told me, I cried. Then after he told my parents, we all cried and hugged each other. It was so emotional. I kept asking myself 'Why Me?'"

According to the Leukemia Society of America's figures, 65,000 Americans will be diagnosed this year with Leukemia and related blood diseases. Another 38,000 will die from these diseases, bringing the total number of persons who suffer from Leukemia to 103,000.

Annually, 90% will die within a year without treatment. With the advance of modern medicine, life expectancy increases from one year to 20 years. A cure is possible if the patient has a two-year remission. Fortunately, such is the case with Noonan.

For Noonan the best method to fight the disease was through a two-pronged attack.

Chemotherapy, one of powerful drugs in various combinations to kill abnormal cells and/ or slow their growth, gives normal cells a chance to reproduce.

Supportive therapy from her parents (George and Mary Ann), the rest of her family and friends was easy to find. "They gave me the most support. They were always there for me," she said.

Noonan also took a third route--athletics. She began a vigorous schedule. Noonan returned to the basketball court for Conant her senior season, playing a reserve role on the Cougars' Mid Surburban League Championship squad. She also ran track, played soccer, went skiing, and often worked out at the Blackhawk Fitness Center in Hoffman Estates.

After she arrived on the Harper campus last August, Noonan continued that schedule. She decided to take a crack at Volleyball. And once that season ended, she laced up her basketball shoes and stepped out on the Building M court for the Lady Hawks.

'I kept asking myself, why me?'

"I believe it's important to keep in shape," Noonan says. She started out in a reserve role on the bench, but soon found herself in the starting lineup by semester break due to injury and academic ineligibility.

In 16 games for the Lady Hawks, Noonan has averaged two points, two rebounds, and two assists per game. The stats don't say much, but its the little things that make her very valuable to the team.

"The big thing is she takes the pressure off Amy (Kozial). (But then) we've got to hide her (Noonan), when she gets a little tired, until she catches her breath," Head Coach Tom Teschner said.

"She's really a good player. She does a great job for us. She follows directions and has good fundamentals. It really takes a lot of courage for her to go out play, but she keeps getting stronger and stronger. It would really be nice if she was healthy," added Teschner.

Her hard work hasn't gone unnoticed. At Conant, she was named one of the ten outstanding athletes of the1987-88 season. "The coaches gave me a lot of credit because it was unbelievable how much I could do," Noonan said. To top it off, she was named Homecoming Queen. "I don't know if you consider that important at all," Noonan said modestly.

Another reason for Noonan's success has been the support of her friends and teammates. Conant Junior Lisa Bluege, a two-year teammate of Noonan's, has always had nothing but the utmost respect for her.

Kim Noonan "is a credit to woman's athletics," said Assistant Coach Missy Mason. (Photo By John Sisson)

"I love her," declared Bluege. "She's a very courageous and dedicated person." Bluege recalls the team's support of Noonan, "We were always with her. We always stood beside her." Another friend, Freshman Todd Holmberg, is confident that she can will out of this a winner. "If I know Kim, she'll beat it; she'll kick its a--," he said.

Her Lady Hawk teammates have also shown their support. Assistant Coach Missy Mason said, "Kim is a credit to women's athletics." While Sophomore Pascal O'Donoghue thinks that "Kim's basketball playing is great. It's the best thing for her."

After a very brief first remission in February of '87, Noonan went into her second and current remission in March. This coming March 17 marks the second full year of her remission.

She explains the significance of this date. "If the cancer has been in remission for two years, you're supposed to be cured," she said. "Then you're supposed to go in for a bone marrow check every year. I'm looking forward to that date."

So are we, Kim, so are we.

Test your Blood Quotient

It's easy to win one of 17 gifts by participating in the Blood Trivia Contest. The contest sponsored by Health Service and the Harbinger, consists of 25 questions. The top ten entrants may choose from the following prizes: one free breakfast (2)* (Food Service), one free hour of pool playing (4) (Student Activities), and a pair of tickets to Mordine and Company dance troupe's Saturday, Feb. 18 performance at 8 pm (4) (Student Activities).

Other winners have a chance of: a Trojan t-shirt (2) (Health Services), a Life Source sweatshirt (Life Source), and one classified ad donated by the Harbinger.

Rules: Harbinger staff members and Health Service employees may not participate in this contest. In case of tie, a drawing will be held to determine the winners. Answers must be turned in at the blood drive booth, A242b on Wed. Feb. 15 between 8:30 a.m. and 3 p.m. or the Health Service Office, A362, no later than 9 pm. An additional two points will be awarded for entrants who participate in the blood drive. And be sure to include name and a phone number on your entry.

* Numbers in parenthesis designate quantities of prizes.

1. At what age can you donate blood?
2. How many blood types are there? Name them.
3. Which Harper class sponsored the Nov. 1988 blood drive?
4. What disease requires the highest percentage of blood?
5. How long does it take to donate blood from testing to cookies?
6. What is the most common blood type?
7. What are the three main blood types?
8. How many hospitals benefit from the units donated at Harper?
9. What is the name of the dog that came to Harper for the blood drive last spring?
10. Name at least two area hospitals that receive blood donated at Harper?
11. What is the name of the blood center which administers our blood drive?
12. Can you donate blood if you have a cold?
13. What TV personality donated blood earlier this week?
14. What is autologous blood donation?
15. How often can you donate blood?
16. How many lives can be saved with one donation?
17. Is there really something called artificial blood?
18. How many pints of blood are in the human body?
19. How much blood is drawn at the time of donation?
20. Which blood cells are responsible for clotting blood?
21. What is your blood type?
22. Is it true that one of 10 patients undergoing surgery will need blood?
23. Which blood cells carry oxygen to the body tissues?
24. Name the location (be specific) of one blood drive poster you have seen on campus (other than those seen in Building A)?
25. Can you get AIDS from donating blood?

Give Life

What would you do if a friend or family member needed an operation but could not get it because of a lack of blood in Chicagoland? Once again, Harper's students, faculty, and staff will have the chance to donate blood.

"Life Source will be in Building A, room 242, from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. on February 15, collecting blood donations," said College Nurse Becky Santeler.

"We are expecting anywhere from 80 to 100 students during the day," added Santeler. So don't let her down, it could mean a loved one's life.

Late applicants closed out by earlier deadlines

As we approach our third year at Harper, we begin to seek information about transfer schools. We have found that, by now, we have limited choices. Many of the four-year institutions are filling much faster than they have in past years. Application deadlines are at hand and some schools have closed enrollment entirely.

Now, it is recommended that community college students earn their associate degree before attempting to transfer, and then transfer into a specific program. Don't put off applying; the trend is supposed to continue, perhaps, even worsen. Dr. Joann Powell has issued an incentive report for chronic procrastinators (like ourselves) listing Illinois schools and their deadlines. This list, compiled last Monday, can change at any time; colleges may close enrollment earlier than their deadline.

NIU applications should be received by August 1 and earlier for the following majors: Business, closed as of Dec. 1; Engineering, Nursing, Physical Therapy, Feb. 15; Journalism, Feb. 14; Communication, Feb. 17, Computer Science, Feb. 21; and Human & Family Resources, March 15.

Eastern Illinois is closed for the fall semester but is accepting applications for the summer. On the other side of the state, Western will accept applications until two weeks before the fall semester. Illinois State transferees are encouraged to apply one year in advance. They are still open for the fall semester; Business majors should apply before Feb. 17.

U of I in Chicago's deadline is June 1, but majors in Architecture, Medical Dietetics, and Nutrition are closed. Nursing and Social Work majors must apply by March 1. U of I in Champaign-Urbana accept applications until March 15 for students with 60 hours of transferable credit.

Northeastern Illinois' deadline is August 15, and SIU's is September 8.

REMBER, all deadlines are subject to CHANGE if enrollment demands are up.

Good luck!

The rise and fall and rise of The Fixx

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

May I have your attention please? This meeting will come to order. Ahem. I would like to begin by citing a classic example of the rise and fall of a rock band.

Some of you may recall, back when MTV was on the cutting edge of music (and a little more daring), there was a band called The Fixx, led by the imposing figure of Cy Curnin. The band rose to fame with such songs as Saved By Zero, One Thing Leads to Another, and Sunshine in the Shade.

The band was achieving critical and commercial acclaim with their slightly cosmic brand of rock and roll. They reached a high point with the album Phantoms, and found themselves riding the crest of a wave of popularity. Phantoms was one of the best albums of 1984.

They weren't gone for a particularly long time...two years, to be exact. But for some reason, the public lost sight of The Fixx, despite a very good 1986 release, Walkabout.

An even colder response greeted the release of the band's 1987 live album entitled React. It came and went like a bad dinner. At least in part, it deserved to lodge itself in the cutout bins (this reviewer sold his copy). Maybe The Fixx needed a fix of their own.

Now I bring us back to the present to demonstrate the ability of a band to continue on in the face of adversity. There is a new album by The Fixx called Calm Animals, and although it's not quite as cosmic (sorry! I can't think of a better word) as their previous material, it's still The Fixx, and it still makes decent listening. I'd lay money, however, that it won't sell.

The Fixx's record label (MCA) apparently had no more faith in the band either, because this new album is their first on RCA Records.

Curnin continues to write written by drummer Adam Woods, who has obviously been inspired by Curnin.

The first single off the album is Driven Out. It makes catchy and pleasant listening which is proof positive that The Fixx still deserves a little recognition. The better tracks on the album are I'm Life, Shred of Evidence (read: Shredded Evidence), and Cause to Be Alarmed.

Cause to Be Alarmed is the final track on the album. As old Fixx fans know, this is usually where the band puts everything more than another Fixx song which just happens to work best as the closing track.

It is encouraging to see that the band's lineup has remained steady through the difficult years. It would seem to indicate that as long as someone is buying their music, they will continue to make more.

This meeting is adjourned.

Rating of of 5: 3.

Nitzer Ebb: Philosophy in music

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

Belief, the second album from England's Nitzer Ebb, continues the band's electronic dance-music traditions. Their first album That Total Age was released in 1987 and quickly found its way onto dance club turntables. The new record is better than the first, being a little more varied.

Nitzer Ebb is actually two men, Paul and Doug. Their dance floor has been compared to a GRUMP. (This is a band name--believe it or not.) They explain the album title as part of their philosophy. ...if you believe you can do something, then you can do it. That's their Belief.

Although the music hides some deep philosophical meaning, it's only there if you feel like digging for it. Terms such as totalitarian and fascist have been used in the past to embellish views on Nitzer Ebb.

Not all the songs are easy to dance to. Some of them are slower, but they all have the heavy drumset that moves people. The first single is probably the best song.

In Control I'm Here, the song continually gets a new layer of music compiled on top of the previous layers. It starts with a drumbeat and a keyboard riff and finishes with ten times that amount of sound.

Track 5 is called T W A and is based around the Lebanon hijack of a TWA jet. Blood Money deals with the habit that evangelists have of separating people from pocketbooks.

All the songs have some kind of root in current events and life situations, but it's difficult to dig them out due to the absence of lyrics in the liner notes. There's better dance music, and better music-with-meaning.

Although Belief by Nitzer Ebb is a decent record, it's certainly not everyone's cup of tea. It takes too long to like, and you're not even sure why you like it. Then there is the underlying aggression that can easily grate on the nerves.

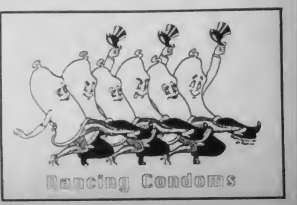

Finally comes the realization that there's really nothing that sticks in your mind, with the exception of Control I'm Here. Such a forgettable collection of music will be easily overlooked by most people.

Rating Out of 5: 2 1/2 (maybe 3).

'Her Alibi' still entertains

By Scott Neidt
Entertainment Editor

Perjury 1. the willful telling of a lie while under lawful oath or affirmation to tell the truth in a matter material to the point of inquiry 2. the breaking of any oath or formal promise. This verbatim definition is from the second college edition of the Webster's New World Dictionary.

This sounds to me like a pretty heavy charge, but it is exactly what, our hero, Tom Selleck, does in the movie, Her Alibi, which is the story of a mystery novelist by the name of Phil, who is currently in a creative slump. In hopes that he may come up with a new idea, he takes a field trip to the local courthouse to view some of the cases now on trial.

Enter Nina (Paulina Poraskova), a beautiful young Romanian girl who is the prime suspect in a murder trial. Phil finds her case very intriguing and decides to commit perjury by giving her an alibi.

The alibi turns out to be a story about Phil and Nina as lovers, so Nina is forced to move in with Phil. (Poor Tom, it must be rough.) Phil starts to get real nervous about her innocence, due to some uncanny circumstances such as Nina's ability to throw knives at a beetle from about twelve feet away, and so Phil takes precautious measures by rearranging furniture in strategic positions (in front of his bedroom door).

In the end it all works out for the better and Phil and Nina fall madly in bed with each other.

Selleck has this amazing ability to find roles in motion pictures that are very similar to that of Thomas Magnum. I don't blame him; he does them very well. Selleck has some sense of comic timing and he can override the performance with some seriousness.

Poraskova makes her debut in this film, but she is far from camera shy. She has been a model for many magazines including Sports Illustrated. Her performance was surprisingly not bad considering the other less-than-successful models who have attempted an acting career, ie: Christie Brinkley.

The overall production of Her Alibi is quality entertainment. It is no Academy award winner, but it does make for a fun evening out. The story is cute; the acting is good; and the plot moves. What more could one ask for?

Robert Bly to speak at Harper

When Robert Bly speaks at Harper College on Thursday, February 16, he will probably begin his talk by reaching back into legend, perhaps telling an old Germanic, Nordic, African or aboriginal myth.

Bly, winner of the National Book Award in 1968 for his poetry collection Light Around the Body, helped found American Writers Against the Vietnam War.

Twenty years later, he has turned his attention to the so-called war between the sexes. The women's movement, and subsequent men's movement, have prompted Bly to conduct workshops for men "to get a sense of what is going on here."

Last year at a workshop at Loyola University, Chicago, Bly spoke of men and their relationships.

"We're dealing with a big historical thing here. Men and women love differently. In the past, men were hunters. They lived outside the village taking care of the men and the children. The men brought the food back to the village. This was their way of showing love to their families."

But, says the Fulbright Scholar and Guggenheim fellow, all has changed. "Ever since the industrial revolution, the game men bring home is called money. It's hard for women to realize that the money men bring home is a form of love for their family."

Bly also thinks men need to be more articulate with others. "Men need to learn how to ask for things they want. For instance, if I make great pancakes, and I don't hear any compliments, I tell my sons, in a loving and unblaming tone, I need more compliments from you."

"You may not agree with him," says Martin Ryan, dean of liberal arts at harper, "but what he says is not easily dismissed. You react to him, and that's what is important."

Bly's lecture, entitled "The Mythology of Manly Identity", will be presented Thursday, February 16, at 7:30 p.m. in room 3143. The admission is $2 for Harper students and $3 for the general public. For tickets or more information, call the Harper Box Office at 397-3000 ext. 2547.

New support groups formed

By Alisa Chmlund
Features Editor

Share problems with people who have similar concerns. Be part of a support group. Help others while they help you. You're not alone. Don't be afraid to join one of Harper's five new support groups forming on campus.

Group one is "personal growth for young adults" (18-23 years of age). Some of the topics presented include how to become your own person, form interpersonal relationships, go away to school, and cope with the pressures of college.

Group two is "personal growth for adults". A few of the subjects discussed are ways to improve interpersonal skills, deal with job-related stress, and develop your own identity.

Group three and four focus on "counseling for healthy eating". Participants learn about some of the psychological reasons for their reflective eating patterns, and are given insight on how to change their diets and/or lifestyles to achieve better health.

Group five provides emotional support for "recovering substance abusers". The members talk about issues such as how to rebuild their lives, deal with relapse, stay drug and alcohol free, make new friends, get along with others, and increase their self-esteem.

Each group, guided by two co-leaders, meets for 1 or 1-1/2 hours per week throughout the year. Group members may attend the sessions for as long as they like.

The groups are confidential and small, generally 8 to 12 members, to allow for maximum personal growth.

The groups are not capable of serving people who are drug or alcohol dependent, or suffer from acute psychological disorders.

Group sessions are free to Harper students, and $10 per meeting for community members.

Contact Colette Moore, support group coordinator, at 397-3000 ext. 2522 (day) or ext 2577 (nig'ht), to receive additional information on any of the groups, or to set up an interview.

Get Fit

Harper sponsors Fit-Weigh Program

At last, a program not intended for the young robust athlete! Harper's new Fit-Weigh program is not a diet, but a lifestyle program that focuses on nutrition, exercise, behavior, and stress related topics.

The target population of the class consists of individuals in need of a perscribed and individualized program because of a weight concern, high blood pressure, excessive blood fats or just a long period of inactivity.

The program utilizes a variety of exercise equipment such as treadmills, stationary bicycles, rowing machines and stairclimbers. All training is supervised by certified specialists.

Fit-Weigh meets three times per weeks and has flexible hours.

The next available classes begin on February 13 and run until June 1 at 7 - 8 p.m. or from February 16 until March 27 from 10 - 11 a.m.

To register, call the Continuing Education Office at 397-3000. Any questions about this program should be directed to Nicki Salmons at 397-3000 ext. 2892.

Awards reflect service

By Jamie Beeson

Vicki Atkinson, assessment specialist, and Martha Simonsen, associate professor of English, received Harper College's first Fred C. Rutz awards at the 1989 Spring Semester Special Programs and Services Division meeting on January 13.

The awards, sponsored by the Fred C. Rutz Memorial Fund of the Harper Foundation, recognize outstanding contributions in promoting the academic success of disadvantaged students. The award is one way of saying "thank you" to outstanding individuals who do quality work in their fields.

Recipients were chosen based on the following criteria.

•The candidate must be employed outside of the Special Programs and Services Division.

•The candidate must contribute to the academic success of disadvantaged Harper students.

•The candidate may be a member of the community at large.

Atkinson was recognized for referring, literally, hundreds of foreign students from the College Assessment Program to the English as a Second Language Department (ESL) for additional testing, placement, and help selecting classes. Upon receiving her award Atkinson said, "It was very unexpected. It's nice that my peers respect my work."

Simonsen was honored for her work with disabled students in English and humanities. She made changes in her curricula to meet the needs of students who were hearing impaired, blind or physically disabled, and provided personalized instruction as needed. After receiving her award Simonsen said, "I am quite thrilled. It is very fine that it (the special programs and services committee) developed this way of recognizing people."

The Fred C. Rutz awards are given every semester to qualified individuals. Donations for next semester's awards can be sent to the Harper Foundation.

Lady Hawks: Three in a row!

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

The Lady Hawks made it three in row and four out of the last five by beating COD 59-57 Tuesday night. The win raised their overall record to 11-13, and 6-5 in the N4C. In the Men's game, COD caught the Hawks early and never let go as the Chaparrals out ran Harper 80-63, bringing the Hawks record down to 5-18, and 2-9 in the N4C.

In the Women's game, the Lady Hawks were looking for a repeat of the 83-42 decision they handed COD at home on January 14th. What they found was a game that was too close for comfort. After the Lady Hawks led 23-10 with 8 minutes to go in the first half, DuPage went on 19-8 run to close the lead to 31-29 at half. The stage was set for a very tight second half as Du Page was able to close in at 59-57 with six seconds left before the Lady Hawks were able to run the clock out. Pascale O'Donoghue led a balanced scoring attack with 19 points. Amy Kosiol had 13, and Kellie Dennis added 12.

The Men's game was a different story as DuPage jumped out to an early lead and never let go as they led by 23, 43-20 at halftime. DuPage (#2 in the nation in team defense) forced the Hawks to shoot a horrendous 19% from the field in the first half. Travis Perry led the Harper effort with 28 points and Joe Passi added 16 rebounds.

Passi, who broke both Harper's conference season and single game records with a 25 rebound performance against Rock Valley last Saturday, brought his season total to 291 in pursuit of the single season record of 356 with three regular season games to go.

"We just didn't come to play tonight," Head Coach Bill Probst commented.

Lady Hawks on a roll

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

Beware of the hovering Lady Hawks come tournament time for they may capture big prey. Behind Amy Kozsol's 26 points and Pascale O'Donoghue's 24 points the Lady Hawks won their second game in a row and third in their last four. They outlasted Rock Valley 80-58 last Saturday at Harper. The Lady Hawks raised their record to 10-13 overall, 5-5 in the NIC.

In their win, the Lady Hawks never trailed as they gradually built their lead up to17 points, 42-25 at halftime. The lead got as high as 25 at 60-35. Kellie Dennis and Patty Canchola were able to give Harper a boost by totally containing the inside as each scored 12 points.

For Head Coach Tom Teschner, the type of game that the Lady Hawks played against the Trojans was a mere resemblance to their 77-50 win at Rockford on January 10th.

"We did this to them before. It was the same kind of game. We shot very well and we actually pressed for the first time."

The Lady Hawk's next game may determine their seeding for the upcoming Region IV tournament.

"I have a feeling we'll be seeded in the top 10. The top five seeds in the tournament will probably be Kankakee, Sauk Valley, Moraine Valley, Carl Sandburg of Galesburg and McHenry. And we beat McHenry, so I think we're gonna be up there," Teschner said.

Men's b-ball go down again

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

As the snow fell on the Harper College Campus Saturday afternoon, the Rock Valley men's basketball team trudged through the snow to Palatine without two of their players and their assistant coach.

Unfortunately for the Hawks, Chris Lake was one of the players who did make it. Lake, a 6ft. 6in. freshman, hit 15 of 25 from the field and 14 of 16 from the free throw line for a total of 44 points.

He helped give Rock Valley a 75-73 win over the Hawks. The loss dropped the Hawks into a last place tie in the division for a 5-17 record overall.

The loss also may have forced the Hawks into a fight with Oakton and Rock Valley to avoid being the 16th seed in the 17-team Region IV Tournament. The 16th seed will play the 17th seed in a preliminary round game February 20th. The winner will then earn the right to take a two-hour bus ride to Oglesby to face the number one seed Illinois Valley. Illinois Valley is ranked second in the nation.

"This was the most important game of the season because we came in knowing that if we won we wouldn't be seeded 16th or 17th. Now we are going to have to win one of the next four games, which will be very tough," said freshman Dean Petrulakis.

"It was our fault. We were definately flat. We beat them once and we thought we'd kick their a--."

The first half saw the referees get into the flow of action as they called 22 fouls between both teams. Donald Pierce sunk both ends of a one on one to give the Hawks a 33-30 lead at the end of the first half.

The second half saw more controversial calls by the refs. On two occations the Hawks were burned. The first came on freshman Chad Hull as Rock Valley's Trent Emenecker charged into him on a lay-up that gave the Trojans a 68-63 lead with five minutes left in the game.

"He had position, it should've been a charge," Paul said.

The second controversial call ended the game when Emenecker hit Travis Perry as Perry caught Emenecker block of a three-point shot attempt by Jason Brooks. In the process the referee put two fingers up, which is the signal for a two-shot foul. This would have secured the win for Harper. Instead, there was no foul called as the ref said, "The two fingers were for the basket if it had gone in."

"That was a foul. We may have not come to play, but still the officiating was terrible," said Petrulakis.

Wrestling to Regionals

By Jamie Beeson
Staff Writer

Tension is in the air as the wrestlers are on the road to the regionals. Harper will host the regionals on Saturday, February 11.

Lincoln and DuPage, two top contenders, will be on hand. Coach Lovelace says, "we have the toughest region in the country."

Although regionals are the main concern, the team continues to finish strongly at their tournaments. These injuries are healing and the adrenaline is flowing. "We're getting hyped up for regionals," said wrestler Mark Cecchi.

Harper came through with two more impressive showings. At the DuPage Quads, Jason Finucane (142 lbs.), Keith Demann (167 lbs.), and Mark Cecchi (177 lbs.) all won their respective weight classes. Eric Bakey, 158 lbs., tied for first. The team ended up in a 2-2 split.

At the North Central Invite, the grapplers placed fourth, despite having to forfeit numerous matches. Bakey placed second. Rob Malecke (134) also placed second even after suffering a separated shoulder at the Harper Invitational. Cecchi placed fourth. As a team, they finished fourth out of fourteen schools.

The team should be carrying plenty of momentum into the regional tournament. They were recently named champions of the Harper Invite. Triton was forced to forfeit due to ineligible wrestlers, but the most important factor is that all the injuries are healing. "We're all looking pretty good now," said Finucane.

According to Coach Lovelace, "Right now our goal is for each man to qualify for the nationals." Harper is currently ranked 14th nationally.

Pemstein joins Harper

By Chris Boghossian
Staff Writer

Bill Pemstein is the new Sports Information Director in Harper's Physical Education Department.

As Sports Information Director, Pemstein's foremost priority is to inform the press and the students on campus about the various sports programs at Harper. Pemstein frequently talks to local newspapers and distributes a weekly newsletter with summaries of recent sporting events and upcoming games.

While working, Pemstein keeps one goal in mind. "I want to develop a working relationship with the press and make sure Harper receives recognition in the area," said Pemstein. Before coming to Harper, Pemstein attended the University of Maryland, where he earned his B.A. degree in Radio, TV, and Film. He then worked for the Government Broadcasting Company, which led him to the highlight of his career.

"In 1983, the Baltimore Orioles hired me as a sales representative," noted Pemstein. Later that year, the Orioles won baseball's most coveted prize, the World Series.

After four years with the Orioles' organization, Pemstein and his wife decided it was time for a change. They moved to nearby Arlington Heights, where he landed a part-time job with a local newspaper covering high school sports.

Besides his interest in sports, Pemstein enjoys traveling and going out to restaurants and movies with his wife. He also loves music and owns more than 500 albums.

The weekend wasn't too kind to our hockey and basketball teams as the Hawks lost to the St. Louis Blues and the Bulls got manhandled by the Detroit Pistons.

The All-Star breaks are upon us and I have some reflections on the first half of the hockey and basketball seasons.

While the Hawks have a terrible record, their last month of play has been pretty good. Reason being, when I watched a Hawks game at the start of the season there was a lack of hustle, no defense and a big lack of communication. I mean, they looked like a high school team. Now they are just the opposite. They hustle after the puck, they forecheck, and finally, I never thought I would be saying this, their defense has been outstanding. Holding three teams to under 20 shots on goal in a row is, dare I say it, championship defense. The Hawks have to keep it up in the second half of the season. I grade them a C, which certainly is getting higher.

The Bulls are playing well. They're trying their hardest. The hustle is there and so is "the legend" Michael Jordan, but they still lack that big power man. Last year they had Oakley but no Cartwright. This year, the opposite. They need both. Grant and Pippen are coming on but the Bulls still just don't have it. They are still about the 8th or 9th best team in the league. The draft picks for the Bulls for the last three years have been bad. This year they should get a decent player. I hope so because Sellers and Perdue were busts. The Bulls can't even trade Sellers, nobody wants him. This was their number one pick?? I grade the Bulls a B. They are in a tough division but still are not on the same level as Cleveland, Detroit or maybe even Milwaukee.

Question:

Do the White Sox have a team this year? If so, who's on the team besides Guillen, Fisk and Walker? In fact if anyone can tell me who the starting five pitchers for the Sox are you are a true Sox fan.

Flasher exposed on campus

Campus map

By Marc J. Balke
Staff Writer

Public Safety warns that a flasher exposed himself to a woman on campus Monday evening about 6:10 p.m. The offense reportedly happened in parking lot six on the north side of campus.

The suspect approached a white female who was going to her car. He had his zipper down and genitals exposed. There was no conversation, and the woman was not harmed.

The woman provided campus and Palatine Police with a description of the offender and helped Palatine Police prepare a composite sketch.

She described him as a white male, 25-30 years old; 5'11"-6'1" in height; thin build; having a mustache and well-groomed beard.

The offender was last seen wearing a red waist length ski jacket and dark colored trousers. He was carrying an attache case.

Public Safety asks that anyone with information about the incident, or can identify the offender contact them.

It is not necessary for the informant to give his/her name.

Please contact Lt. Graham Johnson or Officer Richard Durrin in Public Safety at extension 2330.

New alarm

By Douglas Ray
Editor-in-Chief

Harper is in the process of installing a Honeywell Intrusion Alarm System as part of the Energy Management System (EMS) approved by the Board of Trustees last summer.

Kevin King, public safety supervisor, said the old system "was sporadic and it did not cover all of the buildings." It monitored exterior doors on Buildings D and F when in operation.

"(The alarm system) monitored exterior doors during closed campus hours," explained King. "Most of the theft on campus occurs during operating hours," he said.

The system was updated to protect the growing number of computers on campus, not because of increased theft.

The new system, when installed, alarms public safety of any movement of exterior doors to all buildings and selected interior doors.

The door does not have to be opened to set off the alarm according to Physical Plant Director Don DeBiase. If anyone attempts to open the door, a motion sensor will set off the alarm.

The EMS includes thermostat monitoring and adjusting from a central location, control of the parking lot lights, and the alarm system.

The board allotted $1 million for the project, to be complete in a couple of months when the Physical Plant Division finishes installation of the new alarm system.

Harbinger implements upgrades

By Alisa Chinlund

Revenue at the Harbinger has increased by more than 300% since Marc Balke took over as business manager in September 1988. Balke was advised to raise $13,000 in advertising revenue for the year. In five months, Balke exceeded the goal by $2,000.

Balke, a freshman advertising major, entered the position with no previous newspaper experience. Upon accepting the job, he was given two hours of training regarding the billing and advertising procedures.

In past years, the business manager was responsible for budgeting, and the ad manager sold the ads. Balke combined both jobs into one under the title business manager.

His job duties are to maintain the billing system, secure sponsors from businesses and major advertising companies, purchase supplies for the Harbinger, develop and implement the budget, create ad packets for mass mailings, and produce a weekly classified page.

Balke was not pleased with the billing system or the classified page format. He opted to change the billing system from manual to computerized, and modified the classified page design to enhance its appearance.

Harbinger Business Manager Marc Balke plays with his new toy.

In past years, only one page of classified ads ran per issue. Today, Balke has published four newspapers with two pages of classifieds. Classified revenue has increased from $60 to $130 per issue. He has also raised the profits from classified and display ads combined from $300 to $900 per issue.

With Balke's help, the Harbinger was able to produce its first 20 page issue with a valentine pull-out. Plans are being made to create a special pull-out of employer advertisements, job offerings, and a map for the April 4th employment fair at Harper College.

The Harbinger recently purchased a Macintosh SE computer and upgrades totaling $5160 thanks to Balke's success in raising advertising revenue.

Balke attributed his success to "a dedicated staff and a great Managing Editor, Trudy Herbst."

Windows of approximately 10 vehicles parked in campus parking lots were smashed during the last week.

The first incident reportedly happened Friday, Feb. 10. Approximately five cars were damaged. Tuesday night an additional five cars were vandalized.

Apparently nothing was stolen from the damaged cars. We were unable to contact Public Safety officials for a comment. More information will be available during the week.

Harper celebrates college month

By Mona Isa
News Editor

Harper College celebrates Community College Month by sponsoring social and cultural events on campus.

The Board of Trustees passed a resolution on January 26, 1989 to designate February as Community College Month at Harper.

"The main purpose of Community College Month is to increase the awareness of the contributions that two year colleges offer to the individual and the community," stated Director of College Relations, Elaine Stoermer.

Many students and residents have benefited from the programs, courses and services that Harper provides at a reasonable cost available close to home.

"More than half of the individuals that are enrolled in higher education are in community colleges," added Stoermer.

Approximately 300,000 area residents have attended classes at Harper since 1967. "Awareness is emerging of the advantages and resources that community colleges offer for the future, vocational and adult student," added Stoermer.

In appreciation of the support that Harper attained, students and residents are encourage to participate in the upcoming community events.

COMMUNITY COLLEGES: WHERE AMERICA GOES TO COLLEGE.

- 55% of all first time freshmen choose Community Colleges.
- Over 5 million students attend Community Colleges across the country.
- Community Colleges eliminate the high cost of living away from home.
- Tuition for Community Colleges averages about half the cost of public four-year colleges and universities.

Courts toughen DUI laws

By Dave Rehman
Staff Writer

"What a party. I was so wasted I don't even know how I got home."

How many times have you heard someone say that? The Harbinger has heard it enough to ask whether more college students are drinking and driving. We consulted two sources.

Sgt. Ken Krzywicki, who heads the Elk Grove Village Traffic Division, had good news. He reports the number of DUI arrests throughout Illinois is going down. He attributes this to more people knowing "When to say When."

Krzywicki adds, "Illinois courts are becoming increasingly tough on DUI arrests, and if you get arrested you're facing at least a 6-month license suspension plus up to $2,000 in fines and legal fees.

"How many students can afford that?"

One other source was Harper students themselves. The Harbinger asked 150 students how they deal with drinking and driving. We asked these three questions:

1. If you know you are going to be drinking with friends, do you take any precautions to not drink and drive?
2. Do you think you can handle your liquor and drive?
3. Are Illinois D.U.I. laws fair?

More than 67% of those surveyed said that when they go to a party or bar, one will stay sober to be able to drive. Nearly 88% feel they can "handle" their liquor but are smart enough NOT to drive under such conditions.

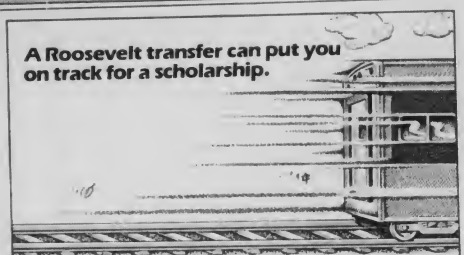

And more than 56% said they thought present laws were adequate.

Apparently the work of MADD and SADD is having its effect. Students are finally realizing the hazards of drinking and driving; they recognize that the life they save may be their own.

Correction

The Harbinger omitted Karla Hill of Planning and Research, who received a 5-year service award, from the article Employees recognized in last week's issue. Ms. Hill received her award from President Paul Thompson instead of her division vice president.

Phone for hearing impaired installed

By Tari Vaughn
Upcoming Editor

While talking on the telephone may be a routine task for most people, it is nearly impossible for the severely hearing impaired. However, through a new state program, Harper College is trying to help bring this convenience to deaf students on campus.

Recently, a new telecommunications device was installed outside of the Disabled Student Services Office in Building D. This "telephone" is called a Telecommunications Device for the Deaf (TDD). TDDs are being made available to a number of organizations and private homes through the Illinois Telecommunications Access Corporation (ITAC).

In 1985, the Illinois Legislature passed the Universal Telephone Service Protection Law. This law called for the Illinois Commerce Commission to establish a program to provide persons who are deaf, severely hearing impaired or deaf-blind with TDDs or Telebraille Devices at no charge.

Over $5.5 million has been raised to fund the program through a special 3 cents per month surcharge applied to all Illinois telephone customers' bills since January, 1986.

"This program is the first of its kind in Illinois. As such, it offers members of the state's severely hearing-impaired community a chance to communicate by telephone, a routine task so many of us take for granted," says Ike Eichelberger, ITAC manager of operations.

This special equipment can be plugged directly into a telephone line or connected through a modem to a telephone to a telephone set. TDDs have typewriter-style keyboards for typing messages and conversation readouts are generated on an LED display or printer.

A Telebraille Device for the deaf-blind operates the same way as a TDD but provides conversation readouts in braille.

These devices also include such features as the Voice Announcer, which notifies the called party of a TDD call, and ASCII, which allows users to "talk" with computers.

For now, a TDD or Telebraille user can communicate only with other TDD or Telebraille users. However, according to the ITAC, the next step will be to install a Dual Relay Party System in Illinois. Under this system, a person using a TDD can, through a special operator, make a call to another party who does not have a TDD.

Honors program offers new classes

By Chris Boghousian
Staff Writer

The Harper College Honors Program, coordinated by Dr. Elizabeth Hull, professor of English, will offer honors classes to eligible students starting next fall.

Hull began organizing the program late last semester and believes it will be beneficial to the entire Harper campus, upon completion.

Next semester, English 101, Speech 101, a social science course, and a math/physical science course will be offered in the Honors Program. Although there have been individual classes in the past offered for honors credit, no set program had been established, until now.

In organizing the program, Hull visited schools in the area looking for strengths and weaknesses in their honor programs.

Hull hopes the program will benefit the honor students, the faculty, and the other students on campus. "I hope the program will enrich the whole college experience for everybody," Hull said.

"The honor students benefit from the keen competition from other honor students," continued Hull. "Also, the general students benefit from having the honor students in their classes. Honor students gain leadership qualities in these classes."

Some faculty members do not feel honor students need a program for guidance because they believe the top students will do well on their own. Hull, however, disagrees. "I believe the brighter students may need some type of guidance for educational studies, just as remedial students do," explained Hull.

In order for a student to qualify for the Honors Program or to enroll in an honors section at least 1 of the following criteria must be met:

A) Be in the top ten percent of their high school graduating class.

B) Have a cumulative high school grade point average of 3.5 or higher on a 4.0 scale, or 4.5 or higher on a 5.0 scale.

Do you have hypertension? High blood pressure—the silent killer—is one of the few major diseases that doesn't let you know it's there.

It is important to have your blood pressure checked regularly. The Harper College Health Service will do blood pressure screenings at various sites across campus on Wednesday, February 22 from 11:00 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. and 5:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m.

The screening sites include the Health Service office (A362), the cafeteria, and the Building J lounge. Screenings will also be conducted in the gym in Building M from 6 p.m. to 7 p.m. Blood pressure will be measured and recorded on a wallet-sized card, which participants may keep to monitor future blood pressure readings.

Students learn math in lab

By Alisa Chimlund
Ventures Editor

Math lab was set up, in the early '70's, by Pauline Jenness, to provide remedial instruction in mathematics, basic arithmetic, elementary algebra and plane geometry, said Margret Scott, math lab supervisor and associate professor of math.

All Harper College students are required to take an assessment test to determine which math course to enroll in. The student may be placed in any level of basic arithmetic (Mth 050-053), elementary algebra (Mth 061), or an upper-level math course.

Students may enroll in (Mth 061-063), one level per semester, or its equivalent Mth 060, a three-credit course taught in a classroom setting. Any student may register for plane geometry (Mth 096) after taking one year of high school algebra, or completing Mth 060 or Mth 063 with a grade of C or better.

All students enrolled in basic arithmetic (Mth 050-053), elementary algebra (Mth 061-063), or plane geometry (Mth 096) are required to spend at least 60 minutes per week in the math lab. The sessions give the students an opportunity to receive individualized attention from a math lab assistant or instructor in a small group setting.

The students in math lab set their own pace to complete the requirements of the course. The text is a self-study book filled with objectives, examples and problems. The math lab assistants and instructors are available to answer questions and help students understand problems.

Computer programs, audio-visual aids and supplemental worksheets are also provided to give any math lab student additional drills to help them learn the material.

Students take an exam at the end of each unit. They progress to the next unit after achieving at least 90% on the exam. After taking all six exams, the student generally proceeds to the next course.

There is no limit to the number of hours a student may spend in the lab. Assistance is provided to students whenever the lab is open.

The math lab, located in D106, is open Monday through Thursday from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. and 5:30 p.m. to 8:00 p.m., and Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 12:00 p.m. For more information about the math lab call 397-3000 ext. 2395.

Newman Association hosts Lenten lectures

By Andy Schneider
Staff Writer

"We wait in hope" is a series of lectures sponsored by the Newman Association. The theme of the Lenten lectures is spiritual growth and the Paschal Mystery. The lecture series continues through Holy Week (March 20-26).

The Newman Association was formed in the 1930's and was initially intended for Catholic students. Today its primary purpose is religious education and social opportunities.

Since the fourth century, Christian churches celebrate the Lenten Season (Feb. 8-Mar. 26) as the most solemn season of the church year. Lent is a time to focus on one's sins, to change one's ways and to repent wrongdoings. Some people will fast or deprive themselves of a pleasure, such as a favorite food, cigarettes, or television. Disciple of the mind and the body helps an individual become aware of one's spiritual nature.

The Paschal Mystery is the three days prior to Easter, when Christ accepted his fate to be crucified (Maundy Thursday), when he was crucified (Good Friday) and when he rose from his grave (Easter).

Newman Campus Minister Dennis Darby said, "The idea of the talks is to make the students more aware of their own faith and to integrate their spiritual lives with education in College." He also added that this will give people a chance to come together and to learn more about Christianity.

Each Wednesday afternoon until Easter, there will be a lecture in F327 at 3:00 p.m. Each lecture will be approximately 40 minutes followed by some questions and answers from the audience. A short prayer will end each lecture.

"Is the paper in yet?!": The case of the missing Harbingers

It was 4 p.m. Thursday and the largest Harbinger edition ever printed wasn't delivered yet.

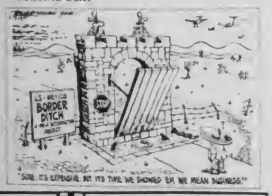

Staff members spent the wee hours of Tuesday night working on the 20 page paper, which included color for the second time in Harper history. A relief team was in early Wednesday to complete the project. Finally, the paper was complete only two hours late.

The hopes were high; the curiosity peaked. Students, staff, and administrators called asking when the edition would be out.

I called the publisher and was given a 3 then a 4 p.m. estimated time of arrival. At 4:30 the driver entered the Harbinger office and asked where he should put the papers. I told him to deliver them to the recieving dock underneath Building A. He got confused and took them to Building B (above ground) where Public Safety Assistant Supervisor Lt. Graham Johnson decided to lock them up without telling us. For one hour the staff made an extensive search around campus, but one paper was found....Until Jeff Freebus asked Public Safety to keep his eyes open for 5,000 lost papers. Not only did Lt. Johnson heighten the suspense (and test the nerves) of the Harbinger staff, but he also delayed the distribution of the paper until Monday (since the campus was closed Friday). A simple phone call informing us where the papees were delivered would have been appreciated.

Meanwhile, the Harbinger staff appologizes for the late distribution. If anyone has not picked up a copy of the Valentine edition they may pick one up at the Harbinger office, A367 (while supplies last).

The question of journalistic responsibility

The observatory project has been the biggest farce on campus this year (next to contract negotiations for the special and technical staff).

I first met Paul Sipiera, faculty coordinator of the observatory project, in late January of 1988. I was the News Editor then, and had received a hot lip that Sipiera was trying to acquire funds for a Planetarium (a much larger and more expensive building than an observatory). The project would cost $3 million, according to Sipiera, and would boast a laser projector for star shows, an auditorium, and class rooms for astronomy.

The hope for a Planetarium was dashed because he was over-anxious to tell the Harbinger. While his idea was good, he had done none of the base work (you know, like telling his superiors about his idea). For this the Harbinger and myself were to blame.

Sipiera has not treated the Harbinger fairly since then. He constantly implies we are inept and unprofessional. He even became a member of the Student Publications Committee, the only party with the authority to set policies for the Harbinger and to fire me. Perhaps he thinks it will give him more power over the Harbinger.

The observatory project has suffered many upsets, and accusations have been tossed back and forth. Sipiera has accused many people of opposing the observatory project. No one opposes the project, they just oppose Sipiera's methods.

Then, to top it off, Sipiera wrote a letter accusing the Harbinger of "journalistic irresponsibility" (see letter to editor).

Sipiera need not inform me that what was printed in the paper is true; the entire senate meeting is on tape. We try to report current events and up-to-date information. The update in question did just that: reported changes to the origiant decision, and that is all. (If Paul Sipiera feels threatened by the "College News Update", perhaps he should try to meet the deadlines prescribed for him.) We are well aware of our journalistic responsibility, and, I am told, we are doing are darn good job!

As far as whose side I stand on, I support the observatory, but can no longer stand with Sipiera. His unprofessional management of this project has gone unopposed far too long.

The Curious Case of the Clandestine Copies (of the Harbinger)

Letter to the Editor

Journalistically irresponsible

Editor

I'm sorry to have to write this, but the enclosed brief from the Harbinger (an article that appeared in the January 19 edition) is very harmful to the present situation with the observatory project.

Granted, what was printed is true, but as a brief it does not represent all the discussion that went into that statement. Given the sensitivity of the observatory project, this type of reporting represents journalistic irresponsibility.

The observatory project would make a great article, but it should be reported fairly and not slanted toward any one viewpoint. I would hope that an accurate reporting of this event could be made objectively and not serve as a tool for one side or the other.

Pink Floyd Live: Two Sides of the Coin

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

Go ahead, take a coin out of your pocket. The two sides are very different, but you can't have one side without the other.

Like a coin, there are two sides to experiencing Pink Floyd live. Heads would be the concert side of the coin, in which you actually go to see the band, along with its flashy stage effects: fog, laser shows, and crashing aeroplanes. You can't help but be impressed by the pyrotechnics of it all. The experience is usually an unforgettable one.

Now turn the coin over. This side is the recorded live side. When there's no impressive stage show to back it up, is it any wonder that the music is revealed to be rather boring?

Pink Floyd is one of my favorite bands, and I did appreciate their last album, as well as their live show. Unfortunately, I can't think of too many favorable things to say about Delicate Sound of Thunder, the recent Pink Floyd live album.

The high point of the album is the performance of their 1971 classic One of These Days; however, there are many low points. The lowest of the low is during any of the songs that Roger Waters originally sang. David Gilmour simply cannot sing the songs like Waters could. This furthers the belief that to go see Pink Floyd live, you should go to a Roger Waters concert.

The version of Pink Floyd represented by this album conveniently overlooks any of the material from the albums Animals or The Final Cut, perhaps because these albums were written by Roger Waters. The first record (or CD) of the two-disc set is composed of the first half of Shine On You Crazy Diamond followed by most of the A Momentary Lapse of Reason album. Even the performance of this recent material is lackluster.

Disc two is miles ahead of disc one, but it's still unexciting. The only reason that it's better is that there is a greater variety of material. Most of the biggest Pink Floyd hits are represented on disc two, which has a significantly longer running time than disc one.

My only guess at the reason for the success of this album is that there has been no official live Pink Floyd release since 1969, which was long before they reached the status of being AOR (Album Oriented Rock) staples.

An interesting bit of trivia: about two minutes and forty second into the song One of These Days, David Gilmour plays what is unmistakably the beginning of the theme from the television show Doctor Who.

Delicate Sound of Thunder gets my vote for most disappointing album of 1988. I'm sure that the members of the band have become unbelievably rich from their world tour and this album. If they still feel greedy, all they have to do is release a videotape of their concert. It'll be sure to sell, and with the visuals to help the music along, it'll be better than this record is. You'd think that with all of that spare change in their pockets, they would realize that every one of those coins has two sides.

Joan Jett Rocks Harper

By Jamie Besson
Staff Writer

Dressed to kill, Joan Jett and the Blackhearts came out rockin' from the word go. The sexy lead singer wore black, skin-tight leather pants and a leather jacket. The red half-shirt added to her outfit.

The concert opened with their early classic Bad Reputation, then went right into Cherry Bomb. After that Jett was primed and ready to work up a sweat. And she had the determination to make the crowd sweat too.

The set contained a well rounded mix of the classics as well as the newer hits. Their forgotten hit, Do You Wanna Touch, certainly brought the crowd to life. The title song from Jett's recent movie Light of Day, was well done. They even snuck in a Chuck Berry classic called Tulane. The recent hit, Hate Myself for Loving You, and the current hit single, Little Liar, were also in the set.

Probably the most interesting song was the remake I Wanna Be Your Dog. It was originally recorded by Iggy Pop. The set ended with the mega-hit I Love Rock 'n' Roll. The band exited and left the near sold-out crowd howling for more. When they returned for the final blow, the strains of her hit remake, Crimson and Clover, filled M building.

Broken Homes was the opening band. What can I say they opened the show. Their blues based brand of hard rock made for a nice sound; I was impressed by their song entitled Superstar, but a crowd pleaser they weren't. In fact, when the lead singer announced that they were going to play one more song, the audience replied in unison "NO!"

Joan Jett and the Blackhearts' tour is in support of their new album, Up Your Alley. Late last year they were the opening act for Robert Plant and his Now and Zen tour.

Judging by Jett's final comments, the Blackhearts plan to be on the road again in '89. I suggest you don't miss them, if you didn't see them this time around.

THE FLY II: THE SEQUEL HAS ARRIVED

By Scott Neidl
Entertainment Editor

Listen... (bzzz)
Do you hear? (bzzz)
It's getting closer... (bzzz)
And closer. (bzzz)
Don't be afraid. (bzzz)
Be very (bzzz)
Very Afraid!(bzzz)
THE FLY II

The Fly II is the story of Martin Brundle, son of Seth Brundle the original fly. (For those of you who don't remember, Seth had made it with the lady reporter right after his little merger with a Musca domestica, and she was later diagnosed pregnant, with Martin)

The lady reporter dies giving birth, and Martin (Eric Stoltz) is subject to a life of observation at Bartok Industries under the watchful eye of Anton Bartok (Lee Richardson). Bartok is the company that gained Seth Brundle's telepods.

Martin Brundle shows the infamous telepods to Beth Logan

This was the tension building promotion 20th Century Fox used to hype the coming of The Fly II, the sequel to the 1986 hit remake, The Fly.

Martin grows at an accelerated rate, so by the time Martin reaches the age of four, he is a full grown young man. As a young man Martin is able to move out of the nursery and into his own apartment on Bartok grounds. He also meets and falls in love with Beth Logan (Daphne Zuniga).

Martin, along with his accelerated growth rate, gains higher intelligence than his father, and with his powerful knowledge he is to uncover the secret behind the telepods.

Everything is going fine in Martin's life, until the dormant cells he inherited from his father awaken starting the metamorphosis that will change him into a mutant fly. At first he thinks this change is the worst thing that could happen, until Beth says, "You're getting worse." to which Martin replies, "I'm getting better!"

Now that you all know the plot, maybe I should tell you how it was.

It was better than I expected. The plot had originality and depth, making it a separate film than the first.

David Cronenberg, director of 1986's The Fly, sits this one out and Chris Walas makes his directorial debut in this successful sequel to the 1986 hit. His talent for makeup gained him the the 1987 academy award for Best Makeup on The Fly, and has move into the director's chair hasn't slowed him down.

Stoltz, known for his portrayal in Mask, does a fine job as the seemingly innocent and wide-eyed Martin. His talent for expressing character growth is more than evident in his performance.

Zuniga, who has starred in the Mel Brooks' trash and burn Spaceballs, breaks even on her depiction of Beth. It is not anything original, but yet definitely does not hinder the film in any way.

I am not a supporter of movie sequels, especially when they get out of hand like (heaven forbid I should say it) Friday the 13th or Rambo, however, there are many that I think deserve acclaim, and this is one of them. The Fly II shares a title and continues a story, but that is as far as it goes, from then on it is an independent movie, and a strong one at that.

If you liked the original (not to be confused with the original, original) you won't be disappointed. But those of you with weak stomachs, this ride may not be for you. For once I'd like to retitle a film in a positive manner and this one deserves its own title and not a rehash with a number next to it, so let me leave you with this, Legacy of the Fly, the story continues.

Lady Hawks travel to Section Tourn

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

The Lady Hawks will be going in to next weeks Section Tournament on a high note as they won a pair of moral victories this week, despite the fact they split their games this week.

On Thursday, they fell to Moraine Valley 74-64 as they outscored the Maraduers 37-27 in the second half after trailing by 20 at halftime. And on Tuesday, the Lady Hawks defeated South Suburban 71-70 in overtime as the Lady Hawks overcame a seven point deficit with 2:42 left in the extra period to boost the Lady Hawks record to 12-14 on the year, 7-6 in the N4C.

Moraine Valley (22-5, 12-0) jumped ahead to a 47-27 halftime lead by using a quick fast-break attack. They also used a strong inside game spearheaded by All American Candidate Lavetta Mitchell's 22 points. The Marauders were also able to draw Amy Koziol into foul trouble with three in the first half. The Marauders had a 47-27 lead at half time.

The Lady Hawks weren't ready to wave the flag of surrender just yet. Behind a stellar team effort, the Lady Hawks were soon able to whittle away what was once a 23-point deficit to nine with less than three minutes to go. Unfortunately, the Lady Hawks ran out of time as Moraine was able to hold off Harper's late rally.

In addition to Mitchell's 22 points, Moraine was also led by Sue Patterson with 14 and Beth Shipanik with 13. Pascale O'Donoghue led Harper with 23 and Amy Koziol added 21.

"We proved that we could play with them. Had it not been for our free-throw shooting and that first half, it could have been a different story," Head Coach Tom Teschner said.

In Tuesday night's game, the Lady Hawks led most of the way until a three-pointer by South Suburban's Yvonnia Clemons tied the contest up at 63 to send the contest into the overtime.

And for a while, it looked like the Bulldogs would walk away with the win. The Lady Hawks trailed by seven at 70-63 with 2:42 left when Amy Koziol came to the rescue. Koziol hit a pair of three-pointers to close the Bulldog's lead to one at 70-69 with 1:02 left.

Then after Kellie Dennis rebounded a missed shot by Clemons, Koziol set up the game-winning basket by lobbing it in to Pascale O'Donoghue. O'Donoghue put it up and in to give the Lady Hawks the margin of victory.

South Suburban's last chance was taken when Dennis and O'Donoghue reached in and stole the ball from Cristel Cooper giving the ball to Koziol, who in turn ran the clock out by fouling two Bulldog players out in the process.

Hawks suffer upset: Season dribbles out

The Harper Hawks may very well have a low level of morale coming into next week's Region IV-Division II playoffs. After taking the number 8 team in the country, Moraine Valley, to the wire Thursday Night in a 62-59 loss, The Hawks fell to South Suburban 70-49 Tuesday. The ball wouldn't go through the net as the Hawks shot only 28% from the field. The loses dropped Harper to 5-20 on the year and 2-11 in the N4C.

In the first half of Thursday's contest, Moraine (21-7, 7-5) jumped out to a 24-14 lead with strong performances by guard Mike Oliver, forward Larry Wallace, and center Mike Butler. Still, the Hawks were able to close the gap to three at 28-25 with less than two minutes remaining behind Sophomores Travis Perry, Joe Pasti, and Kevin Simpson. Unfortunately, the Hawks failed to convert in those last two minutes and fell behind by seven, 32-25, at the half.

The Hawks would remain in the contest throughout the second half as they never trailed by more than 10 points. In fact, the Hawks would have the ball trailing by only four points, 56-52, with less than two 1/2 minutes remaining when Butler intercepted a Dean Petrulakis pass intended for Pasti. Butler dished it off to Oliver who layed it up and in to increase the Marauder lead, 58-52 with 2:15 left. Petrulakis would cut the deficit in half to 58-55 with a three pointer from the top of the key with 2:00 remaining, but Glenn Howard's lay-up with 1:35 remaining increased the Moraine lead to five at 60-55.

That's when the play that all but killed Harper's chance of an upset occured. With 40 seconds remaining Pasti would get called for travelling, turning the ball over to the Marauders. The Marauders in turn capitalized as Oliver, fouled by Simpson, nailed both ends of a one and bonus to make it 62-55 Moraine with 24 seconds left, virtually putting the game away. Oliver led the Marauders with 26 points and 7 assists, followed by Wallace with 11 points and 9 rebounds. Butler added 9 points and 12 rebounds. Perry led the Hawks once again with 21 points and 10 rebounds followed by Simpson who scored 10 and added six assists.

In Tuesday Night's game against South Suburban, The Hawks were outshot, outrebounded, outmaneuvered, outmuscled, and outhustled as the visiting Bulldogs were able to hold the Hawks in check. Jerome Hardrick led Harper with a career-high 18 points and 9 rebounds.

Hawks seeded 10th

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

The Lady Hawks were given a nice gift by the NJCAA Region IV Women's Tournament committee. They may have given the Lady Hawks the key to a section Tournament Championship as they made the section tourney pairings Sunday in Kankakee.

The Lady Hawks, seeded 10, will play host to Wright. The winner of that game will travel to Freeport to face Highland for the Section Title. The winner of the Section tourney will advance to the round of the Elite Eight in Region IV at Triton on Friday, March(4) facing in all probability #2 seeded Sauk Valley. The Semi-Finals will be held on Saturday, March 4 and the Championship will be held on Sunday March 5. The Region IV Championship will advance to the National Tourney at Tyler Jr. College in Tyler, Texas March 13-18.

What gives the Lady Hawks the key to the Championship is (the fact that) they have a 3-1 record this season against both Wright and Highland. They crushed Wright twice at Harper by scores of 75-46 in the opening round of the Lady Hawk Thanksgiving Tournament on Nov. 25 and a 69-40 dumping of the Rams on Dec. 20. Highland dealt the Lady Hawks a 71-66 decision at Building M on Dec. 1. But the Lady Hawks would return the favor to the Cougars at Freeport 28 days later, by winning 65-61.

"We had a good draw because we play a good schedule. We should have beaten Highland twice, because we had them right where we wanted them over here. And if they're going to go anywhere they're going to have to beat Sauk Valley sooner or later," Head Coach Tom Teschner commented.

Chicago sports update

By Kevin Oates
Staff Writer

The NBA and NHL all-star games are finished and we are ready for the second half.

The Bulls have a tough second half schedule with 75% of the teams they are playing with 500 or better records. The Bulls have to be more consistant this half if they want to be successful.

The Hawks, also, have to be more consistant. They need a back-up goalie to Chevier before they kill him. He has been good but I hope the Hawks don't burn him out by play-off.

Baseball is coming soon to a field near you. The Cubs and Sox report to spring training this week the Cubs in Mesa and the Sox in Sarasota.

Swimming

By Trudy Herbol
Staff Writer

The Hawks swimmers continue to develop as the women qualified for nationals in the medley relay at Grand Rapids on February 4. Medley relay members are Nicole Lebeau, Lisa Acs, Kim Jurczak, and Peggy McCann.

Coach Kearns hopes to qualify three more relay teams at Regionals (College of DuPage) this weekend. In addition, Coach Kearns cites four swimmers in "perfect position" for national times, "Kim Jurczak (50 and 100 Free), Peggy McCann (50 Free), Joe Potthast (Individual Medley and 100 Back) and Jeff Smith (100 Breast)." At this level of competition desire and self confidence become key factors.

When asked, "Are you happy with how the season is progressing?" Kearns enthusiastically answered, "You bet! Participation has been excellent. The women have set the pace. Competition has encouraged the men to keep up with the women."

Hawks seeded 13th

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

Even though the Hawks have a 5-19 record this season, it is conceivable that they may find themselves facing number one Illinois Valley in a semi-final game.

16 teams will compete in the NJCAA Region IV-Division II Tournament. The pairings for the tournament were announced Sunday in Kankakee. The first and second rounds will play February 21-25 at the home court of the higher seeded team. Harper, seeded 13th, will travel to Olive-Harvey College, the number four seed.

Should the Hawks come away victorious, they would face the winner of the Wright-Elgin game. The winner of that contest would advance to the final tour at Triton, facing the number one team in the country. The semi-final winners will meet for the Region IV Crown on March 5th. The champions will go to the national tournament at Delta College in Michigan.

"We could do it, we know we are capable of it. And if we do play Wright, we could get the game here because they don't have a regulation court," stated sophmore Travis Perry.

As for head coach Bill Probst, he'll have enough time trying to prepare for Olive-Harvey. Olive-Harvey is ranked in the top ten in the region on offense and features two of the top fifteen scorers in the region; Robert Turnbow and Conrad Youngblood.

"Turnbow is a super talent who is being recruited by a bunch of Division I scouts. He is a good player. We don't know much about Youngblood, but from what we do know he's also an excellent player," head coach Bill Probst said.

Probst also added, "they're an extremely talanted team. They're quick and they feature a run-and-gun offense."

Speech Team

Fourth in State

By Tari Vaughn
Staff Writer

The Harper Speech Team captured the fourth place team trophy in the 2 Year College Division and placed eighth overall at the State Speech Competition on February 17 and 18. Harper competed against 18 other colleges and universities at Northern Illinois University, and brought home a total of nine trophies.

Linda "Mad Dog" Lang led the Harper team with a 5th place Individual Sweepstakes. To earn this honor, Lang placed 5th in Oratory and Informative Speaking, and 4th in After Dinner Speaking and Communication Analysis.

Rosemary Langer also brought back a 4th place Informative Speaking trophy, while John Gardner took 6th in Poetry.

Harper's Reader's Theatre production, taken from the book Homecoming by Bob Greene, won second place. The students participating in this event were Roger Bieri, John Gardner, Rosemary Langer, and Doug Ray.

Other students contributing team sweepstakes points were Elaine Conrad, Wynn Grippe, and Peter Lindstrom.

Harper will be hosting its 10th annual Novice Speech Tournament on March 4. For more information, contact Marcia Lazenta at 397-3000, ext 2284.

Harper's Observatory

Scheduled to operate in August

By Mona Tsu
News Editor

Groundbreaking for the observatory is scheduled for March 1.

The observatory will be placed on the northside of campus, near Parking Lot 7 for best accessibility, utilization, and soil condition.

The building will house a 100-year old Bershire telescope, donated by DuPont Company in New Jersey. The building, itself, will be a 28' X 28' square brick structure, supporting a 12'6" dome with a ladder leading up to the telescope.

Funds for the observatory were received from the Buy-a-Brick Fund Raiser, the Astronaut dinner sponsoring Astronaut Schmidt, and anyone who made an in-kind gift.

In addition, the Harper Educational Foundation approved $10,000 for the observatory and the Student Senate released the allocated $5,000 class gift after receiving the timetable of construction, type of structure, and the final cost.

Currently, funding is still in progress to upgrade further the observatory project.

The observatory should be operational by August.

9 cars vandalized

By Chris Boghossian
Staff Writer

Nine cars have been vandalized this month in parking lots across campus, causing an estimated $1,500 in damages, according to Kevin King, supervisor of Public Safety.

Vandals damaged two cars in student lot two on Thursday, February 9, a staff member's car in lot nine on Friday, February 10, and six more staff members' cars in lot three on Wednesday, February 15 between 3:50 and 4:45 p.m. King said it is unknown whether or not the incidents are related.

"We have a strong suspicion of who did it, but we do not have any evidence to make an arrest," King said. "We are keeping the case open, but unless more information or evidence comes forward, we can not do anything."

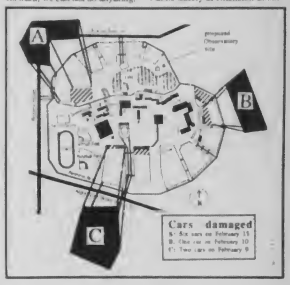

King said vandals shattered the windows of the cars with a BB gun, a pellet gun, or some similar type of gun. Nothing was reported stolen from the cars.

Although the damage last Wednesday was done to staff members' cars only, the vandalized cars were apparently chosen at random.

This recent string in vandalism to cars is the biggest reported incident in years. "In the eleven years that I have been here, we've never had a problem like this, other than isolated incidents," said King.

The owners of the cars must report the vandalism to their individual insurance companies to claim money for the damages to their cars.

If anyone has information as to who vandalized the cars, call Public Safety at extension 2330.

Board approves new air-conditioners

Staff Writer

Do you remember last summer and the days of warm rooms in Buildings D, F, and L? This will soon be over thanks to December's Board approval of the replacement of the air-conditioning units in these buildings.

Part of the three-year program is to have three units fully operational by this summer.

The program will also include the replacement of cooling coils and air handling equipment in Buildings A, D and F. The project includes replacement of air-conditioning units in the Cardiac Rehabilitation workout rooms in Building M. Replacement and modifications will be made in various fan rooms in Buildings A, D, F, L and P.

Buildings A, D & F will be receiving two Centrifugal chillers, equipped with Turbo Modulators. The units are run by centrifugal force, using water, opposed to electronic and more costly units.

Supervisor, Maintenance & Utilities, Carl Butterfield, stated, "This modern design is economically feasible and is inexpensive to run and maintain."

The decision was based on the excessive cost of repairing the older out-dated units.

Thirteen bids were solicited for the project, ranging in cost from $875, 500 to $959,600. Mechanical Inc. with a low bid of $875,500 was awarded the project.

Funds for the project are provided in the 1988/89 Operations (restricted) budget. The budget is used for extensive repair and replacement of older equipment.

Harper retained Behling Consultants for the engineering and drawing specifications for the installation of the units.

The overall project is expected to be completed sometime in 91.

Senate subcommittees begin working on goals

By Mona Isa
News Editor

Students are invited to attend the Student Senate's next meeting, March 3, to assist with ideas on the newly proposed Senator goals.

The Senate officers recently appointed seven senate subcommittee chairpeople. One of the Senate's primary duties is to establish Senate subcommittees and act upon student and college concerns.

Unanimously, senators agreed to set up subcommittees for the fulfillment of seven goals established at a previous meeting.

The proposed goals primarily consist of improvements for Harper each headed by a chairperson:

• The investigation on the reopening of the snack bar on the second floor of Building A and the benefits obtained from the reopening(David Patanella).

• Student involvement in the elections, survey, D.A.W.N., intramurals, community interaction, and Student Trustee vote(Mike Trippedi).

• The redecoration of the Senate office to better appeal students and Senate officers(Paul Lombardi).

• A liaison between Student Senate and Faculty Senate Committee(Charmaine Mitnulli).

• Improvements for the Harper College Student Senate office(Anthony Gracia).

• Participation in the class gift and its fulfillment(Kristen Brogan)

• Whether improvements or additions are needed for the game room(Paul Lombardi).

Senators must join at least one of these subcommittees, work at accomplishing the goal(s), and report on their progress.

Students and clubs are encouraged to come and voice their opinions and objectives for the annual goals.

If anyone is interested in attending a Senate meeting, contact Student Activities ext. 2242.

$27,318 for Crusade of Mercy

Dave Rebman
Staff Writer

Once more, Harper College faculty and staff came to the aid of the needy in the Palatine area.

"This year, 309 employees from Harper contributed to the Crusade of Mercy Fund" stated Ray Devery, Director of Development and one of this year's organizers.

"We raised $27,318, almost setting a school record. The drive started off on October 1, 1988 and closed on February 1.

During this time, there were several fund raisers with celebrities such as Johnny Morris to bring in contributors," added Devery.

A majority of the money raised goes to the United Way of Palatine.

"Harper College is one of our four major contributors," stated Kathleen Rouch, Executive Director for the Palatine area. "The money we get through donations is divided up and given to 20 different organizations throughout the Palatine area. Human care services supported by this drive are Clearbrook Center, Bridge Youth Service, Talk Line/Kids Line, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and many other services.

Thanks to Harper College, we have surpassed our goal this year and raised $170,000 to help the people in and around Palatine."

Harper salutes all those who helped make this year's fund drive so successful.

A different generation on campus

Older students choose Harper

By Alisa Chisland
Features Editor

Look around you. One in three students on this campus is at least 35-years-old. Who are these older students, and why are they attending a junior college?

"A lot of these students have been out of school for a significant amount of time," said Joyce Nolen, student development professor. "They often have family or work responsibilities. They are bonafide adults who do not rely on mom to cook, clean, and do the laundry."

Nolen mentioned characteristics that are common to some older adults:

• Initially, the returning adult may be apprehensive about returning to school. They have been out of school for a long time. They fear "their brain has atrophied."

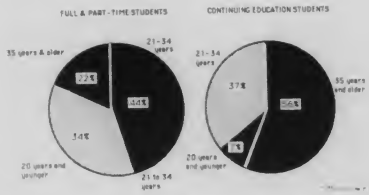

• They may feel that they have lost their communication skills. "I haven't talked to anybody except the kids and the dog for ten years. I don't know if I can even carry on an adult conversation."

• They don't know what to expect. "When it's called 'college' it's supposed to be difficult."

• They have no idea what a semester hour is, how to choose classes, or select a major.

• A lot of the adult students have attended college before and were unsuccessful.

The adult students return to school, and are thrown into a new arena. They are in the classroom. "Somebody, namely the teacher, is telling them what to do, when to do it, how to do it, and giving them a grade," said Nolen. "They are being labeled 'A's, 'B's', 'C's', and 'D's', so their whole self-esteem is in jeopardy."

The family may add to the pressures of going back to school. The mother has always taken care of the family. The woman may feel that she has no choice but to get an "A". According to Nolen, the husband may say, "We're letting you go to school, and you can't even get an 'A'. Well, you don't deserve to be in school."

Why do adult students return to school? It may be job related. They need more education to begin a career, keep their job, or to advance. Their children are grown, and they have free time to devote to classes. They want to learn. They are enriched by knowledge, and may possibly seek a degree.

The Harbinger asked five adult students why they chose to return to school?

Ed Scola: "I was unhappy in my career, and decided to try architecture. Harper offers the classes I need. At 38, I'm glad to be here. Whether I receive "A's" or "B's" in my classes, I'm satisfied. An 'A' isn't everything. I like Harper. I'm receiving a quality education at a good price."

Mary Nash: "I have been married for 25 years. I've been out of school for 30 years, since high school. I decided I want to be a nurse. I was a little nervous about going back to school. I didn't think I had the confidence to do the work. I forgot how to study. I decided if everyone else can do it, I can do it.

"I love learning. I enjoy every minute of class. I've made a lot of friends, of all ages, in my classes. I'm getting straight "A's". I love Harper."

Oliver Auer: "I am a retired chemical engineer. I take classes at Harper because I am interested in certain subjects. I do not need the credits. I have credits coming out of my ears. I take classes for fun. They stimulate my mind.

"I was an honor student 55 years ago. Kids today wouldn't have lasted long. They have it too easy. The value of any learning is a matter of the process of the mind. To be beneficial, the work should be challenging."

Martha Auer: "I enjoy taking music classes at Harper because they make me feel young again. I enjoy being a student. Harper is a great school with so much to offer its students."

Miriam Kravis: "I'm an admissions clerk at Harper College. I was not always a good student. When I started to take classes I was a little nervous, and had poor study habits. I was not a good candidate for college.

"Then, several years ago, I took a sociology class for fun. I enjoyed the class, and became more serious about going to school.

"Now, I love school and have good grades. I'm also going for a Bachelor's degree in psychology at Northeastern."

"Adult students add an exciting component to our student population," said Nolen. "We are delighted to have them at Harper College."

Crisis no problem with emergency hotline

By Alisa Chisland
Features Editor

Imagine this scenario: "I had a fight with my boyfriend. I have three tests today. I'm so upset. I've been up for four days unable to sleep. I don't know what to do."

Are you having a crisis? "A crisis is an unscheduled problem which needs immediate attention," said Becky Santeler, health service college nurse. "It can be anxiety or stress-related, a family problem, anger or hostility toward themselves or someone on campus."

"Someone in a crisis situation may be acting out, or acting inappropriately in class," added Santeler. "It could be someone sitting in a corner crying. The person may be so depressed that they can't come to school. Some possible symptoms are habitual lying, abuse of chemicals, short-term memory loss, change of personality, or sudden, frequent mood swings."

The person experiencing the crisis may not be aware that anything is wrong, or that they need help, said Santeler.

They don't have to deal with the problem alone. Help is available through the Health Service's special emergency hotline, ext. 2599. The hotline is set up specifically to handle crisis situations that need immediate attention.

The Health Service screens all calls to determine what the need is. If the person needs help or psychological guidance, the counselor from the center on call (A, D, I, or F) will be contacted. Together the Health Service's staff person and the counselor will establish a short-term intervention plan to deal with the person's need.

Any student or staff member is eligible for crisis intervention services from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on Friday. Public Safety (ext. 2211) must be notified of any crisis during the weekend. All weekend calls will be referred to Northwest Community Hospital (255-1500).

Santeler suggests that students minimize the chance of experiencing a crisis by seeing a counselor before registering for classes, taking classes on life management skills, or getting into a support group.

"You don't schedule a crisis, but you may be able to prevent it," said Santeler.

10 Win Blood Trivia Contest

There are 10 winners of the Blood Quotient contest from last week's Harbinger. They are: Adrienne Domato, Joe Brinehenhof Bob Illy, Tony Graham, Paul Hitalenko, Penelope Skrzynski, Mark Felski, Karen Witsiepe, Bobbie Levine, Dawn Highley.

Here's the answers... Stop holding your breath.

You can donate blood from age 17-70.

There are eight blood types: A,B,AB, O with the RH factor + or - that makes eight.

Dr. Sedik's class in Marketing sponsored the November, 1988 Blood Drive.

Cancer treatment requires the highest percentage of blood components.

Blood donation takes about 20-30 minutes, registration to cookie break.

The most common Blood type is O+.

The three main blood types are A,B,O.

60 area hospitals benefit from the blood drives at Harper.

BUFORD the Bloodhound was on campus last Spring and last week.

Any area hospital you can name receives blood from Harper's blood drive.

LIFESOURCE is the Blood Drive donation team.

NO, you can't donate if you have a cold

David Letterman was the celebrity who donated on his show.

You can donate every eight weeks.

Up to four lives can be saved with one donation

NO, there is no artificial blood; human blood is unique.

There are 10-12 pints of blood in the human body.

Only one pint is donated.

Platelets are the cells responsible for clotting.

Yes, 1 of 10 patients requiring surgery will need blood.

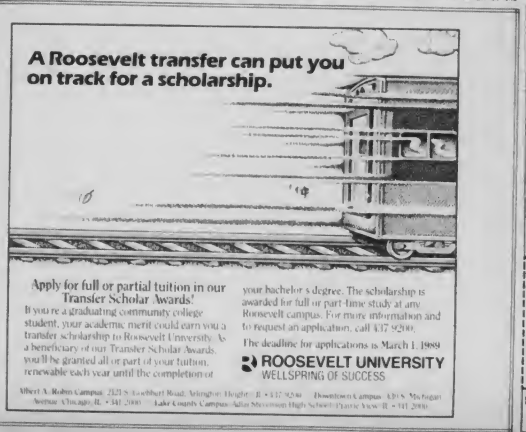

Red blood cells carry oxygen.

Posters were in all of the main buildings(A,F,D,etc).

NO, you can't get AIDS from donating blood.

Wednesday's Blood drive provided 103 units. The Health Service and the Harbinger thank all those who tried to donate for making this Blood Drive successful. Special thanks to the following for their donation of prizes: the Bookstore, the Box Office, Student activities, the Cafeteria/Food Service, and LIFESOURCE.

Winners should contact the Health Service to get their prize. The next Blood Drive will be, Wednesday, April 5, 8:30-3:30.

Observatory doubletake

In last week's editorial, The question of journalistic responsibility, I lost touch with professionalism. While the information was true, some of it should not have been printed. For this, I express my regrets.

I support the idea of an observatory. I think it will enhance the school's reputation and provide a new tool for student and faculty learning.

I was pleased to find out from Linda Klopp, an associate of the observatory project, that "in the last nine months those people working on the project have raised approximately $20,000. We have travelled 1700 miles to New Jersey to pick up the one-hundred-year-old donated telescope, and are in the process of having it restored."

"President Thompson has chosen a site for the observatory and ground breaking is scheduled for this Spring," Linda added.

I thank everyone involved for their time and efforts in achieving this goal.

My only reservation is, so many of the people that deserve credit have been ignored thus far. To those people working on the project (Linda Klopp and Laura Jacobson), stand up and be recognized for your dedication to Harper and to academic excellence.

As for Paul Sipiera, rather than searching for opposition, perhaps he should have been searching for support.

The Political Perspective

Welfare causes economic problems

By Mike Watson
Staff Columnist

In the wake of the Presidential election, George Bush must deal with one of the greatest challenges this nation has ever had to face: the multi-trillion dollar debt moments away from collapsing our entire economic structure. Currently, our economy is like a skyscraper, built not on the bedrock of sound monetary policies, but on the evasive fears of con men wringing bad checks on an account long overdrawn. If we are to save the economy we must have a firm foundation upon which it will stand.

The solution to the problem is not which programs to cut and which to save; it is to challenge the overall, underlying premise, the premise that is behind one of the most wasteful and expensive welfare systems in the world.

It is the premise that society as a whole has a "right" to impose unchosen obligations on some of its citizens based on the concept that a man's need gives him the right to appreciate the products of another man's labors. It is this mixed economy welfare premise that has given us the dubious distinction of being the largest debtor nation and has saddled us with an unprecedented debt. And to eliminate this debt it is precisely this premise that must be challenged and replaced by a full implementation of individual rights.

The United States of America is founded on the premise that the rights of individuals supercede any alleged rights of society. It means that each man has a right to pursue his life, liberty, and happiness and remains free to do as he pleases provided he respects the rights of others. It means that he cannot be forced to assume any unchosen obligations, that he works for the furtherance of his own happiness, and that society as a whole has no claim on his life. He is free. This is the essence of individual rights and of America.

Unfortunately, these freedoms and rights have been violated in the past century by people espousing the notion that society does have a claim on the life of an individual. Some men can be forced by law to assume unchosen obligations and work, not for their own life and happiness, but for someone else's.

The concept that the "good of society" supercedes the "good of individual rights" is the premise behind every socialist and totalitarian nation where government assumes responsibility for all phases of a citizen's life. America, on the other hand, is the land of opportunities, not guarantees, where the citizens assume responsibility for their own lives.

It is, therefore, proper for Americans to be left free to produce and enjoy the fruits of their labors and to enjoy their liberty. They should not be subjected to the demand for handouts in the form of legislated thievery that is the essence of the welfare system.

It is the premise behind this welfare state that must be replaced. Only by championing individual rights can we have the power to dismantle the welfare state and firm up the foundation of our economy by bringing us out of this disgraceful debt.

'Lean On Me' Stands Up

By Scott Neidl
Entertainment Editor

Sometimes in our lives,
We all have pain,
We all have sorrow.
But if we are wise,
We know that there's,
Always tomorrow
Lean on me.

Lean On Me is the title of the new Warner Brothers release presenting the true story of Joe Clark.

Joe Clark is the man chosen to be principal of Eastside High School in Paterson, New Jersey. Before Clark moved in on Eastside, the school had a reputation for being the worst school in the state. The students at Eastside couldn't even produce the the minimum scores necessary to pass the Basic Minimum Skills test.

Clark was persuaded to return to Eastside by Dr. Frank Napier, the Superintendent of Schools. Both Napier and Clark had been teachers at Eastside twenty years ago. Napier told Clark he thought Clark was the one man who would be willing to and could change that school around to an academic establishment.

Morgan Freeman and Robert Guillaume in Lean On Me

After some persuading, Clark did return to Eastside as acting principal, but he had his work cut out for him. He started with a meeting of the entire faculty to discuss the immediate needs of the school, as he saw them.

All graffiti was to be removed from school, and if any returned to the walls it was scrubbed off the very next day. Clark made some staff alterations, like appointing Mr. Wright to the Head of Security, and believe me they needed it.

That's the set-up, now for the rising action. Clark started to change the school around by giving the students a sense of security. He expelled all students who had a record of drug dealing, drug usage, and/or violence. He also put chains on the door to keep these students out.

Clark employed methods of positive reinforcement to his students; however, he did not use the same tactics on his faculty. The faculty of Eastside pulled together to help the students, and were totally devoted to Clark's ideas, but Clark did not even acknowledge the strides on the faculty's part. Clark constantly reprimanded the faculty for their downfalls, and told them there is always room for improvement.

One force creates a strong opposition to Joe Clark, a woman named Leona Barrett. Barrett has a total dislike for the man stemming back to when her son was expelled by Clark for being a "miscreant", so she does everything in her power to remove Clark from Eastside.

Barrett finally gets Clark on a charge of breaking a fire code. Clark had put chains on all of the doors. (Kind of like taking down Capone on tax evasion.) Joe Clark is then jailed for his offense, while the school board decides his fate.

Clark joins students in fun, to boost morale

Now I will start with the recognition of some very commendable performances.

Morgan Freeman, as Joe Clark, does a fantastic job portraying the pushy, egotistical principal. Freeman, who is known for his role of Easy Reader on WTTW's The Electric Company, gives a wonderful performance of the many faces of Joe Clark. Freeman's ability to change and mature, yet keep his goals intact, deserves a healthy round of applause.

Moving on, Robert Guillaume, as Frank Napier, does not wallow in Freeman's wake. Guillaume has been in theatre for many years, in productions including: Guys and Dolls, The Golden Boy, and (I hope the head of Harper's Theatre Department is reading this) Jacques Brel Is Alive and Well and Living in Paris, however, Guillaume became a household name for his character Benson, in the hit comedy series. Guillaume's performance as Napier is that of a seasoned veteran of the Entertainment world.

The last performer I would like to give recognition to is Lynne Thigpen for her portrayal of Leona Barrett. Thigpen is also no stranger to theatre, film or television. Her portrayal of Barrett really makes you want to hate her, which is exactly what is intended.

To the rest of the actors and actresses in Lean On Me, I tip my hat. Each of your performances warrants recognition, unfortunately I don't have the space to accommodate.

John Avildsen directs this docudrama about the Time Magazine celebrity. Beyond a doubt, Avildsen has a strong grasp of what people want to see. His film credits include both Karate Kid movies and Rocky (notice there is no Roman numeral following this title).

My final note of commendation is for screenwriter Michael Schiffer. His command of the language, knowledge of realistic dialogue and comic sense (yes, there are some very humorous moments in this film) bring this film into the four star range.

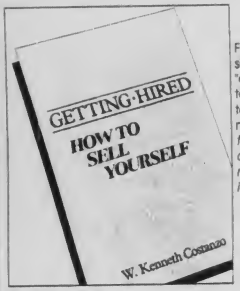

A strong sample of Schiffer's work on this film would be this Clark line directed to Ms. Levias following a confrontation with the Fire Chief, "Do you know what he's saying right now? He's saying, 'That Nigger can't throw me out!' And you know where he's saying it? Out in the parking lot."

For those of you who haven't figured it out by now, I highly recommend this film. It's entertaining, has a redeeming social value, and is the best two-hour pep talk money can buy. Lean On Me left me with a good feeling and a drive to achieve my goals.

Teachers and students alike, I hope, will appreciate and enjoy the message and entertainment value this film has to offer. Or as Gene Siskel would say, "I'm going to have to disagree with you here, Roger, I feel that nothing will stop the success of this film. I give it a whole-hearted thumbs up!"

Lean one me,
When you're not strong,
And I'll be your friend.
I'll help you carry on.
For, it won't be long,
Till I'm gonna need,
Somebody to lean on.

"The unique book in its field!"

Finally, from the other side of the desk, the "employer" tells what it takes to get hired in today's competitive marketplace. Without this information you are simply just not ready for your next interview.

Let The 'Wildman' Come Out

By Vicki Milewski
Staff Writer

"If we don't leave ground tonight we have failed," Robert Bly stated to a sold-out show Wednesday night. The format was Bly's insights and ideas interspersed with original poetry. His personality was enjoyable, natural intimate and "grandfatherly".

"Mythology and the Manly Identity" is a restrictive title that doesn't come close to the ideas presented by Bly. "Manly Identity" represents Bly's "calling card" to fame among men's groups. Bly is adamant about both men and women participating in groups of their own sex designed to explore the "depths" of one's being honestly and without restraint.

Bly also feels every individual needs a private space, where the exploration may continue in solitude. This space should be outdoors because of Bly's "wildman theory". A wildman is not a savage, a sexual outcast, or an uncontrollable murderer; it is an inherent attribute within everyone. Bly feels many of us are not in touch with their wildman.

Attributes of the wildman are: "Answering the phone in a comical way", or just letting go of inhibitions regardless of society's approval. The wildman contains naivety of our childhood and the instinctual ideas of our ancestry. Both features are usually submerged within maturation and culturization.

Bly also spoke from a male perspective. He made a man's maturation, a depressing, although, all too relevant point. Bly contrasted New Guinea's initiation of boys into manhood, with this country which has no initiation ritual. The loss of a father at home due to the Industrial Revolution, has been a perpetuating force behind this inadequacy. An initiation can be the simple beating of a drum and dancing, or as complex as body language which conveys attributes of manhood.

"The Mythology" pertained to the relevance of fairy tales. The Grimm Brothers or Russian folk tales are good indicators of the wildman and characteristics of maturization.

Bly also used King Lear as an analogy, saying: "There is no great king without a clown." A king learns from his clown, how to listen and provide an open environment for creativity. A King is interested in himself, a clown in others. In this way, the clown idea correlates with the wildman theory.

Bly's example of a department head in college is a "king without a clown", symbolic of many educators who have lost touch with their kingdom. Bly identified with the King Lear example. The search for his clown was complete when he realized his clown was more important than his king.

Bly's poetry left an indelible impression. Rhythmically free, yet formed, the poetry traveled deep, as only poetry can. Bly's imagination is a well-developed commodity.

Reaching natural highs thru intellectual means is an inspiration that started many in the audience on their search.

A few beers at a bar will never bring the drinker to the plateaus Bly explored. Bly most definitely succeeded without "leaving the ground".

Pierce Turner: Another of Music's Unsung Heroes

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

Some musicians forever perform their art with critical acclaim, but in the face of public ignorance. Richard Thompson, for example, often has been hailed as the greatest guitarist in the world, and yet his following is minuscule. Elvis Costello, a man most people have heard of, continues to barely sell records despite his name recognition and lavish critical acclaim.

There is a new album out called The Sky and the Ground. Melody Maker has said of its artist "this man's got to be heard . . . he's just got to." The man gaining this acclaim is Pierce Turner, and like Thompson and Costello he will probably become another one of the "well-kept secrets" of the music world.

My first exposure to Pierce Turner came last summer at Cabaret Metro in Chicago, when he and his band were playing a support show for The Smithereens. From the first song, I knew that his style was just a tiny bit off-center. The only percussion during his performance of Mayhem came from a man crashing hand-held cymbals together.

Turner's voice sounded vibrant and energetic during the upbeat songs and a bit melancholy during the slower numbers. His set lasted about 45 minutes and included his cover of The The's Uncertain Smile. When The Smithereens came out, the rest of the crowd had forgotten about Pierce Turner, but I hadn't.

Within a few days I found his debut album. It's Only a Long Way Across was produced by Philip Glass and Kurt Munkasi and featured many of the songs that were performed at The Smithereens' show. The only thing it lacked was the song that haunted me the most, the song he opened his show with-- Mayhem.

The haunting of my memory came to an end the other day when Beggars Banquet/RCA released Pierce Turner's second album, The Sky and the Ground. There on the album, occupying the third slot, was Mayhem. It is not as powerful on record as it was live, but the feeling is still there: the image of a man whose world is crumbling around him.

The whole album is brimming over with feeling and emotion. Turner has a curious habit of writing disjointed lyrics. Taken sentence by sentence they often mean little, but when absorbed song by song they create a feeling. Love and hope and faith mix freely with death, anguish, heartbreak, and suicide.

It is by no means a depressing album (a la Joy Division) There are happy moments as well. There is one moment in particular during the song I Set You Up To Shake. The song is coasting along when suddenly there's a break and it shifts up a key. It can be quite an uplifting moment.

Surface In Heaven is the most direct of the indirect songs on the album. On the surface, the lyrics seem to be telling the story of a man being told that he should commit suicide by diving into an empty pool. "Dive," he is told, "and you will surface in heaven." Only Turner knows if this is the song's true meaning or if the intent was something entirely different.

Turner's voice may not be what you'd expect from the descriptions of the music. It's strength lies not in tonal quality, but in the feeling that he conveys through it. At first listen it may be a bit unusual, but once you warm up to the sound, it bothers you no longer.

As rock musicians go, Turner is as unlikely looking as they come. Small and thin with short, straight hair and youthful looks, only his eyes (and his songs) bely the intensity of his feelings. He is actually Irish but has been living in New York for eight years. There he met modern classical composer Philip Glass, who encouraged him to follow his musical aspirations.

Now, with the release of his sophomore effort, Glass' protege (who, incidentally, is not greatly influenced by Glass' music) has the chance to reach the ears of many more music aficionados. That's when the public will find out that the acclamations of Pierce Turner's musical talent is not unjustified.

Adler Speaks on Educational Reform

An 85 year old legend, Mortimer J. Adler, will lecture in the Building J Theatre at Harper on Monday, February 27 at 7:30 p.m.

Adler's 45th book will be published in March. Entitled Reforming Education: The Opening of the American Mind, the book is a collection of his essays about reforming education over the past 50 years. Adler's Harper lecture, Great Books, Democracy, and Truth, will focus on material from the book.

Over the years, Adler has gained the reputation as "America's Tutor", with such books as How to Read a Book Aristotle for Everybody, and Six Great Ideas.

Adler, who has a contract to write a book per year through 1993, does not limit himself to writing books. He is still chairman of the board of editors for the Encyclopedia Britannica; oversees Britannica's Great Books of the Western World series; chairs the Paideia Project, an experiment in educational reform; holds the reins at the Institute for Philosophical Research; conducts annual summer seminars at the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies in Colorado; and gives lectures worldwide.

This will be Adler's second appearance at Harper, where he previously lectured in 1983.

The price of tickets is $2 for Harper students and $4 for general admission. For tickets or more information, call the Harper Box Office at 397-3000, ext. 2547.

Orchestra performs at Harper

The Harper Symphony Orchestra will present Celebrate America on Sunday, February 26, at 3 p.m. in the Building J Theatre.

The program will include School for Scandal by Samuel Barber and In Memoriam by James Mack, whose original compositions have been performed by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

William Rush, a voice consultant to the business and entertainment industries, will narrate the performance of Lincoln Portrait by Aaron Copland.

A guest soloist, Jessica Hwu, 16, will perform the first movement of Beethoven's Concerto Number 5. Pianist Hwu is the winner of the Harper Symphony Young Artists Competition and is a junior at Schaumburg High School. Hwu has won first place in the Society of American Music Contest and received an honorable mention in the Chicago Symphony Illinois Young Performers Competition.

The Harper Symphony Orchestra is enjoying its fourth season under the leadership of Musical Director and Conductor Frank Winkler, who has conducted the Orchestra of Illinois and the Grant Park Symphony Orchestra. He has also performed with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

The orchestra is composed of professional players, members of the community, and students, whose combined effort bring an enthusiasm and dedication to the art of providing music for area residents.

Tickets for the concert will be $3.50 for Harper students and senior citizens and $7 for the public. There is no admission fee for children under 13. For tickets or more information, call the Harper Box Office at 397-3000, ext. 2547.

Graduation Petitions

Students who qualify for a degree or certificate for the Spring '89 semester need to petition for graduation by midterm, March 10, 1989. Graduation petitions can be obtained in the Registrar's Office, room A213.

Newman Lecture Series

The Newman lecture series "We Wait in Hope" meets Wednesdays at 3 p.m. in F327. This Wednesday's lecture will be An Adulthood Faith, given by John Prince. The lecture will involve how faith develops throughout the life cycle. Emphasis will be given to the stages of religious development articulated by Fowler. A discussion and questions will follow the lecture.

John Prince has worked in adult religious education for over 10 years. John has his BA in Philosophy and the Licentiate in Sacred Theology from the University of St. Mary.

Future lecture topics will include Joy and Pain in our Global Home on March 8, Passover, Its Meaning on March 15, and Light and Healing on March 22.

Come and bring a friend. These lectures are free. All are welcome.

Franchising Seminar

The seminar, "What is Franchising?" has been scheduled by Harper for Saturday, March 11, from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. in room C103.

Guest speakers will discuss the advantages and pitfalls of franchise ownership and management.

In addition, presentations will be made by an accountant, lawyer, and banker regarding their viewpoint on franchises.

A sack lunch is suggested. Tuition is $37 plus a $7 fee. To register or for more information, call the Continuing Education Office at ext. 2410, 2412, or 2301. Give course number LXX066-001.

Alumni Association Arizona Trip

By Alisa Chiabund
Features Editor

How would you like to bask in the sun, or visit Pinnacle Peak--the highest point in the Arizona desert? Twenty area residents will have a chance to get away for the "Suite Life"--a four-day trip to Scottsdale, Arizona on May 4-7. The trip, sponsored by the Harper Alumni Association, is open to all alumni, students, staff, friends of Harper, or area residents.

Guests will stay at the Embassy Suites, and have an opportunity to enjoy convenient shopping, golf, horseback riding, and fine dining. Eight lighted tennis courts, a fitness room, two heated pools, and two hydrotherapy spas are available for use at the resort.

Guests are provided with three cooked-to-order full breakfasts, a two-hour cocktail party nightly, and a special cowboy steak cookout at Pinnacle Peak. Guests will be treated to a western melodrama play with a shoot-out, and given their own cowboy hat and a special surprise.

Ray Devery, executive director of the Harper Educational Foundation, said, "This trip is a lot of fun. It never rains in the desert. The weather is marvelous. Guests may relax, or shop at the Bellgata (an outdoor Water Tower Place). Anyone who goes to Scottsdale will have a good time."

The cost of the "Suite Life" package based on double occupancy, is $259 per person plus $281 for round trip airfare on American Airlines. The cost for a single room is $449.

Round-trip airport transfers, baggage handling, flight bag, document case, luggage tags, Chicago fuel/airport surcharge, and applicable taxes and gratuities are included in the package cost.

For further information, or to make a reservation, please contact Patty Phillips or Sandy Orlando at Easy Travel, 60 Biesterfield Rd., Elk Grove Village, IL, at 981-0080. A deposit of at least $125 is required for the reservation. Final payment is due March 1.

Des Barres Lectures at Harper

By Tari Vaugha
Upcoming Editor

Have you ever wondered what it would be like to grow up in Hollywood and to mingle with the stars as a daily routine?

March 14 may be your chance to find out the answers to some of these questions when Pamela Des Barres speaks at Harper.

Author of the best seller I'm With the Band: Confessions of a Groupie, Des Barres will speak about life in the Hollywood fast lane as she reminisces what it's like when Hollywood is your hometown, you babysit for Frank Zappa, and going backstage is a way of life.

This way of life included knowing stars such as Frank Zappa, Waylon Jennings, Keith Moon (of The Who), Jim Morrison (of The Doors), Jimmy Page and Robert Plant (of Led Zepplin), and others. Des Barres can also say she knew Don Johnson (of Miami Vice fame) when he was a young, struggling actor.

"My book is about a girl growing up in Hollywood in the 60's and coming to terms with womanhood," says Des Barres. "It could be any girl's story."

Des Barro's lecture will be in J144 at 7:30 p.m. Admission is $5 for Harper students and $7 for the public. For tickets or more information, call the Harper Box Office at 397-3000, ext. 2547.

Swimmers win national bids

By Trudy Herbst
Staff Writer

"It was just excellent swimming!" praised Coach Roy Kearns, as the Hawks swam to National qualifying times in six individual events and four relays at the Region IV Championship held at COD Friday and Saturday.

Peggy McCann and Mark McAvoy set the pace for the team; each scored 44 points in the individual championship competition. Among the women McCann placed third, and McAvoy placed fourth for the men.

"One important factor contributing to their success is the addition of Assistant Coach Gordon Auckerman to the staff," admitted Head Coach Roy Kearns. "Aukerman brought many years of experience training high-caliber swimmers to our program."

Overall scores, second place for women and third for men, reflect the extensive depth of the team. "We had points from five first-place finishers, but not nearly enough for a good finish. It was exciting to see depth as a major contributor to team score. Many swimmers were entered in their off-events in order to fill the most slots," explained Kearns. Swimmers prefer to participate in events where they excel, but a team effort requires some sacrifice.

Because of this outstanding team effort, ten swimmers will travel to NJCAA National Championships in March at Indian River Community College in Fort Pierce, Florida. Captains Julie Nefcryk and Joe Potthast, Lisa Acs, Stacy Ergish, Kim Jurczak, Nicole LaBeau, Mark McAvoy, Tom McAvoy, Peggy McCann and Jeff Smith.

Lady Hawks win finale

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

The Lady Hawks continued their winning ways by downing Triton 80-55 in their regular season finale Thursday evening in River Grove. The win was their second in a row and fifth in their last six games. The Lady Hawks completed the regular season with a record of 13-14 and 8-6 in the N4C. Triton fell to 6-23 overall and 2-12 in the N4C.

Harper proved to have just too much talent for the hosts as they began to pull away when Amy Kozol picked the ball off from Triton's Tonya Morris and layed it up to give the Lady Hawks a 14-8 lead, capping off a string of six unanswered points. Still, the Trojans would stay in the contest when a 17-footer by Chris Sife closed the Hawk margin to four at 21-17.

Then, the well went dry as the Lady Hawks put a defensive blanket on Triton. The Trojans went scoreless the rest of the half as Harper scored 18 straight points to take a 35-17 lead at half.

More of the same would occure in the second half when the Harper lead would go as high as 33 at 58-25. Triton would go scoreless for almost six minutes during the midway point of the second half.

"We did a nice job out there. We had a total team effort and we played great defense," Head Coach Tom Teschner said.

Leading the way for the Lady Hawks was Pascale O'Donoghue with 25 points. Amy Kozol followed with 24 points, 10 assists, and 5 steals. And Kellie Dennis and Patty Canchola continued their fine handy work inside as Dennis had her season high 16 points and 18 rebounds and Canchola had 11 rebounds and 7 points as she played with an injured back.

"They did a great job for us. Kellie was a dominant force inside and Patty really did a good job out there considering how her back is," Teschner said.

Lady Hawks advance

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

For a while it looked like an upset was in the making as Wright took the Lady Hawks to the wire, trailing by only nine at intermission after leading early in the game by four. The Rams, winners of only four games all season and twice previously beaten by Harper, had caught the Lady Hawks napping.

Fortunately, the Lady Hawks woke up in time as they went on a 15-2 run early in the second half to put Wright away 74-46 in an NJCAA Region IV Section Tournament Semi-Final Tuesday evening in Building M.

The win sends Harper (14-14) to this afternoon's 3:45 section tournament championship game in Freeport against Highland.

"They did a good job on us in the first 10 minutes because we were looking ahead. We really didn't get going until the second half," Head Coach Tom Teschner said.

It was a nip and tuck first half as Wright (4-16) would climb to within one with 5:41 left when Davina Polk hit a three-pointer, making it 20-19 Harper. The Lady Hawks then went on a 13-5 run on buckets by Amy Koziol, Patty Canchola, and Kellie Dennis to make the score at the half, 33-24.

After the Rams clawed back to within eight at 36-28, the Lady Hawks proceeded to go on a 15-2 run that put the game out of reach at 51-30 with 11:48 remaining.

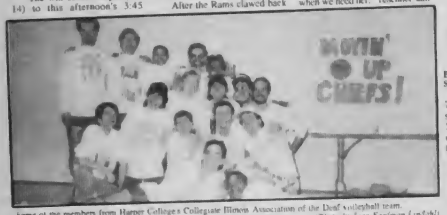

"We played together as a team in the second half after our heads weren't in the game in the first half," said Koziol, who led Harper with 27 points, including 5 three-pointers tying the school mark for most 3's in a game.

Also helping out in the winning effort was Kellie Dennis who had 15 points and 16 rebounds.

"She did a nice job for us. She can really be tough out there. I just hope she can get that way when we need her," Teschner said.

2nd place for volleyball team

By Peter Soby
Sports Editor

Harper College's Collegiate Illinois Association of the Deaf volleyball team took it to the li mit in the fifteenth annual Waubonsee Community College volleyball tournament. In the final match of the championship game Waubonsee's team overcame Harper's team after a long , drawn out twelve to twelve tie.

Team captain Patrick Ford said, "Nobody expected us to do that good in the tournament. We were the dark horse."

Harper was represented at the tournament by an A and a B team. The B team was eliminated in the first round by Waubonsee's A team. Harper's B team was eliminated in the consolation round by P.H.I.

Harper's A team defeated Galladuet, the Waubonsee B team, and Triton to advance to the semi-finals against Waubonsee's A team. In that game, Harper's A team was defeated which put them in the consolation round. In the consolation round, Harper's A team defeated Triton, Northern Illinois, and the University of Wisconsin to advance to the championship game.

After losing to Waubonsee's A team in the Semi-Finals, Harper's A team faced them again in the championship game.

Captain Patrick Ford said," The odds were definitely against us this time. Not only had we been playing for nine straight hours without a rest, we needed to beat Waubonsee in four matches to win the championship. They only needed to beat us twice to win."

The reason for this is because the consolation bracket champion needs four matches to beat the regular bracket champion.

Spectator Liva Kaufman-Lindahl said, "They played their hearts out the final game. They were all over the court."

In the championship game, Waubonsee took the first match, but Harper rebounded the win the second match. In the third match, the two teams struggled to several ties. Finally Waubonsee won the match and the championship.

Captain Patrick Ford said," This was the most exciting tournament I've ever been in. We felt like the true champs of the tournament."

The team did outstanding considering they had only practiced for a week prior to the tournament. They finished second out of 22 teams.

Men lose to Triton

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

The Hawks fell to Triton 98-79 Thursday night in their regular season finale as the Trojans (21-10, 10-4, ranked 25th in the country) proved to be just a bit too fast and a bit too quick for Harper, who finished the regular season at 5-21, and 2-12 in the N4C.

"We played well but they were just too fast for us," Sophomore Kevin Simpson said.

The Hawks would get no closer then five, 24-19 midway through the first half when Jason Brooks hit a three-pointer Triton raised the margin to 15 before Donald Pierce's tip-in at the buzzer narrowed the deficit to 44-34.

Triton dominated the second half by outrunning the Hawks and outscoring them 54-44. At one point, the Trojan lead got as high as 24 and would get no lower than 15.

"We matched up with them well, but we had a couple of our players intimidated by their size and speed," Freshman Jerome Hardrick said.

The Trojans had a balanced attack led by Terry Neitles and Kevin Footes, who had 19 points apiece. Florian Miller added 16 points and Mark Benford contributed 14 to the winning cause.

Sophomore Travis Perry led the Hawks with 31 points, 10 rebounds, and five assists in the losing effort. Jerome Hardrick also contributed for Harper with 15 points and 11 rebounds.

Football scholarships

All-American quarterback Al Snyder and his favorite receiver Bret Velde head a list of 14 Harper College football players who have received scholarships from four-year schools.

Harper, undefeated in Illinois Junior College play the past two seasons and winners of five consecutive N4C championships, announced the scholarships this week.

Snyder, the Most Valuable Player in the N4C conference, selected Lehigh University of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania.

Velde who caught 37 of Snyder's completions on the season will attend Western Illinois.

Joining Velde at Western Illinois are defensive backs Scott Miller and Steve Tryzinski. Joe Wall, an All-Conference defensive lineman will attend Illinois.

Other signings include: Nigel Hoyte (offensive lineman) - Akron; Matt Byer (offensive lineman) - Youngstown State; John Kostrzewa (offensive lineman) - Central Missouri; Jeff Dudan (tight end) - Appalachian State; Robert Harden (wide receiver) - Central State (Ohio); Mike Waterman (offensive lineman) - Missouri-Rolla; Paul Claps (defensive lineman) - N.W. Missouri State; Rod Latham (defensive back) - Indianapolis Univ.; Todd Janney (linebacker) - Winona State (Minn.)

Chicago sports rap

By Kevin Oates
Staff Writer

Let's talk hockey this week. The Blackhawks have the third best record over the past two months. The defense has been great, the goal-tending has been superb and the offense top-notch.

The question is, "who do we have to thank?" My answer is Bob Pulford. Pulford has been getting a lot of slack over the last couple of years from the fans. But let's look at what he's done.

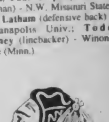

Number one, he puts up with Bill Wirtz. Chicago teams don't have the greatest owners and Wirtz is no exception.

Number two, he has successfully been changed from general manager to head coach three times over the past 10 years without completely destroying the moral of the team. Wirtz wanted to save money by having Pulford be G.M. as well as coach.

Number three, the young talent he and his staff has developed is finally getting a chance to shine. Wayne Presley, Adam Creighton and Jeremy Roenick are all coming into their own. The great trade of a fifth round draft pick for Alain Chevrier and the trade of Curt Fraser for Dirk Graham was shear genius.

Finally, Bob Murdoch was a good coach, but Pulford knew what the Hawks needed, a coach that is going to kick some a when a player needs it. Enter Mike Keenan. He is a proven winner and with the Hawks turnaround, you can see his style of play finally being executed.

So the next time you want to kick Bob Pulford, see what he's done for this team. I think you'll like it. Watch out for the Blackhawks. NHL!

Negotiators will meet Monday in a continuing effort to negotiate a contract for the Harper Professional-Technical staff. The Prof-Tech staff voted last year to affiliate with Local 1600, Cook County Federation of Teachers and negotiations have been underway since July.

Both sides say progress is slow because this is a first-time contract, not a new version of an existing agreement.

Director of Personnel, Larry Bielawa stated that, "Many factors must be looked into when it is a first-time contract, causing the process to be slow."

The Board of Trustees and the Prof-Tech staff have agreed to federal mediation because of minimal progress. Currently, the Prof-Tech staff is represented by the faculty senate until there is a standard system of their own to work through.

Larry Knight, Assistant Professor of Geology and a member of the faculty senate stated, "The Prof-Tech staff is part of the faculty chapter which is a unit within the Local, itself. However, differences exist between the two."

The Pro-Tech staff are those who are equipped with a degree but do not teach. Salary differences exist between the Prof-Tech staff and the full-time staff. Many agree that the salaries are not equitable for the job done.

The Board's negotiating team consists of the three vice presidents, Bonnie Henry, Vice President of Student Affairs; Vern Manke, Vice President of Administrative Affairs; David Williams, Vice President of Academic Affairs; Larry Bielawa, Director of Personnel and the Harper school attorney, Fred Lifton.

The Prof-Tech staff's team consists of Clifford Casey III, Vocational Specialist; Tom Choice, Athletic Academic Coordinator; Jane Harris, Adult Education Department; Joan Young, Publications Coordinator, Larry Knight, faculty senate member, and attorney Bob Breving.

Students are selected to join the Who's Who

By Mona Isa
News Editor

Twenty-five students were recently selected to join the annual edition, "Who's Who Among Students in American Junior Colleges."

Who's Who is a listing of students in colleges who have been selected as outstanding campus leaders.

Harper faculty members and students, selected by Director of Student Activities Jeanne Pankanin, evaluated nominees on the basis of academic standing, extracurricular involvement and community service.

The selection committee then made its recommendations to the "Who's Who" publication. In turn, the students become part of an annual directory which can benefit in future employment and admissions to universities.

The twenty-five Harper students are:

From Hoffman Estates, Elaine Erickson, Erik Johnson, Nanette Keller, Patricia Pecho, Janice Word.

From Schaumburg, Andrea Chang, Jane Farlow, Laura Jacobson, Tony Laramie, David Patanella, Judy Petrauskas, Michelle Setilpam.

Also selected were, Jennifer Gobl of Palatine, Trudy Herbst of Kildeer, Mona Isa of Barrington, Michele Ostrowki of Des Plaines and Peter Soby of Carpentersville.

"One Life to Live" stars John Loprimo & Marcia Cross

Soap star visits Harper

By Douglas Ray
Editor-in-Chief

John Loprieno, better known as Cord Roberts from "One Life to Live", made a guest appearance in Theatre Instructor Mary Jo Willis' class last Monday. Loprieno, a Harper alumnie, was a pupil of Willis and Speech Coach Marcia Litrenta about eight years ago.

"It was great to come hear," said Loprieno during a question and answer session. "Harper was great because it was home..." It gave him opportunities to take roles in the drama that he may not have had at four-year schools.

Loprieno landed his first job with 'Search for Tomorrow' because he was "in the right place at the right time". After a brief stay there he hooked up with "One Life to Live" where he has worked for almost three years.

Loprieno eventually wants to try something new. "I want to get back on stage," either prime time TV or film in New York. But if that doesn't work out, he has always wanted to teach drama and directing.

During the question answer session, Loprieno explained the challenges of Soap acting and related some humorous stories to a responsive audience.

After a short (two hour) stay at Harper, it's back to the Big Apple for John Loprieno, and back to 12 hour work days and 50 page scripts.

New traffic lights; a new headache

By Marc J. Balke
Staff Writer

Traffic at the Euclid Avenue entrance to Harper has been backed up since new traffic lights were installed this past January.

"The timing mechanism which triggers the lights must be off. I've been waiting forever", added one concerned student.

Since its installation students and faculty haven't noticed a difference from the past when there were no traffic signals.

When cars exit the campus at Euclid Avenue this triggers a red light, only then does opposing traffic get the left turn signal.

Harper College invested $40,000 into this project and will annually pay $1,000 for its maintenance and electricity.

Along with Harper's investment, Palatine Park District contributed $55,000 and Fluke Manufacturing added an additional $5,000. A combined total of $100,000 was spent for what now has become a headache to many.

Morning and evening rush hours are backed up as much or even more than before. Motorists often wait in traffic for up to three cycles before they can get through the intersection.

Some students are trying to avoid this entrance all together. "I'm better off using the Roselle Road entrance. This light has made me late for many classes," added Michelle Koteki, student.

The Cook County Highway Department is currently aware of the problem and hopes to have it alleviated soon.

Students and faculty have raised concerns that Public Safety should have control of these lights, or be able to direct traffic during peak hours.

Public Safety was in favor of the construction of the new traffic signals and hoped it would resolve the problem of officers directing traffic at the entrance.

Until a solution is made, it's suggested that students try alternate routes for coming into the campus.

New lab fees

By Chris Boghosian
Staff Writer

The Board of Trustees approved a fee schedule for the 1989-1990 academic year that will increase the cost of lab fees in certain departments at their montly meeting Thursday. The increases will bring an additional $10,000 in college revenue.

All or some of the lab courses in automation, computer science, data processing, ESL, horticulture, and physical education will see a large raise($10 or more) in feel. Lab courses in architectural technology, biology, dental hygiene, engineering, electronics, mechanical engeneering technology, and nursing will see a slight increaseless than $10) in some classes.

The board also approved sabbatical leaves for faculty during the 1989-1990 year for faculty members that asked to be granted the leaves.

Dennis Brennen, Cecilia Cooper, Randy Illg, Larry King, Patricia Smith-Pierce, and Joseph Yohanan will be granted their requested leaves.

Women Make History

Women in history

Harper College will hold the tenth Annual Celebration of Women's History Week during the week of March 6-10.

Women's History Week was established by Congress to recognize women in the labor union. It coincides with International Women's Day on March 8.

In 1988, Women's History Week officially became Women's History Month and is observed by schools and communities.

Coordinator of Women's Program Rena Trevor stated, "Our main focus is to go back and recognize women who have been written out of history. The efforts of these women deserve recognition because of its effects on present influences on men and women."

Some of the programs to be addressed are the women in arts, fashion, job status and child care. In addition, the founder of Hull House and a Noble Peace Prize winner, Jane Addams will be portrayed.

"Women's History Week has grown into a tradition and has become part of our past and present lives in history," added Trevor.

Philosopher attracts sell-out crowd

By Alisa Chisland
Features Editor

People came from miles around to listen to 85-year-old Philosopher Mortimer J. Adler speak about educational reform. Patrons endured long lines outside the Harper College theatre trying to get a glimpse of the man, known to many as "America's Tutor".

Adler lectured to a sold-out audience which included community members, staff, faculty, and students from philosophy, communication, and anthropology classes at Harper College, and Chicago's Lane Technical High School.

Adler's lecture, "Great Books, Democracy, and Truth" focused on the ideas presented in his 45th book entitled Reforming Education: The Opening of the American Mind. The book, which will be published in March, is a collection of essays discussing the reformation of education over the last 50 years.

Adler believes in the dialectical method of teaching. Students learn when presented with information in a question/answer format with an accompanying discussion. Students need to think about the answers, determine the validity, redirect questions, and apply what they have learned.

He thinks the doctrinal method of teaching is ineffective. The doctrinal method enables the teacher to "make disciples of his students". They memorize what the teacher believes, but are not encouraged to think for themselves.

Adler said students need to learn to read and think critically. One way is to study "great books". It is essential to examine the basic truths and contradictions in these books to truly learn. Adler added, "For every truth, understanding all the errors it refutes is indispensable."

Adler stressed that one's education begins after school. "College does not prepare students for the real world." They are introduced to life in the classroom, but not to what they may encounter once they enter the world of work.

Adler said, "A good book is

First international study program in Canterbury offered

By Alisa Chisland
Features Editor

Would you like to study abroad? You've got a chance to be a part of the first International Studies group to attend Christ Church College in Canterbury, England.

Christ Church College is a 25-year-old institution situated in central Canterbury, one block from the ancient City Wall, and three blocks from Canterbury Cathedral.

All students who enroll in the program have an opportunity to use the Christ Church College facilities, participate in club activities, tours, field trips, and use the student travel options from Canterbury's University of Kent.

According to the Illinois Consortium for International Studies and Programs, an organization established to promote international education for community college students, "Canterbury is a picturesque city of 34,000, located in Kent County, England, an hour and a half from London by train. Famous as the destination for Chaucer's 14th-century pilgrims, the city dates to Roman times. Landmarks in the city include portions of the old Roman wall and the historic Cathedral where 12th-century Archbishop Thomas Becket was murdered."

In the past, Harper College students had an opportunity to study in London, England. They lived and studied in dormatories with other American students, and were taught by mostly American instructors. Students did not have an opportunity to attend classes at a British institution.

This year, students will be immersed in British culture daily;

•They will be taking classes at Christ Church College, a British institution, in Canterbury, England.

•They will be taught primarily by British instructors.

•They will be going to school with British students.

•They will be living with British families.

Students may apply for the Canterbury Study Program after completion of 15 credit hours of college-level work with at least a 2.75 grade point average (on a 4-point scale).

Students need to:

•Obtain application forms in F313.

•Turn in completed forms, letters of recommendation, physician's statements of good health, and a deposit of $800 by May 1. The balance of the fees is due by July 15.

•Register for Canterbury classes at Harper College.

Students can enroll for 12 credit hours from the following course selections: British Culture & Society, Survey of British Literature I, Poetry, Prose/Drama, Survey of British History I, Study of History, Art Appreciation, Art History, Drawing-Intermediate/Advanced, World Religions, Educational Psychology, and World Regional Geography.

Any students may apply for financial aid for their semester abroad. "All the financial aid programs offered at Harper are available for International Studies," said Martin Ryan, dean of liberal arts.

Two $500 scholarships, The Board of Trustees International Studies Scholarship and The Wheeling Rotary International Club Scholarship, are available to eligible students. One of each scholarship is awarded per semester.

The basic cost for the Canterbury Program, approximately $3310, includes room and board, instructional costs, and related field trips. The estimated cost for tuition, fees and personal expenses is $1600. Airfare is expected to cost about $650. These costs may change due to fluctuation in airfares and currency exchange rates.

Students participating in the Fall 1989 program will leave Chicago the second week in September, and return the third week in December.

"I'm very excited about the Canterbury Program," said Ryan. "Students will be receiving first-rate instruction in a fine British institution. They have a terrific opportunity to broaden their understanding of other people in the world and their cultures."

Last semester, Rosie Vivers, a second semester liberal arts sophomore, from Hanover Park, participated in the London Study Abroad Program. "I have wanted to go to London since I was a junior in high school. Through my studies abroad I learned a lot about myself, royalty, and people from different cultures. I made a lot of close friends and became more independent."

Graduate student teaches ESL to the deaf

By Chris Boghosian
Staff Writer

Teaching English as a Second Language (ESL) presents a challenge the instructor attempts to instill correct grammar and reading and writing skills in students who have little or no knowledge of the English language and have a variety of cultural backgrounds.

Add to this the fact that the students are deaf, and the teacher's task becomes seemingly impossible.

Dynnelle Kozlowski, a graduate student at the School for International Training in Brattleboro, Vermont, speaks seven languages, either partially or fluently. Among them is American Sign Language (ASL).

Kozlowski is currently teaching English as a Second Language through ASL at Harper on an internship from her Vermont school. She teaches five courses (two reading classes, two grammar classes, and a writing class) to deaf students in the ESL program. Also, she instructs hearing ESL students in different classes each week.

Dynnelle, who is staying with a family in Barrington, was born in California, but did not live there long. "My father is in the military, so I have done a lot of moving," Kozlowski said. "I've lived in 20 different places throughout my life, including up and down the coasts (of the U.S.), Japan, Switzerland, and Greece."

Her first move to a foreign country, Japan, came in 1974. She lived there for two years, and during that time, learned her first foreign language.

"Although I went to an English speaking school, I learned how to speak Japanese," Kozlowski said. "I never studied it, though. I picked it up from being around the Japanese people so much."

Her next move to a foreign country came six years later, when she traveled to Somerland to study German as an exchange student.

Within the next few years, she learned French and Spanish, mainly because she transferred from school to school (because she moved so frequently) and each new school asked her to learn a new language.

Dynnelle's parents now live in Greece, so she started to learn the language, and last semester, she studied Russian and plans to continue studying next semester.

But between learning Greek and Russian, Kozlowski discovered and mastered American Sign Language. She explained: "I was working for the government and got a new co-worker (Karen) who was deaf. Through working with Karen all day, every day, I learned to speak with her through signing."

Since then, Dynnelle has been very active in the deaf community. At first, I was active socially. Then I became active through tutoring, teaching, working, and helping with activities," said Kozlowski.

As a graduate student in Vermont, Kozlowski is required to teach between 64 and 150 hours in a period of eight weeks to earn her masters degree in ESL. Her particular field, teaching ESL to the deaf, is offered at only four colleges across the nation (a school in Arizona, New York, Washington D.C., and Harper). Kozlowski chose Harper.

"Arizona is too far away (from Vermont), and between the other three, Harper was the only one that fit into my schedule," she said.

Dynnelle began teaching here at the start of the semester and will continue to teach until midterm, March 16. "After that," she said, "I'm going back to graduate school in Vermont. I finish school this spring and have another internship this summer at Gallaudet University in Washington D.C., and then I hope to find a job teaching ESL to the deaf."

Dynnelle enjoys ASL more than her other languages. "I feel very comfortable in the culture," she said. "I really enjoyed learning the language while I was in the community."

She believes that affects the way she teaches. "I try to make class more interesting by putting students together in groups to work with one another," concluded Kozlowski.

HEALTH CORNER: Mammography at Harper

Nine out of ten women will not get breast cancer.

However, there is no way to determine which women will be among the fortunate nine. All women can take steps to detect breast cancer in the early stage--when the prognosis is best, and the treatment is most successful.

Mammography, a painless, low exposure X-ray, can detect breast cancer years before you or your doctor can feel it--usually while it is still localized, and has a high cure rate. It is recommended that women have their first mammogram between the ages of 35-40, periodically every year or two between the ages of 40-50, and annually after 50.

Diagnostic Services Incorporated's Early Detection Mobile Clinic will be on campus to provide mammography X-rays on the following dates and times: Saturday, March 11 from 8:00 a.m. to 1:00 p.m., Monday, March 13 from 7:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., Tuesday, March 14 from 7:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Wednesday, March 15 from 10:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. Thursday, March 16 from 10:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m., Friday, March 17 from 7:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., Saturday, March 18 from 8:00 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Scheduled patients will enter the mobile unit, change into an examination gown, and be directed into one of the examination rooms. A technician will perform the mammography, and answer any questions. Participants will learn how to perform the monthly breast self-examination--a lifesaving procedure that detects 90% of the breast cancers. The mammography procedure takes approximately 15 minutes.

A qualified radiologist will interpret the X-rays, and send a written report to your physician within two weeks.

The mammography is available to you, your family and community members at the reduced cost of $60.00. For further information or to schedule a diagnostic examination, call Diagnostic Services Incorporated at 438-2156.

Breast cancer is still a frightening subject. But not as much as it used to be. Progress is being made every day in early detection, diagnosis, treatment and breast reconstruction. Don't let fear hurt your chances for a long and healthy life. Remember, the earlier that breast cancer is detected, the better the outcome.

Letter to the Edtior

The land of pop and metal

Mr. Steve Hill,

I'm writing this letter to request that your music column devote more time to heavy metal music. It seems to me that you are avoiding this category all together, writing no feature articles, no record reviews, and no concert information on metal bands coming to town. I don't see how you can ignore popular metal bands like Metallica, Guns N Roses, and Tesla. These bands are taking a larger share of the market and concert grosses than the two washed up bands you have featured in the last two issues. Pink Floyd has been washed up ever since Roger Waters left and THE FIXX had their brief moment in the sun in 1984. Both bands have since past their creative peak.

I don't know if it is your personal favorites you are reviewing, suggestions of your friends, or that your editor or yourself do not like the negative image of the music.

But a good journalist knows what its readers want and if you follow music as closely as I do, you would realize that to ignore the majority is wrong. All you have to do is look at the top 100 albums in the country and dial MTV to know that it has a large portion of the audience. Even the metal underground is extensive with bands like Anthrax, Tattoo, and Faster Pussycat that deserve mention.

Let's not have a journalistic blackout on heavy metal like Rolling Stone had and still has to this day on one of the greatest bands in history, LED ZEPPELIN. The critics of this magazine 'slagged' their albums and ignored them when they were breaking attendance records on their sold out tours. I would think it in really poor taste if some of the best bands around today were being ignored in the same way, and I believe they are being ignored by this column.

The point I'm making here is, a metal fan is not some person with long hair and no brain. Heavy metal is appealing more and more to the average person.

I think the Harbinger should be appealing to this and not the dated bands who have no future. I'm not saying turn your column into a heavy metal column, but everyone deserves a say, every type of music from New Age Jazz to heavy metal. Metal has suffered the most from this type of censorship, and I don't know where to put the blame on your editing staff or on your writing staff.

Someone is not using an open mind toward this column. If you are the cause of this I would hope you would open your mind because to continue this way is wrong. I am just using my first amendment rights toward an issue that I think is wrong. I hope you change your column or I will keep up until someone listens, because this type of journalism is for people who make careers writing 'how to' or 'recipe' books.

So lets have an open forum and not what you want, ok? Thanks for your time "and remember the song remains the same." (Led Zeppelin)

Editorial Response

'And Justice for All'

Dear Mr. Jason:

Thanks for reading the Harbinger and expressing your opinion.

The decision as to which music will be reviewed is made by the writer who is willing to devote his/her time and not a question of censorship. Steve Hill reviews albums that he purchases out of his own pocket; the Harbinger does not reimburse or fund him in any way.

Hill selects music from the top "College Music Chart". Our readership survey validates his selection, but by no means dictates it. However, we recognize that there is a heavy metal audience as well.

Since you have specified an interest in heavy metal, you may be more informed than either Mr. Hill or ourselves. We would like to invite you to submit reviews of your favorite groups to help incorporate variation in the Harbinger. We, too, are interested in some variation.

Steve Hill is one of the most professional writers to have been affiliated with the Harbinger. He is a welcome addition to our staff.

Sincerely,

Trudy Herbst — Managing Editor

The Political Perspective

What government is worse than South Africa's?

By Mike Watson
Staff Columnist

In the past few years we have heard the outrage unleashed against South Africa for its abuses of civil liberties that are part of the apartheid system. We have heard college students advocating economic sanctions, musicians bonding together and making 'principled' stands against performing in Sun City, and politicians denouncing apartheid with an emotional fervor. We have heard Americans voicing their beliefs of freedom and liberty.

But what if I told you there is a nation whose abuses of civil liberties and human rights make South Africa look like a staunch defender of freedom? A nation where forced labor camps, executions without trial, torture chambers, wholesale slaughter, secret police and armed border guards are the norm. And what if I told you that college students are advocating 'cultural exchange' with this nation, that musicians are scrambling to perform there, and that our political leaders are blatantly ignoring these crimes and are demanding 'substantive dialogues' with these murderers? Would you be outraged and demand the same treatment of this nation as that we have given South Africa? Or would you be one of the many Americans who find it almost fashionable to profess admiration for the Soviet Union and Mr. Gorbachev.

Yes, the nation I have spoken of is the Soviet Union, and it is a nation where the bullet ridden bodies of escaping citizens are entangled on the barbed wire at the borders and where the average citizen lives under the oppression of the iron fist of the ruling elite.

What concerns me is that America has been fooled by a velvet glove placed over a fist.

We have listened to Mr Gorbachev's rhetoric about his 'Madison Avenue' style, while forgetting he is the product of the same political order that produced men like Stalin. We have allowed his wife to shop at Bloomingdale's while ignoring the fact that the Soviets continue to occupy Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and other Eastern European nations at the expense of the freedom of those sovereign people. We have allowed a few choice words by Mr. Gorbachev to wipe out the existence of the Berlin Wall and all it was built for. We have blurred the distinctions between freedom and totalitarianism and have made a compromise that can only be detrimental to our freedom.

The Soviets' philosophical basis is diametrically opposed to our own and any sanctioning of that government is tantamount to treason against America and the freedom we stand for. We need to act on the same principle we acted on when we condemned South Africa and we need to make clear our opposition to the Soviet system.

In keeping with these ideas we should advocate a complete economic boycott of the U.S.S.R., end all cultural exchange, withdraw our embassies, engage in no substantive dialogues, allow no visits to the U.S. of any representatives of that nation, and allow no U.S. business to sell products to the Soviet Union.

I am tired of our reprehensible quest to befriend the leader of the most murderous nation in the twentieth century and am angered by the lack of protest against the Soviet Union.

Only until we see the Soviets fully uphold civil liberties and freedoms, withdraw from Eastern Europe, free the political prisoners and dismantle the Berlin Wall do we have any reason to hold substantive dialogues with them. Until then we should tell them we have nothing to discuss and that we will be on our guard against them.

News Briefs of the college music scene

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

The first two months of 1989 have been pretty good as far as music goes, but there always comes a time when we have a slow week with nothing to review. (Either that or your reviewer couldn't afford to buy anything new.) So, to fill in for this week, I've rounded up some bits of news relating to the college-oriented music world.

Love And Rockets recently released a 4-track 12" EP entitled Motorcycle. The four songs all have a related theme- motorcycles. Featured are Motorcycle, I Feel Speed, Bike, and the 12 minute dance track Bikedance. Daniel Ash, David J and Kevin Haskins will be releasing their follow-up to Earth Sun Moon in August.

Last week saw the release of XTC's Mayor of Simpleton single which precedes the release of their LP Oranges and Lemons, scheduled to hit the racks this week. Pre-release publicity is very promising for this double studio album. Andy Partridge seems to be more satisfied with the production of this album then the job done by Todd Rundgren for XTC's last album Skylarking.

A second pressing of The Timelords' popular Doctorin' the Tardis 3-inch CD is different than the first pressing but has the same catalog number, which may make copies of the first pressing collectors items. The first pressing contained the 7" mix, the dub mix, and the hideous Gary Glitter collaboration Gary in the Tardis, where as the new pressing has the 12" dance mix in place of the shorter dub mix.

Former Smiths guitarist Johnny Marr has joined Matt Johnson for the next The The album, due out soon. The album, record number three for The The, will be called The Beaten Generation. Meanwhile, Marr's former bandmate Morrissey recently released his new single.

The next Cure LP Disintegration has been slated for release early this summer, along with the long awaited third album by Tears For Fears (their last album is now four years old) Kate Bush's next album is also expected very soon.

New Order's Technique (reviewed here three weeks ago) entered the UK album charts at number one and has been shooting up on the US charts. The album will easily become New Order's Biggest success, and deservedly so.

Chicagoan Steve Albini's (formerly of Big Black) latest band Rapeman has been dissolved following disputes over the band name. Apparently even the group's record label wasn't getting along with them and were quite happy to see them leave.

The new Depeche Mode single was just released in the UK. It's a live version of Everything Counts and is taken from their upcoming double live album entitled 101. The album was recorded at the Pasadena Rose Bowl in Los Angeles and will be released on March 13. It will feature 17 tracks plus three more on the CD version.

The new single off of End of the Millennium Psychosis Blues by That Petrol Emotion is a lesser remix of Groove Check, backed with a new song Chemistry and two live tracks. The band will make a Chicago appearance at Cabaret Metro on March 24 which is highly recommended by this reviewer.

Finally, although there's no word on the release of the next album by the Rainmakers, Bob Walkenhorst has said that he would like to call the album Purify but the other guys in the band weren't so keen on the idea. Here's hoping that by the time we find out, they'll be playing another show here at Harper. Time will tell. . .

Controversy at the Grammies

By Jamie Berson
Staff Writer

Controversy surrounded the announcement of the winner of this year's Grammy for best heavy metal performance. The nominees were: Metallica, AC/DC, Iggy Pop, Jethro Tull and James Addiction.

And the winner is: Jethro Tull for Crest Of A Knave.

Despite the academy's choice the crowd was more than set on Metallica's And Justice For All. When Jethro Tull was announced as the recipient, silence fell over the crowd.

Metallica was fortunate enough to gain national exposure early on in the program. They performed their current single,

The following day on Jonathan Brandmeier's "radio showgram", on the Loop FM98, many listeners called in to express their dismay toward the choice for the Grammy. Apparently, Jethro Tull is not the people's choice.

With all of this mind I am left some questions. Is Jethro Tull really qualified to be considered for a heavy metal award? What is the criteria involved in deciding? Who made the decision and why?

In my opinion Metallica deserved that award and should be recognized for the talent they display. To all the Metallica fans out there--And the winner is really is. . . Metallica for And Justice For All!

Circus Of Power Rocks

By Jamie Beeson
Staff Writer

Circus Of Power was literally tearing up the New York night club scene until RCA signed them quicker than a Dwight Gooden fast ball.

Circus Of Power's members are: vocalist Alex Mitchell, Gary Sunshine on rhythm guitar, Ricky Beck Mahler on lead guitar, Ryan Mahler on drums, and newly added Zowie on the bass.

Circus Of Power, the blues-like, hard rocking band, is slowly making their way up the charts. Their two videos, Call of the Wild and Motor are certainly adding to their chances for success.

If you enjoy a full guitar attack, then Circus Of Power is the way to go. Their sound isn't exactly a new thing, but they have some fantastic rhythms. Their lyrics are centered around two things, cars and women. In a recent interview, vocalist Mitchell described the band as "a tribe divided personality-wise. A controlled state of chaos."

Two standouts on the band's self-titled, debut album are Crazy and Machine Crazy was originally written and performed by Iggy Pop. Machine has a catchy sound, so catchy that a portion of the song is featured in the new Tom Hanks movie, The Burbs.

Some other titles from the album include: White Trash Queen, Needles, Heart Attack and Back Seat Mama.

Circus Of Power has charisma. The group enjoys the craziness of playing live, and love tattoos and Harleys. They are already working on a second album. They are a "what you see, is what you get" type of band. They may not be pretty, but they deliver.

Yello's 'Flag' flies at half mast

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

You've heard of Yello, whether you know it or not. Have you seen Ferris Bueller's Day Off? How about The Secret of My Success? Both of these movies feature Yello's Oh Yeah very conspicuously, and it's a very memorable song. I've heard the song ripped off on television commercials too.

That particular song appeared on Yello's last album release One Second. The album was wonderfully varied in texture and sound. It featured frantic guitars one moment and vocals by Shirley Bassey the next. Oh Yeah is just one of the many highlights of the album.

The quality of One Second makes the new Yello LP Flag even more disappointing. I should mention that I haven't heard any of Yello's older albums, so One Second may have been a fluke of sorts.

Flag starts off with Tied Up, a six minute Latin-tinged Pandora's box of drumbeats and sound effects. I've tried very hard to enjoy this song, but I just can't seem to do so. Unfortunately, there are two more versions of Tied Up appearing later on the album. They are Tied Up In Red, which is over eight minutes, and Tied Up In Gear, which closes the LP.

The Race, the phenomenally popular dance hit in Europe, makes an appearance as track five in its eight minute version. It's not too bad, but hardly instantly memorable. At least it's easier to enjoy than Tied Up.

That leaves only five more songs. Alhambra is another of Boris Blank's excursions into foreign musical styles set to a dance beat, and this time to the middle east. Blank makes up half of Yello. He writes and performs the music with help from session musicians. The other half of Yello is Dieter Meier, who writes lyrics and performs most of the vocals.

Meier's vocals provide the one shining moment on the record during the track Of Course I'm Lying. It's a surprisingly gentle and beautiful song. More songs like this would make the album better, but it would undoubtedly change the mood that Yello seems to want to create.

I can't really recommend this album very highly. Perhaps I'm being too hard on it because of my initial disappointment. Then again, perhaps not. People who are already Yello fans will want to get a hold of a copy, though. Actually, they will probably already have since it has been available as an import for several months.

For first time buyers, however; go for their first effort, One Second. It should have been a shade of greatness to come on Flag, but is more like a ghost of what Flag might have been.

Bureaucratic body prevails over simple common sense

Last Thursday I received a copy of the following memorandum:

To: All Administration, Faculty, and Staff
From: The Environment Health and Safety Committee (E.H.S.C.)
Date: January 26, 1989

The E.H.S.C. has received some concerns about the use of food and drink in classrooms, lecture halls, and lab facilities, etc. These concerns address the problem of safety, health, sanitary conditions, and custodial difficulties. There is no current policy covering this problem. The E.H.S.C. is considering recommending a policy that would address this situation. At this time, we would appreciate your cooperation in restricting the use of food and drink in classroom situations and direct students to appropriate disposal facilities outside classrooms, in the cafeteria, and vending machine areas.

Once again a bureaucratic body is creating policy where common sense should prevail.

The E.H.S.C. members include Chairman Randolph Illg, faculty, staff, administrators and two representatives from the Student Senate.

Rather than sit on hearsay to get answers for my questions, I decided to request copies of the last four months' minutes. This is where I ran into a brick wall.

When asked for minutes, typical answers were: "I've only been on the committee for two months." "I was at two of the last four meetings." (for legitimate reasons) "I don't keep them." "I can't release them without my boss' permission."

One person, Mr. Carl Butterfield, was willing to release them. When I went to pick up the promised copy from his secretary, another physical plant secretary told me "I already told you. You can't have a copy. You'll have to wait until Monday when Mr. King and his secretary are in the office."

Enough of the "he said; she said." The bottom line is the minutes are not available, because "it is an internal management committee," explained Director of College Relations Elaine Stoermer, and not a matter of public record.

I would have understood the denial if the minutes contained personnel action and portions needed to be withheld, but this was not the case. After I contacted the Attorney General's Office, I decided to request the minutes in writing based on the Illinois Freedom of Information and Open Meeting Acts. (Those who attended the Adler presentation can imagine my thoughts during Dr. Stone's introduction, when he said, "There are ayatollahs of the mind everywhere--even on college campuses.")

Back to the trash. Personally, I would not care to eat a sandwich while my professor is lecturing. I did once, and was very uncomfortable. (Sorry, Dr. Stewart.)

Chemistry students know the strict rules about food in laboratories. As a former biology student I wouldn't eat a peanut butter cup during a frog dissection or human anatomy.

Rules about drinks in computer labs or art classes where spilled coffee might ruin valuable equipment or someone's semester project are certainly understandable.

But is this a matter for our policy books? Doesn't faculty have the right to control classroom behavior in this matter, just as they can establish attendance policy, ask a student to leave the classroom for inappropriate behavior, or ask a student not to return to class for excessive tardies?

Are ants, roaches or rodents the reason for committee action? We most certainly have prejudiced campus critters, which only attack students' trash in classrooms and not the faculty, administrators or staff's trash in their offices.

Is someone making a mountain out of a mole hill (a garbage dump out of a trash can)?

How clean are classrooms at the end of the day? After surveying many classrooms, I was favorably impressed: eight classrooms (not laboratories) were spotless; six classrooms had either a paper cup or pop can left on a desk; four classrooms had either a pop can or paper cup, candy wrapper and newspapers on tables; and three classrooms had newspapers. In one lecture hall I found: 8 cups and cans, 2 candy wrappers, one overflowing, regulation-sized trash can, and one half-filled paper bag! Maybe a classroom that holds over 100 students for 13 hours requires a larger garbage receptacle.

Did you personally visit classrooms in several buildings at the end of the day prior to formulation of this memorandum?

Only one of the ten members (Charlie Hearn) contacted actually visited classrooms and "found food, coke cans and paper cups on the floor." I was not able to reach the remaining three members for comment.

The crux of my complaint is that I would not like to be found in a classroom for 2-1/2 hours without a beverage, and I can't imagine a "dry" employee meeting either.

Committee members, is this the best solution to the problem? Students, let's clean up--do you like the the alternatives.

For all these reasons, I challenge this committee to approach trash in a constructive way through a recycling program that would benefit the environmental health of the Harper community. In other words, let's put the trash where it belongs (in the garbage can) and get on with higher education.

Harper sponsors speech tournament

By Tari Vaughn
Upcoming Editor

Approximately 16 teams will be competing this weekend at The Tenth Annual Harper College Novice Speech Tournament. The meet will be in J Building, and begins with registration at 8 a.m., rounds starting at 9 a.m. Awards will be presented by Jeanne Pankanin at 5:30 p.m. in room J143.

The teams will be offered a choice of eight events. These events are Poetry Reading, Prose Reading, Dramatic Interpretation, Duet Acting, Persuasive Speaking, Informative Speaking, Impromptu Speaking, and Speech to Entertain. Students may choose up to four events to compete in.

The competitions will have the opportunity to speak twice in preliminary rounds. The top six will then advance to a final round. There the tournament winners are determined. Trophies will be awarded for first through sixth place in each individual event, individual sweepstakes, and team sweepstakes.

The preparation process for hosting a tournament takes literally, months. The host team must first decide which events to offer, then establish the rules and guidelines for each event. Then, invitations must be mailed, trophies bought, judges hired, food services arranged, and room reservations made far in advance.

The week of the tournament, the host must be available to take information about the entrants from the competing schools. Once the entries are received, the scheduling begins. Speakers, judges, and timekeepers all have to be scheduled to specific rooms and times. The final step is organizing the tab room so the winners can be determined.

After all the mailing, arranging, organizing, and planning, the final step is to "Pray that nothing goes wrong," according to Marcia Litrenta, Harper's Speech Team Coach.

Litrenta explains that Harper's tournament is special because a number of schools that don't normally have speech teams are invited. She says "It's a good experience for not only Harper students, but also other schools. They can see what speech team is all about."

As far as the preparation progress goes, Litrenta comments, "It looks like everything is running smoothly. I'm getting a lot of backing from the students, staff, and administration. I really appreciate all the support we're getting."

Litrenta encourages interested students, staff, or community members to stop by. For more information, contact her at 397-3000, ext. 2584.

Foreign Language Week

By Dave Rehman
Staff Writer

Guten Tag! Wie gehts? How many times have you said "I wish I could speak another language." For those students going on to four year colleges, have you looked into the foreign language requirements for the school you are planning to attend?

Good news--Harper College's Foreign Language Division is going to give you a chance to see what they have to offer. March 5-12 has been designated as Foreign Language Week.

Starting the festive week off, the German Department will be showing the movie Das Boot II. It will be shown Monday at 12:30 p.m. in F326. Also, at 2:00 p.m. Monday in F327, the Spanish Department will be showing El Norte. The fun doesn't stop there. On Tuesday at 1:30 p.m., in F325, there will be demonstrations of German and French folk dances. For the grand finale, you have the choice of seeing two fine French movies in F325. The first at 12:30 p.m. will be Les Comperes and, at 2:30 p.m. the final movie of the week will be La Marseillaise. All movies will have subtitles for your convenience.

According to Mr. Meier, Foreign Language Division Head, "Requirements for languages are slowly coming back in. One reason for this is the need for people who can speak foreign languages in the business community. For a business to stay competitive in today's international market, they need people that can communicate throughout the world." Mr Meier also related that, Harper College also offers programs to study abroad. One of these programs allows students to study in Salzburg, Austria which is an excellent experience.

Come out and see what is offered at Harper. If you can make any of the events but have questions, feel free to contact anyone in the Foreign Language Department at ext. 3284.

Steroids: A Dangerous Game

By Chris Boghosian
Staff Writer

Success and fame.

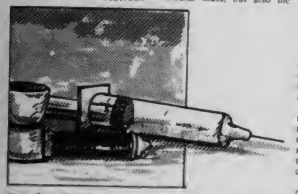

Competition in virtually any profession puts intense pressure on employees to be more efficient and employers to "win at any cost."

Athletes will take anything or do anything to become the biggest, the strongest, or the fastest.

Success and fame.

Ben Johnson became the fastest man in the world last October by beating Carl Lewis in the 100-meter dash at the 1988 Summer Olympics in Seoul, South Korea.

Television stations everywhere showed replays of Johnson's winning race. For one brief moment, Ben Johnson was at the top of the world.

Less than 24 hours later, Johnson was stripped of his Olympic gold medal after traces of an anabolic steroid were found in his urine. Johnson used steroids to run faster--to help him win.

What are these supposed performance-enhancing drugs, and why do athletes use and abuse them?

Anabolic steroids are a group of powerful compounds that are closely related to the male sex hormone testosterone. These artificial substances were developed in the 1930's originally to help men whose bodies produced inadequate amounts of the natural hormone that is responsible for the development of masculine characteristics occurring at puberty.

The only legal way to obtain steroids is through a doctor's prescription. Some medical practices utilize steroids legally, such as in treatment for severe burn victims, organ transplants, and massive traumas.

Dr. Bates Noble, the director of the Fox Valley Sports Medicine Center in Barrington, Ill., and former team doctor for the Chicago Bulls, stated that steroids are very easy to obtain.

"There is a huge underground market for steroids," Noble said. "People smuggle the steroids in from foreign countries and make them readily available and easily accessible."

Athletes use steroids for an edge, both physically and mentally. Not only does the athlete gain body weight and muscular mass, but also the attitude that he/she is unbeatable.

Athletes who use steroids in conjunction with a weight-training program can be identified by their quick muscle and weight gains. Other signs that may signal steroid use are behavioral changes, particularly increased aggression and combativeness.

"An athlete will start seeing results in a very short time--usually within a month after beginning the cycle," continued Noble.

Once the user notices the quick results, he/she may increase the dosage of the drug with the attitude that "if this many pills makes me look this big and be this strong, then twice the amount will make me look twice as big and be twice as strong."

And once an athlete begins taking steroids, it is very difficult to stop. "The appearance and performance of the athlete drops after he discontinues using these drugs," said Noble. "When an athlete realizes these drops, he becomes depressed and his body becomes floppy, so he begins another cycle."

Although the short-term effects of steroids are favorable to athletes, many possible side effects make their use dangerous.

Athletes using these drugs subject themselves to more than 70 side effects ranging in severity from liver cancer to acne and encompassing psychological as well as physical reactions.

The parts of the body that are most seriously affected by steroids are the liver and the cardiovascular and reproductive systems.

In males, steroids can cause withered testicles, sterility, and impotence. In females, irreversable masculine traits can develop, along with menstrual irregularities, breast reduction, and sterility.

Psychological effects in both sexes include aggressive, combative behavior and depression, and some side effects may not show up for years, such as heart attacks and strokes.

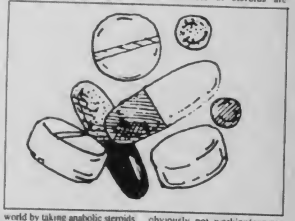

For years, educators in the medical field have been warning the public about these possible negative effects, and many sports now include mandatory drug testing for athletes in competition.

Johnson's case is one of dozens of example of an athlete's disqualificationn from competition. In a January 22, Chicago Tribune article by Skip Myslenski, Dr. Robert Voy, the chief medical officer of the U.S. Olympic Committee(USOC), talked about Johnson's incident.

"The result of that incident--as far as the administrators of sport and the general lay public are concerned--was positive in that it focused attention on steroid abuse in sport, said Voy.

'But from the standpoint of deterring use among athletes, it probably had a very negative effect since it demonstrated that you can excel and not only be a champion, but the world record holder and the fastest man in the world by taking anabolic steroids. That's a very damaging message."

Why, then, do athletes still use steroids, even though they realize the possible life-threatening side effects?

"The athletes have a sense of invulnerability," said Noble. "They are a very risk-taking group. Also, they do not trust the authoritative figures.

"The evidence(of the side effects) is mostly anecdotal, taken from past steroid user's experiences," continued Noble. "It would be unethical to do scientific studies on the effect of steroids, so there have not been any solid studies of their effects, and there probably will not be any in the future.

"Some evidence has come forward through the use of steroids for medical practices and from pathological conditions in which a person is born with a high level of certain hormones."

Since the "scare tactics" of teaching athletes the dangerous side effects of steroids are obviously not working(experts agree that steroid use now is more popular than ever before), Noble suggested an alternative plan.

"I think there should be a pervasive drug testing program for all competitive athletes to make competition equal for everyone," he explained. In this case, said Noble, any athlete that tests positive for illegal substances should be banned from competition for life.

Success and fame.

Athletes use steroids although they know of the possible results. They will do anything to win and believe they are indestructable.

If you play with steroids, you are in a dangerous game- a game with your life.

Hawks lose to Olive-Harvey

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

The Harper basketball season came to an end last Thursday night as they fell to Olive-Harvey, 98-65, in the first round of the NJCAA Region IV-Division II playoffs. The Hawks finished the year at 5-22.

The Hawks were able to make it a game for most of the first half as they had the ball, down 34-32, before turning the ball over. The host Panthers then went on a 14-5 run to take a comfortable 48-37 halftime lead.

Olive-Harvey dominated the second half by outscoring the Hawks 50-28.

"We had them there, then we turned the ball over when we had a chance to tie the game. Then, our defense caved in and it gradually became a blow-out," said Assistant Coach Lou Benedetto.

Leading the way for the Hawks was Travis Perry, who closed out his brilliant Harper career with 25 points. Jerome Hardrick added 18 points with 11 rebounds, and Donald Pierce contributed 10 points.

"Those three were very consistent throughout the whole game for us," Benedetto said.

The Panthers had six players in double figures, led by Robert Turnbow's 25 points, Byron Patterson's 18 points, and Walter Golliday's 15 points. Conrad Youngblood followed with 14, Keith Harvey had 12, and Dale Henning added 10.

Olive-Harvey(21-12) went on to qualify for the Region IV-Division II final four this evening at Triton where they will face number one Illinois Valley as they beat Wright 88-83 Saturday Afternoon as Turnbow scored 25 points.

Grapplers Finish Strong

Keith D'Mann executes the fireman carry on Eric Bakey.

By Jamie Beeson
Staff Writer

Mark Cecchi(177 lbs.) and Eric Bakey(158 lbs.) both had strong finishes at the regionals last weekend to qualify them for nationals at College of DuPage. Bakey won his weight class and Cecchi finished second.

Cecchi did a tremendous job at the nationals, winning two matches. Eventually, he was defeated by the third place finisher.

Coach Norm Lovelace commented, "In his two years, he consistently placed at tournaments. I certainly could count on Mark Cecchi to score points."

Bakey went all the way to quarter finals, where he was defeated by a 5-4 decision. His opponent was awarded two penalty points in the last 20 seconds.

Coach Lovelace said, "It was just one of those unfortunate calls. Bakey was as good as any kid there, but he just lost a close one."

Harper College hosted the 1989 Junior College Regional Wrestling Tournament. The team finished in fourth place behind Lincoln, DuPage and Triton Colleges.

The JC Region is one of the toughest regions in the country. Lincoln and DuPage both had a strong showing in the national tournament.

Our Harper grapplers finished the season on a high note. The wrestlers fought adversity from injuries and grade eligibilities to end the season strongly.

Harper won the DuPage Quads and the Harper Invitational. They placed fourth out of sixteen schools at the North Central Invite. Their greatest accomplishment of the season was ranking seventeenth in the nation.

Lady Hawks fall in section final, 67-65

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

Even if Highland won the section championship, the Lady Hawks also came out of it like winners.

Trailing 62-47 with 7:30 remaining, the Lady Hawks mounted a brilliant late second half rally, outscoring the Cougars 18-5 and shutting them out the last 4:52 only to fall at the end 67-65 in the NJCAA Region IV SectionTournamentChampionship game last Thursday afternoon in Freeport. The Lady Hawks finished the year at 14-15 while Highland (13-13) advanced to tomorrow night's Region IV tournament quarterfinal at Triton against Sauk Valley.

"It was the same type of finish like the Moraine (Valley) game; (February 9th at Moraine, where the Lady Hawks came back to lose only by 10, 74-64, after trailing by 23 early in the second half) every time we got behind, we came back. It was a good run, we just fell short at the end," Head Coach Tom Teschner said after the contest.

For the most part, the Cougars stayed a step ahead of Harper in the first half as their lead got as high as 10, and no closer than four as the Lady Hawks were forced to play catch-up from the outset. They trailed by six at halftime, 32-26.

"Their press did bother us. They also did a good job in preventing us from setting up our offense. We also didn't get much of a break either. We weren't able to bring Kim (Noonan) in because we were behind and needed to catch up," Teschner said.

Another factor in Highland's win was the fact that the Cougars held forwards Patty Canchola and Kellie Dennis to a combined six points after they scored a grand total of 27 points in Tuesday's section semi-final against Wright. "That really hurts," Teschner said.

They were able to close the gap to four, 34-30, before Highland went on a 10-3 run to bring the score up to 44-33 with 13:21 left. The Lady Hawks returned the favor by going on a 10-4 surge to get back to within five at 48-43 with 11:16 left. The Cougars then turned the ball over giving Harper a chance to cut the lead to three with 11:00 to go.

That's when Highland's Paula Davis intercepted a Monica Prerovsky inbounds pass and raced down the court to score on a lay-up making it 50-43. That triggered a 12-4 run which gave the hosts a 62-47 advantage with 8:07 remaining.

Still, the Lady Hawks didn't give in as they stormed back into the game as time ran out. After Angie Bowers scored the final Highland basket giving the Cougars a 67-55 lead with 4:52 left, Harper started their rally when Amy Koziol shortened the deficit to 10 at 67-57 when she hit both ends of a one-and-one with four and-a-half minutes left. Prerovsky cut it to six, 67-61, when she connected on back to back jumpers with 2:54 on the clock. Pascale O'Donoghue brought it to within four on a power move to the basket with 2:01 left making it 67-63.

Then the Lady Hawks may have blown their chance at a tie and possible win when O'Donoghue missed the front end of a one and one with 1:26 left and Prerovsky missed a three-point shot with a :43 seconds left. "It looked good to me from where I was at," Teschner said.

Finally, Harper was able to close the deficit to two when Koziol nailed down another one-and-one with :20 seconds left making it 67-65. Unfortunately, Highland was able to spread it out and virtually run the clock out as the Lady Hawks were unable to foul them until Koziol fouled the Cougars' Emily Katzenberger with one second left.

Katzenberger missed the front end of the one and the bonus but by the time Patty Canchola snared in the rebound, the clock started up and the second ran down to end the game.

Davis led Highland with 26 points while Koziol and O'Donoghue scored 24 points apiece including a school record 14 of 14 from the free throw line for Koziol. And for O'Donoghue, she closed a brilliant career off according to Teschner,"It was a great way for her to finish. We're gonna to miss her."

Chicago Sports Rap

By Chris Boghosian and Peter Soby

Kevin is on vacation this week, so we're going to write on the full spectrum of professional sports in Chicago.

In the NBA, the Central Division continues to be the most formidable in the league. Cleveland remains to be the dominant team in the division as well as the NBA, compiling a 41-12 record.

Although the Bulls(32-21) have won five out of their last six games, they still need to surpass Atlanta, Milwaukee and Detroit before they can even think about challenging the Cavaliers.

The Bulls' destiny lies in their own hands. They have the capability to beat those teams, as they demonstrated in beating the Bucks twice last week, but they also showed that they lack the consistency and stamina to overcome the also inconsistent Atlanta Hawks.

Speaking of inconsistent Chicago teams, how about the Blackhawks? After moving from the division cellar into second place, the Hawks had a chance to close the gap with first place Detroit last weekend in a home-and-home series.

But the Hawks blew it. On Saturday in Detroit, the Red Wings scored two short-handed goals enroute to a 5-0 victory over the Hawks.

In a chance for revenge the next day on their home ice, all the Hawks could do was tie Detroit, 4-4.

Although the Hawks are still in second place, only five points separate them with last place Toronto. The Hawks are skating on thin ice.

Speaking of thin ice, the snow is melting and spring is just around the corner.

The Cubs need to answer several questions this spring as they train in Mesa, Arizona. Who will back-up starting catcher Damon Berryhill? Who will fill the fifth spot in their starting rotation? Who will end up in the bullpen? And who will start in left and center fields?

The Sox, who spend their spring in Sarasota, Florida, are looking to Harold Baines, Greg Walker and Ron Kittle for power and leadership. Also, the Sox youngsters need to develop quickly to give the Sox any shot at a division title.

Harper's flasher has exposed himself in a second victim last Thursday evening at 6:53 p.m. The offense took place on the north side of campus near parking lot six.

The offender approached a white female student who was exiting her car. As she walked toward the man she noticed his resemblance to the flasher posters around campus. As she walked toward the campus she saw his trousers were down and his genitals exposed.

He then grabbed the woman.

"I started to scream, I was so scared, I thought he was going to rape me", stated the victim. The offender said nothing. She struggled to get free and ran into Building D where she called Public Safety, whom in response sent out two patrol cars.

She was brought in Public Safety to describe the offense and give a description of the offender.

The victim described the man as having an average build, 25-30 years old, 5'8"-6'0" tall. He was wearing a red ski jacket, dark trousers and dress shirt. He was also described as having a full beard and mustache, he was neatly groomed.

No new composite sketch was made of the offender since Public Safety believes it was the same man as in the February 13 incident.

Become a student trustee

By Marc J. Balke

It's time to elect a new student trustee.

Deadline for appticants interested in applying for student trustee is 2:00 p.m. Thursday, March 16.

The current student trustee, Laura Jacobson, hopes that many studenes will run for the position.

"Basically, the trustee represents the students at the board of trustees meetings, and voices student concerns," Jacobson stated.

Jacobson said that the position does not have any written rules and regulations. Each new student trustee must evaluate his/her goals for the term. The term begins April 14, 1989, and ends April 14, 1990.

One of Jacobsen's goals was to develop the S.C.I.Q. ( Student Concerns, Ideas and Questions) boxes which are situated at key points across the campus. "This allows me to hear the opinions of the students, and I'm able to respond to them personally." Jacobsen said.

Jacobson also is involved in other aspects of school government, such as the Student Senate, Clubs and Organizations Round Table, and the Program Board.

Jacobson said the basic sequence in getting something before the board is to take it to the student senate, which passes it along to the trustee who can bring it up at the next board meeting.

Criteria for applicants are: (1) be a registered Harper student with at least nine credit hours for each semester; (2) reside within the Harper College District 512, and (3) have not previously served as student trustee.

Students interested in the position must submit a completed "Declaration of Candidacy" to the Student Activities Office, Building A.

The election will be April 4 and 5. Students are encouraged to apply for the position and vote this April.

For further information, contact Student Activities Office, A336.

If you have any questions about the position, you may call current trustee, Laura Jacobson at extension 2242 or 2244.

Political Science Club visits state capitol

By Chris Boghosian
Staff Writer

Nine students from Harper's Political Science Club participated in the Model Illinois Government's (MIG's) Eleventh Annual Simulation last week in Springfield.

The event allowed students from several colleges throughout Illinois to act out the jobs of senators, representatives, lobbyists, or newspaper writers in the same manner as the actual officials.

"We were able to act, think, and do everything involved with the procedures of the government, said Jim Cabay, the treasurer of the Political Science Club.

"We worked on the actual floor of the House of Representatives and Senate chambers," Cabay said. "Also, we worked with bills and made changes or corrections in them."

The members of the club who traveled to the state capital last week were Jim Cabay, Mark James, Jim Nix, Sue McAvoy, Matt Lundeen, Bill Steele, John Fallaher, Ed Wallace and Todd Ruigleman.

Most people do not understand government," continued Cabay. "MIG is a great way to learn how the government works."

The Harper Speech Team captured the third place trophy at their meet last Saturday, March 4. The meet was hosted by Harper College, with 14 colleges and universities attending.

Rosemary Langer led the team by taking the first place individual sweepstakes trophy. She also placed third in Impromptu Speaking, and first in both Informative Speaking and Persuasive Speaking.

Cathy Machalski claimed the sixth place Informatuve Speaking and the third place Poetry Interpretation trophies. The fifth place Informative Speaking award went to Peter Lindstrom, while John Gardner won sixth place for Poetry Interpretation.

Other Harper students competing were Doug Ray, Elaine Conrad, Matt Behning, Keith Miller, Roger Biern, and Yousuf Hashim.

While the novice members of the team were busy competing, varsity members Linda Lang, Scott Neidl, and Tari Vaughn were there to help run the meet. The tournament ran smoothly as a result of the computer program designed by Lou Litrenta specifically for Harper's tournament.

Harper's team will travel to Highland Community College for the regional tournament on March 17 and 18. For more information, contact Marcia Litrenta at 397-3000, ext. 2944.

Mark James summed up the activity. "We learned hard-core politics first-hand."

As a result of arriving early, the students were able to listen to Governor Thompson's budget address and see many prominent state officials.

Cabaj and three other members of the club are planning a trip to Washington D.C., on March 20, where they expect to see and listen to President George Bush speak.

Lead speaker kicks off Women History Week

By Marc J. Balke
Staff Writer

Harper has just concluded its tenth annual celebration of Women's History Week.

The celebration that began Monday with a dinner and reception highlighted by guest speaker Martha W. Griffiths. Griffiths has been Lt. governor of Michigan since 1983, she was also U.S. representative from 1955-1975.

Griffiths discussed her historic role as a congressional sponsor of Title VII. This prohibits sex and discrimination in employment.

She also discussed her career in public service; she was the first woman member of congress, she serves as member of the powerful house ways, and means committee.

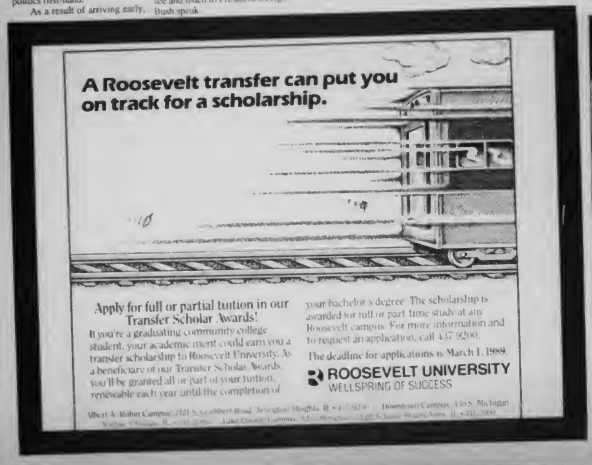

Griffiths has also served on many boards of directors, including Chrysler, Greyhound, and K-Mart.

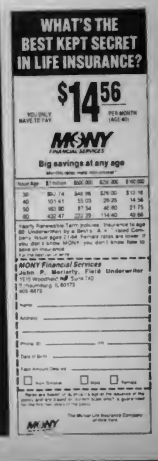

Other events during Women's History Week included, Women in the Arts: Literature and Music, Women Organizing: For Jobs, For Pay, For Child Care, and Women & Fashion: From Hat Pins to Haute Couture.

Women's History Week was first held in Sonoma County, California in 1978. One year later Harper College recognized Women's History Week, and has continued the tradition 10 years strong.

Response to the celebration was overwhelming, students and faculty learned of women who enriched our heritage and changed the way women are looked at today.

At the turn of the century, March 8th will be known as International Women's Day, a day of celebration and recognition for the contributions made in the labor movement for women, by women.

Explore Cape Cod this summer

By Alisa Chinlund

Search for humpback whales, discover salt marshes and sand dunes, or collect hermit and horseshoe crabs on the Atlantic seashore.

Be part of a select group of students to study the plant and animal life of the Boreal Coast.

Fifteen students will have a "once in a lifetime" opportunity to view the marine biology of Cape Cod, Massachusetts, during an intensive week-long field study taught by Associate Professor of Biology Jack Gallagher.

Field Biology (BIO 150), is a four credit-hour laboratory science course offered alternate summers by Harper College. It is open to mature students who have an 3.0 grade point average, a serious interest in ecology and field biology, enjoy independent work, and receive the instructor's consent.

According to Gallagher, this course is not for people who want to take a "ten-day vacation". It's for serious students who are interested in learning about marine life and are not afraid to do an intensive study.

The course concentrates on field identification, collection, and classification of marine animals and plants, as well as plant succession.

Students spend about 12 hours per day in the field," said Gallagher. "But they also have free time to spend at the beach, sightsee, or play trivial pursuit (science version)."

Introductory classes begin the first two weeks of June. The course includes a ten day trip by van to Cape Cod, June 16 through June 25. (However, students have the option of flying.) Participants will meet for a final wrap up session after the trip in order to answer additional questions and share ideas, photographs and memories.

Students will stay at a 75 year-old mansion at the Northeast Marine Environmental Institute (NEMEI), on a peninsula located at the gateway to the Cape.

NEMEI provides food, lodging and laboratory facilities for all participants.

Students attending the field study course will have an opportunity to visit mud flats, sand dunes, salt marshes, beaches, rocks, seashore, marine laboratories, and locales in the Cape Cod area such as Woods Hole Oceanography Institute, Massachusetts Audubon Society's Goose Pond Trail, Atlantic White Cedar Swamp Trail, and the National Fishery Service Aquarium.

The highlight of the trip is a four-hour whale watch excursion led by a naturalist from the Cetacean (whale) Research Center of the Center from Coastal Studies.

The cost for the course is $600, which includes transportation by van, food, lodging, tuition, lab fees, reference books, seven days at Cape Cod, and three days of travel. A deposit of $100 is due by April 1.

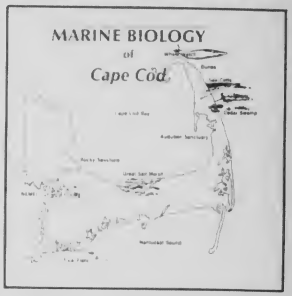

"As a teacher, I find this course gratifying. The students love it. Many of them continue to study marine biology, and come back to N.E.M.E.I. as summer interns. It's a great class," said Gallagher.

Biology student Tony Grahame felt "Cape Cod was an excellent opportunity to learn field techniques and get my hands wet!"

"I have never worked so hard on a particular project and the rewards have never been so great, said Trudy Perbal, former marine biology student.

Porky Pig spokespig for the 1989 American Cancer Society Low Fat Pig Out promotes proper pigging out on Thursday, March 9. About one-third of all cancer deaths may be related to what we eat.

A healthy diet is one in which less than 30% of the calories come from fat. A high-fat diet increases your risk of developing breast, colon, rectal and prostate cancers. Choose non-fat dairy products, lean meats, poultry and fish. Limit the amount of smoked meats, salt-cured and salt pickled foods in your diet.

Vitamins A and c may protect against cancers of the esophagus, larynx, lung and stomach. Strawberries, carrots, peaches, apricots, cantaloupes, spinach, yams, squash, kale and lettuce are Vitamin A-rich. Vitamin C is available naturally in grapefruit, oranges, tomatoes, kiwi, mangoes, celery, red and green peppers, broccoli, brussel sprouts and cantaloupe.

Discover Salzburg while you study

By Alisa Chinlund
Features Editor

Spend a semester on the picturesque Austrian countryside, visit Mozart's birthplace, study amid an 11th-century fortress, the Glockenspiel Tower, decorated fountains, or some of the world's most beautiful churches.

Starting this fall, Harper College students will have a chance to participate in the first international study program at Salzburg College, a private institution in Austria. The college is nestled in the northern foothills of the Alps, on the grounds of Schloss Leopoldskron, where "The Sound of Music" was filmed.

Students who enroll in the Salzburg Study Program will:

•Receive English instruction by European faculty.

•Live with local Austrian families. (Students can select families with close relationships or ones which offer more independent living.)

Participants can enjoy concerts, plays and exhibitions in one of the leading music centers in Europe. They will be guided on field trips to major historic and artistic sites in Germany and Austria. Students will also have an opportunity to tour Czechoslovakia, East and West Berlin, and the Soviet Union.

Students may apply for the Salzburg Study Program after completion of 15 credit hours of college-level work with at least a 2.75 grade point average (on a 4-point scale).

Students need to:

•Obtain application forms in F313 or A347.

•Turn in completed forms with a $200 deposit. Submit letters of recommendation, physician's statement of good health, and a partial payment of $800 by May 1. The balance of the fees is due by July 15.

•Register for Salzburg classes at Harper College.

Students can enroll for 12 credit hours in either a general studies or international business curriculum. Everyone is required to take a course in Austrian Civilization, and at least six credit hours of Beginning or Intermediate German.

The general studies courses include: History of Music; Art History Survey Renaissance and Baroque; Beginning Drawing; European History; Comparative Government; and East-West Relations.

The international business curriculum offers classes which deal with subjects on an international level such as: Business Law; Management Marketing; Public Relations; and Business Finance. Other selections include Comparative Economic Philosophies; and Government Regulation of Business.

Any student may apply for financial aid for their semester abroad. "All the financial aid programs offered at Harper are available for International Studies," said Martin Ryan, dean of liberal arts.

Two $500 scholarships, The Board of Trustees International Studies Scholarship and The Wheeling Rotary International Club Scholarship, are available to eligible students. One of each scholarship is awarded per semester.

The basic cost for the Salzburg Program approximately $4715 includes room and board, instructional costs, field trips and administrative costs. Additional expenses which include passport fees, local transportation, books, spending money and airfare are expected to cost about $2300. These rates may change due to fluctuation in airfares and currency exchange rates.

Students participating in the Fall 1989 program will leave Chicago the last week in August, and return the third week in December.

"I highly recommend this language intensive program," said Ryan. "It's a great opportunity for students to learn about the culture of Europe, and the business world. It makes you (the student) a more well-versed person in the ways of the world."

Last semester, Karen McCabe, a sophomore psychology student from Itasca, participated in the London Study Abroad Program. "Studying abroad was a great growing experience for me. I learned a lot about myself, other cultures and foreign affairs. I made a lot of close friends, and learned to live on my own."

A high fiber diet which includes whole wheat and whole grain breads, cereals, rice, plain popcorn, raisins, peaches, apricots, unskinned apples, oranges, strawberries, cherries, potatoes, spinach, peas, tomatoes, kidney beans, carrots, broccoli, may reduce your risk of developing colon cancer.

Heavy alcohol consumption depletes your body of important cancer-fighting nutrients and increases your risk of cancer of the liver, mouth, throat and esophagus. Approximately 30% of all cancer is smoking related--83% of all lung cancer--and that includes mouth, larynx, esophageal and bladder cancers.

By keeping an eye on your diet, you can enjoy what you eat and look forward to a longer, healthier life.

The Harper College master-chain has a missing link

Student Activities is where you get the most for your money

When I accepted the job as Editor-in-Chief, one of my goals was to settle any differences that existed between the Journalism Department and the Harbinger.

First I had to determine what those differences were. Rumor had it that Dr. Henry Roepken, chairman of the journalism department, had a law suit against the Harbinger. Research confirmed it. In the May 12, 1983 issue an article was published which Roepken considered libelous. The suit was recently dismissed.

In addition, I found out that Dr. Roepken was originally the advisor of the Harbinger. He advised the newspaper from Sept. 15, 1967 (when it was called the Harper Grove) to 1969. Apparently, Dr. Roepken did more editing than the student staff liked and in 1969, the Harbinger was advised by someone from outside the college.

I thought this nonsense was part of the past. I am a new editor with a new staff, five years after the most recent mishap. My advisor, Jon Oxman, and I attempted to interest Dr. Roepken in sponsoring a recruitment program that would benefit both the journalism program and the Harbinger. He declined.

During my interview, I discovered that Dr. Roepken's aversion was not restricted to the Harbinger. It included all of student activities. He does not encourage his students to join the football team or try-out for a theater program. He will not help the Harbinger, or even acknowledge the benefit of Student Activities' clubs and organizations.

My research shows involvement in student activities to be beneficial. Active students were more likely to get better jobs.

"One of the things employers look for on applications is what is done above and beyond their major," said Director of Job Placement Russ Mills.

"There have been studies done that any extracurricular involvement is beneficial, especially in job hunting," Director of Career and Employment Services Dr. Loyd A. Vaisvil said.

One of those studies, the Harper Follow-Up Study of 1985 Harper Transfer Alumni, shows that from 1981 to 1985, alumni rate the Harbinger in the top four most beneficial Student Activities.

The 1986 study says "Participation in extracurricular activities remains at a low point, only 13 percent..." and "Although a continuing low percentage of students participate in student activities those that do, report a high benefit from it."

But is this a local phenomenon?

"Bill Keller, editor of The Patriot Ledger in Quincy, Massachusetts, said that he would look for experience on the college paper as proof of a liberal arts major's interest in journalism," as reported in the October 1988 Quill, a journalism magazine.

In another survey conducted by AT&T Corporation, data supported the conclusion that involvement in student activities produced better leaders in management.

Still, Dr. Roepken refuses to acknowledge extracurricular activities as a vital part of higher education. Worse yet, he discourages involvement. Students who have asked Dr. Roepken if it would be a good idea to join the Harbinger are told the newspaper is unprofessional and can't offer anything he can't offer.

It's a shame our school can't work as a team, each unit supporting the others.

As this is a personal opinion, I'm afraid little can be done, except point out the facts and encourage students to participate...in any extracurricular activity.

A free market system has been one of the freedoms Americans have enjoyed, but like many of our other freedoms, the free market and the right to freedom of contract have been abused by a government seeking more and more power over our lives.

Although we currently have what is known as a mixed economy, our once free market is slipping towards an economy controlled entirely by the government. Where once men could enter into contractual agreements with each another in their voluntary consent, government regulations and restrictions are now inhibiting the course of free trade.

This growing trend toward government control is currently manifesting itself in the form of recent proposals that America adopt a system of national health care similar to that of Canada. This system is better known as a socialized medicine.

Under this type of system the government (and not the workings of the free market) determine how much hospitals may spend and sets fees that doctors charge for each office visit or medical procedure. The issue here is whether the government has the right to step in and dictate terms to doctors or whether doctors should be left as free as everyone else to set their own fees and enter into contractual relationships of their own free will.

The free market is based on a system whereby the voluntary consent of all parties is needed to form a contractual agreement. This implies that any party is free not to enter into the contract if the conditions are not satisfactory.

However, under socialized medicine, it is precisely this voluntary consent that does not exist for the doctors. Doctors are forced into the contractual relationship by the government and are in effect enslaved by the bureaucrats who have legislated that one sided contract. This has the effect of declaring that doctors are "less free" than other members of society.

The removal of the voluntary consent in the making of the contractual relationship violates the doctors individual rights. Doctors, like many other professionals, spend many years of study to develop their skills and have a right to sell their services to the highest bidder on the open market. Doctors are free to charge as much as they want (as are plumbers and electricians etc.), but are limited to their successful supply and demand. If a Doctor charges too much, patients will go elsewhere. As it is, those doctors who offer the best services at the lowest prices succeed.

If enacted, socialized medicine will continue to erode away our free-market by destroying its foundation: individual rights. If we grant the government the right to control the field of medicine, we will have granted them the premise by which they may control all phases of the economy. At present we may choose between the free-market and dictatorship, we may not be so fortunate in the times to come. ( For more information on the free-market, refer to Capitalism—the Unknown Ideal , by Ayn Rand.)

'True Believer' is Truly Believable

By Scott Neldi
Entertainment Editor

Homicide, Scandal, Cover-up, False Accusation, Conviction, Homicide. This is the chronological base for the Columbia Pictures release True Believer.

True Believer is the depiction of where the judicial system failed. Shu Kai Kim (Yuji Okumoto) is being brought to trial for the murder of an inmate while in prison. He is in desperate need of a lawyer, to prove the murder was in self-defense.

Kim's mother Misan Kim confronts an eccentric, but top notch, attorney named Eddie Dodd (James Woods). Dodd, after some persuading from a newly hired colleague Roger Baruin (Robert Downy Jr.) decides to take the case.

Dodds defense hinges on his ability to prove Kim should never have been imprisoned. Dodd thinks Kim was falsely accused for a Chana Town murder eight years before.

With the help of Kitty Greer (Margaret Colin), a private investigator, Dodd researches the original murder case, to no avail.

Robert Reyhard (Kurtwood Smith) is the prosecuting District Attorney. Reynard tries to plea bargain with Dodd to prevent the case from making it to trial. Dodd, after confronting Kim on the issue refuses and the trial begins.

James Woods plays the bizarre lawyer with the pony tail. Woods portrays him as a sixties left-over who once had high morals, but is now more interested in money, whether his clients are guilty or not. Dodd attacks in a very aggressive and cocky manner in court, and Woods portrays all of these aspects very well. Woods, in no way, hinders this movie.

I found Robert Downy Jr.'s role as Roger Baruin, not necessary for most, but not all, of the film. The only revelation in Downy is his finding of the incriminating evidence that finally ends the case, and this he does well. Downy has been in many other features including Less Than Zero and The Pick Up Artist. My personal preference is that he should stick to comedy.

There is not much I can say either way about this film. I did enjoy it from start to finish. The plot was actually realistic, and pictured well.

If you like "courtroom dramas" then I suggest you might like this film. If you like action pictures without the high intensity of the ever popular Arnold Schwarzenagger, you probably would enjoy this. If, on the other hand, you enjoy totally mindless comedy, see the review on page seven.

Experiment with Aquatic Noggin

By Lisa Aust
Staff Writer

Aquatic Noggin: is A) a rare water retention disease B) one of the best local bands in the Northwest Suburbs or C) slang for a devoted swimmer. The answer is A (no just kidding). The real answer is B. Aquatic Noggin is the name of a local band.

Harper campus is fortunate to have all three members hail from here. Dan Chambers is an art major, and will graduate this spring. He plays guitar and sings. Paul Fini is also an art major, a full-time student, he plays bass guitar and sings as well. Mike Waterman graduated in the fall of '88 as an engineering major. He also played football for two years and bangs the drums.

As Fini sees it A.N. music can best be described as "Funky-Punky-Rock-and-Roll. Funky because of the funky groove; punky because of the distorted guitar; rock-and-roll because it does." (rocks and rolls)

Chambers agrees on rock and roll, but insists that,"It not be called 'new music.'

because people will confuse it with MTV New Music Videos."

Indeed A.N. music is nothing like the general-pop-sometimes-heavy-metal-genre to be found on MTV.

A.N. is gaining in popularity in Columbia, South Carolina through air play by WUSC. A.N. will travel to the University of South Carolina this spring break because of this demand.

Past gigs include Northern University, North Eastern University, Chin's at the University of Illinois, Batteries Not Included, the Limelight, and Club Stadola.

A.N. has an upcoming gig at the Cabaret Metro on April 19. Unfortunately the Metro recently turned into an over-21 club. Chambers regretfully added, " Most of the clubs we play are over-21. That hurts us the most, since most of our fans are under-age."

Although Aquatic Noggin has been together for almost two years, they have only garnered a few hard-core fans lovingly called "Noggineers." Waterman explains why," There aren't enough people interested in the new music scene. They should take a look at new bands instead of listening to Michael Jackson, Debbie Gibson or Tiffany. Throw away your Chicago records. There are some really great local bands around here such as the Newts, the Eisenhowers, T.A.C., and Green."

Fini feels that people are too conservative and easily intimidated. He is clearly frustrated by,"People who are afraid to take a risk. For three or four bucks you can see three bands and then sit and talk to them afterwards. But they'd rather stick with familiar bands and hop and hop to songs about getting down and removing clothes. Anyone can write a song about getting laid."

A.N. bandmembers rebel against pop music and its mindless repetition of overdone beats and eliehe lines. They are tired of people going back to the 60's and 70's to continue the pop tradition. Waterman argues, "They should be looking to the future, not WCKG. I wish every radio station could be a college radio station."

Chambers amplifies," I really like WNUR. They'll play anything by anybody. Artistically, they are one of the most liberal stations I've ever heard."

If there's only one message anyone gets from these guys, Fini would like it to be, "Get off your duffs and go hear some new music."

Aquatic Noggin fans and future Noggineers can purchase their tapes at the Turn Table in Schaumburg and at Rock'n Records in Wheeling for three or four dollars. Also, radio station WNUR 89.3 FM will occasionally play their stuff. WNUR is very good about playing requests.

'Skin Deep' scratches surface

By Scott Naldi
Entertainment Editor

This is the story 'bout a man named Zach,
Whose stirring love for women
always ends up in the sack,
It's unfortunate for Zach that he has this bad disease,
For his love of women only penetrates Skin Deep (Last, that is. A pretty lace and sexy legs.)

When I say the name, Blake Edwards, most people think of the Pink Panther movies starring Peter Sellers, 10, Victor/Victoria, The Great Race and many other titles of successful comedic movies. Now taking this mental image and applying it to the recently released Skin Deep, what do I have?--Well, I'll just say it's no masterpiece.

Skin Deep is the trials and tribulations of a man named Zach Hutton (John Ritter). Zach has one major flaw, he loves gorgeous young women. The catch is, he is married... oops! Zach's love, or should I say lust, is uncontrollable and gets him into many uncomfortable predicaments.

Zach's wife Alex (Alyson Reed) catches Zach in the bedroom with a young blonde holding a gun to his head. Angie, the blonde, (Denise Crosby--Yes Bing's granddaughter) is threatening Zach's life because Zach was in bed with Angie's (not to be confused with Alex's) hairdresser.

John Ritter explains his problem to Vincent Gardenia

Confused? Isn't that a great way to start off a movie? Okay, maybe not, but please let me continue.

Zach is seeing a psychiatrist for this condition of his, but he receives most of his consultation from a bartender named Barney (Vincent Gardenia), while drinking himself into a frenzy.

The rest of the movie is a series of sight-gags and sophistation as Zach tries to reconcile with Alex. What a deep and thoughtful plot. (Please read that last line sarcastically.)

I think I may be misrepresenting myself as to the entertainment value of the film. It had it's moments, and they were very funny, but that's all it had.

John Ritter, better known as Jack Tripper on t.v.'s Three's Company, does the job. He doesn't go out of his way to impress, in fact, he merely reiterates the role that made him silly on the sitcom. Some of his other film credits include Hero At Large and Real Men. Ritter now is very successful and promising in the sitcom Thirtysomething.

Alyson Reed who played the dance lead Cassie in A Chorus Line the Movie, is one of the few redeeming aspects of the film. She is very convincing in a role that demands that she be a complete bitch, and yet be understanding. I hope to see her in future films.

John Ritter and the many women of Skin Deep

That is really all the main characters there are, so I will proceed to the man himself, Blake Edwards. Edwards is considered a master of modern comedy, but even a master gets into a slum once in awhile. Edwards came up with some very entertaining jokes for this film, but it could never be classified as his best. Better luck next time Blake.

I can not recommend that you see this film right now, but if you have an interest in it, wait until it comes to the cheap show. Or better still, wait for it to come out on home video, but invite some friends.

Battle of the Bands rocks Harper

By Craig Gee
Staff Writer

[illegible] Harper's own Aquatic Noggin [illegible] on April 7 during the [illegible] to participate are Aquatic Noggin, Frenzy, 45, On Horizon, Threat, and as a replacement, AWOL.

Over 25 bands expressed interest in the event, however, only 10 actually auditioned. The bands were judged in five categories - tightness, attitude, appearance, dedication and talent. The music of the bands is diverse, ranging from alternative to metal.

WHOM and the Program Board will be sponsoring the event. All profit received will go to the Little City Foundation.

Prizes will be donated by local business in exchange for publicity. These businesses are the Barn of Barrington, Blue Beart Recording, Chicago Trax, Consolidated Music of Barrington, The Drum Pad, Off the Record, Palatine Music Center, Players Bunch, Record Breakers, Rockin' Records, Rose Records, Solid Sound, and The Turn Table.

The Harbinger will be running profiles on the five bands during the next three weeks. See Related article on page 6.

There are many scholarships offered to Harper College students. For more information or scholarship applications stop by the Financial Aid Office in A-364.

The Harper College Board of Trustees has five Trustee Scholarships to be awarded to students selected from the general population who live within District #512. The awards are for one semester's tuition and are renewable. Applicants must not be recent graduates of one of the district high schools. Awards are based on scholarship, financial need, and potential contributions to the co-curricular program of the college. All applications must be accompanied by a school transcript. Application deadline is April 3, 1989.

The Harper College Educational Foundation announces the James J. McGrath Humanities Scholarship for $1000. The scholarship will be awarded to a full-time student graduating with an AA degree at spring 1989 commencement. The recipient must have a GPA of 3.5 or better and be transferring to a four-year college with intent to major in the humanities. The deadline for application is April 3, 1989.

The Harper College Faculty Senate announces its student scholarship for the spring semester, 1989. Candidates must have completed 12 credit hours, have a 3.5 GPA, not be a recipient of another scholarship that covers full tuition, and be currently enrolled at Harper for 6 or more semester hours. April 17 is the deadline for application.

The United States Air Force is offering a new nurse educational scholarship program worth up to $50,000. Scholarship recipients receive a monthly $100 subsistence allowance during the school year plus college tuition and most laboratory, textbook and incidental fees.

The Inverness Garden Club will award a scholarship for $500 to $1000 to an eligible student. To qualify, students must reside in the Harper school district, and be a second year student in horticulture or a similar major. Applications must be submitted by April 30, 1989.

The Alpha Delta Kappa Psi Chapter is offering a scholarship for $300 to students majoring in the field of teaching. Applicants must be a senior or returning student, major in education, and attend Harper or Elgin Community College. April 15, 1989 is the deadline for application.

To Dream the Impossible Dream

By Glen Jackson and Tari Vaughn

Margie Rathke, Glen Jackson, and Tamara Jackson, two current Harper students and one former student, will be performing as Sancho, the Barber, and Aldonza, respectively, in the classical musical, Man of La Mancha.

The musical, based on the novel by Miguel de Cervantes, focuses on Alonso Quijana, an elderly, senile man. Quijana believes he is a great knight, and calls himself Don Quijote de La Mancha.

After enlisting the help of his squire, Sancho, Quijote sets out in search of adventure.

He fights Matagogre the ogre, the Knight of the Mirrors, and finds the love of the beautiful lady, Dulcinea, (who is actually Aldonza, the scullery maid at an inn). Only the cruelty of his own family brings him back to "reality."

Crime enter Don Quijote's world and dream the impossible dream with the musical's end.

The musical will be presented by the Semi-Classical Players and District 214 at the Forest View Educational Center, 2121 S. Goebbert Rd. in Arlington Heights.

Performances will be at 8 p.m. on March 10, 11, 17, and 18. Matinee performances are at 2:30 p.m. on March 12 and 19. For tickets or more information call 437-3760.

Harper student and former U.S. Ski Team member

By Karen Theesfield and Cindy Syson

A chilling breeze blushed his face, and sent frozen shivers through the audience. His concentration was strong and his adrenaline pumped as he anticipated the jump. He pulled down his goggles and gripped his poles, then rocked back and forth, building up momentum.

When the bell sounded, he lunged into the seventy meter jumping ramp. Spectator's eyes followed as he coasted through the air. All of his practice and hard work seemed to pay off as he landed with his longest distance ever of eighty-four meters.

Surprising enough, this jump was accomplished by twenty year old Spencer Prow of the U.S. Ski Team. Presently attending Harper College part-time, Spencer has taken a break from the U.S. Ski Team to catch up on school and to work full-time.

When Spencer was four years old, his father, a ski instructor in the tenth mountain division in the army, put him on skies for the first time. Since then, Spencer has been working toward his goals, accomplishing them and setting new ones.

While his school mates were skiing down Wilmont Mountain in ski club, Spencer met his first goal by making the Junior Olympics for two consecutive years. He placed third and eighth out of two hundred of the country's top young skiers.

Spencer's next goal was to make the U.S. Ski Team. He trained at resorts like Lake Placid, New York, Norge Ski Club in Fox River Grove, and Marquette, Upper Peninsula, Michigan. With coaching by assistant head coach Tom Daggot, and eliminating other skiers Spencer made the team when he was eighteen.

He competed internationally for world cups against European countries, Russia, and Canada. Spencer won his first world cup while in high school in competition at Alpine Skiing.

Most any tournament consists of two days: the first day ski jumping and the second day cross country skiing. The placement in the ski jumping competition determines what order the skiers leave the starting line in the cross country race. The overall winner is the skier who crosses the finish line first.

When not in competition, Spencer trained on his own several times a week.

Spencer said, "I trained as much as I could, wherever I could."

A few times a year, the ski team gets together for group training in ski camps.

"Ski camps were very intense training," Spencer said, "They watched everything you ate and kept you working hard."

Not only did the ski team train for tournaments, but they trained for the 1988 Olympics. Unlike serious training, the pre-Olympics is a time to get to know the competitors from all over the world. It is a laid-back atmosphere because skiers are not competing immediately, instead they are getting to know the slopes for future reference.

Nobody knew who was going to compete in the 1988 Olympics during this time. Spencer did not make the Olympic team, but his teammate Joe Holland did and placed thirteenth in the cross country division.

Spencer then left the U.S. Ski Team to return to school in the spring of 1988. He might of given up the U.S. Ski Team, but he sure does not give up skiing altogether.

Harper student Spencer Prow has skied with some of the best U.S. skiers. He was on the U.S. Ski Team. (Photo by Doug Ray)

He believes that you can not have the best of both worlds. "You either have to be totally into it and give 100% or just do it for fun."

He now works full-time at Aspen Ski and Patio in Barrington, and when not repairing skis or hitting the books, Spencer is on the slopes.

Spencer is not training as hard as he used to, but he still tries to join as many tour as possible. Recently, Spencer placed fifth in the ski jump competition at Fox River Grove.

Right now, Spencer is concentrating on studying, business and saving money from working. Spencer is enjoying the school life at Harper, but has different feelings about working full-time.

"Once you get a full-time job, you feel like you are carrying a lead ball around."

With that kind of outlook, we can be sure that Spencer will join the U.S. Ski Team again soon and work toward his ultimate goal of competing in the 1992 Olympics.

Three Harper players named all-stars

By Lou Nanez
Staff Writer

Although the basketball season ended for the Hawks and Lady Hawks two weeks ago,

Pascale O'Donoghue

three Harper players took to the court this past weekend in the NJCAA Region IV Men's and Women's All-Star Games at Triton College in River Grove.

In Saturday's Men's game, guard/forward Travis Perry had 6 points, 3 rebounds, and a blocked shot as the East team that he and center Joe Passi were competing on lost to the West 112-92. Passi added a game-high 11 rebounds and a blocked shot.

Lady Hawk center Pascale O'Donoghue contributed 17 points, 11 rebounds, 9 blocks, and 3 assists to the East team's 86-70 victory over the West in Sunday's Women's game.

All three players had expressed a feeling of honor and eagerness prior to the games.

Passi said, "I'm the happiest camper in the world. It's the best. I hope I can do well."

O'Donoghue replied, "I'm really honored and I hope I can live up to this honor."

Perry owed a lot of the credit to his teammates. "It's an honor to be selected as a member of the Region IV All-Star Team. I would not have been selected if it wasn't for the help of my fellow teammates. It's the little things that they did (set picks, help/side defense,etc.) that made it possible. So I'm proud to represent my teammates and Harper College in the game."

In the Men's game, the West jumped out to a 16-2 early first half lead before the East cut the margin to six, 53-47, at halftime. But the West squad dominated the second half as their lead grew to 25 by the 5:00 mark of the game.

Despite it all, Perry and Passi had a great time. "We had fun!" the two sophomores replied after the game.

The East squad was coached by Phil Staley of Joliet. Along with Perry and Passi, the squad was comprised of Tyrone Stevens and John Wolnik (Joliet), Rob Respreas and Victor Grayer (South Suburban), Mark Poetz and Rich Rogala (Elgin), Lyle Baele (Blackhawk East), Bobby Thomas (Malcolm X), and Vince Nichols (McHenry).

The West squad was coached by R.D. Lewis of Wright. That squad consisted of Derrick Davis and Dino Trent (Wright), Pat Sanders and Victor Jones (Waubonsee), Maurice Carter (Kennedy-King), Sebastian Coleman (Oakton), Dave Shaffer (Kishwaukee), Don Keegen (Lake County), Cornelius Panon (Highland), Phil Williams (Truman), and Trent Emenecker (Rock Valley).

In Sunday's women's contest O'Donoghue helped the East squad jump out to a big lead and never look back as the West was never in the game.

"I really had a lot of fun. It was nice getting to know the other girls on the team that I played against during the season," O'Donoghue said after the game.

The East team was coached by Tom Gatuso of Oakton. Besides O'Donoghue, the squad consisted of Kim Ellis and Kim Becker (DuPage), Patti Sikorski (Oakton), Celina Smith (Triton), Jackie Darty (Malcolm X), Sue Mattingly (Waubonsee), Roslyn Edwards (Kennedy-King), Aimee Ascher (Rock Valley), and Dee Lefevour (Wright).

Coaching for the West was Rufus Greer of Blackhawk. The team was comprised of Jody Kanaly (McHenry), Karen Wirgard (Morton), Jody Roberts (Blackhawk), Josie Ossian and Shelly Orwig (Blackhawk East), Karen Whalen and Jennifer Robinson (Lake County), Crystal Carter (Kishwaukee) and Ann Maller (Illinois Valley).

HARBINGER; FOR THE EXPERIENCE...

Lady Hawks '88-'89: "A miracle short"

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

You could describe the 1988-89 Lady Hawks in one simple phrase: "A miracle short."

Through all the problems that Head Coach Tom Teschner went through this season, he and the Lady Hawks were still two points away from a section title as they fell to Highland 67-65 on February 23rd in Freeport to finish the year 14-15. They also finished third in the N4C with an 8-6 record.

"Considering what we had, we did pretty well," Teschner said. "We were a good shooting and rebounding team all year long."

Case in point, after the Lady Hawks started the season with 12 players, its roster would go up and down like a yo-yo. It would get down to the point where the roster had only six players including an athletic trainer who had never picked up a basketball before (Nicole Ryan), and a dancer (Stacey Kirchner) who Pascale O'Donoghue had talked into joining the team.

Teschner admits that there were problems when he only had six players to practice with.

Leading the way this year for the Lady Hawks were several key players. 6'1" Sophomore Center Pascale O'Donoghue earned First team all-N4C honors by leading the league in rebounds with a 12.7 average and blocked shots with 47.

She was also second in the conference in scoring averaging

The 1988-89 Lady Hawks

22 points per game. Pascale was named N4C Women's Player of the Week on January 9th for her performance against Triton and Illinois Valley. She was named to the Region IV All-Star team and also has been nominated for NJCAA Sectional and Region IV honors.

To top it all off, (O'Donoghue broke four Harper scoring records. She broke most conference points scored in one year with 306, most points scored in a season with 629, most conference points in two seasons with 611, and most points scored in two years with a grand total of 1186. "She came through for us when we needed her to," Teschner said.

Another very key player in the Lady Hawk attack was 5'7" guard Amy Kunzel. The freshman sensation from Mt. Prospect earned second team all-N4C honors by leading the league in assists with a 7.4 average.

She was also second in the N4C in three-point field goal percentage at 44%, and in free-throw shooting percentage at 75.7%. Kunzel was also third in scoring with a 20.0 average per game and she was named N4C Women's player of the week on January 16th for her performance against Rock Valley and DuPage.

Amy also rewrote all of Harper's three-point records including most three-pointers in a game, with 5 twice against Blackhawk East on December 17th and against Wright in the Section Semi-finals on February 21st, most three-point shots in a season with 48 and most three-point shots in a conference season with 22.

She has been nominated for NJCAA Section and Region IV honors. "We sure hope she can come back next year for us, she's a very good shooter," Teschner replied.

Another big gun that the Lady Hawks had was forward Patty Canchola. The 6'1 freshman from Mount Prospect earned third team all-conference honors by finishing third in the N4C in rebounds. She also had a team-high 23 rebounds against Moraine Valley on January 17th. "She really did a good job for us, she gave it her all even when she hurt her back toward the end of the season, Teschner commented.

Also playing key support roles were Freshmen Kellie Dennis, Monica Premysky, Kim Noonan and Nicole Ryan. "Those four gave it their all in every game, they tried their best," Teschner said.

Teschner felt that the team was still peaking when they lost to Highland in the section finals. "We were starting to play more as a team. If we had won against Highland, we would've gotten in scrimmage against some of the guys for a week to get ready for the Region IV tournament."

Teschner is already starting to look ahead to next year where as many as six returnees could send the Lady Hawks flying high to the top. "We could be very good if they all come back and if we can get some good new players too," Teschner said.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

| Final Standings | Overall | N4C |
|---|---|---|
| Moraine Valley | 28-5* | 14-0 |
| Illinois Valley | 17-12 | 11-3 |
| S.Suburban | 15-16 | 8-6 |
| Harper | 14-15 | 8-6 |
| Joliet | 14-14 | 6-8 |
| DuPage | 10-16 | 6-8 |
| Triton | 7-24 | 2-12 |

Chicago sports rap

By Kevin Oates
Staff Writer

The baseball season is starting with Cactus league play and our hockey and basketball teams playing for playoff position. This week I'm not going to write about our teams, but about the people that bring us our teams, the announcers.

Chicago is a great city to watch or listen to a game in. Take baseball for instance, Harry Caray and Steve Stone are the announcers for the Cubs. Granted Harry might think Ryne Sandberg's up when Andre Dawson is in the box, but isn't that what baseball is all about? Having fun?

Sure, Steve Stone has that whiny voice, but his analysis of pitchers and managerial decisions are top notch. Did you ever watch a Cub's game and Stone called the pitches before they were pitched? Like him or not, he knows the game.

Imagine listening to Joe Garagiola everyday. He would drive me nuts. At least Harry and Steve keep a dull team interesting.

The White Sox announcers Tom Paciorek and the other guy, are new, but seem like they will be entertaining in the future.

Our hockey team has great announcers. Probably the best I've ever heard in the game. Pat Foley's play by play is exciting, accurate, and in the nine years he has been announcing, has anyone ever called a save better! First it was Baaaaerman, then Paaaaaul now it is Chicccccrisss!!!!! I love his excitement and enthusiasm in the game.

I have always admired Dale Tallon on the ice and in the booth. Ever since I heard him say, "Yeah, I used to lift weights. 12 ounces after every game. Up and down." You gotta love hockey.

Last, but not least, the Bulls. Johnny Kerr and Jim Durham are outstanding. I'm not lying when I say they are the best pair of announcers in basketball.

"Red" Kerr is great on commentary. His insights are knowledgeable and his excitement makes a viewer feel like you are at the game. Jim Durham is much like Pat Foley. Excellent. He keeps up with the game and never bores you with meaningless stats like so many announcers do.

I know the Bears have announcers, but Joe Theisman is a joke. See what I mean about us having good announcers?

Flasher suspect seized

By Marc Balke
Staff Writer and
Mona Isa
News Editor

Public Safety and Schaumburg police charged Steven D. Fain with indecent exposure and attempted battery. Fain, age 35, of 1601 Portsmouth, Schnumburg was arrested at his home on Monday night.

Fain is neither a student or a staff employee of Harper College.

There have been three exposures reported during the last three months; however, the alleged suspect is currently being charged with the latest occurrence on Thursday March 2.

At all three exposures, the victims described him as a white male, 25 to 30 years old, 6'0" tall, wearing a red ski jacket.

At the last incident, Fain allegedly approached a white female student where he exposed himself and grabbed her. The victim provided information to Palatine Police and Public Safety which led to his arrest.

"Although we believe he was responsible for all three occurrences in parking lot six because of similar descriptions, investigations are still pending," stated Chief Kevin King of Public Safety.

Apparently, the victim saw the offender in his car, wrote down the license plate number and reported to Public Safety. As a result of extensive surveillance by Public Safety and cooperation of the victim, Fain became primary suspect.

The previous history of Fain indicates that in 1985 he was arrested for indecent exposure. He was not convicted. Schaumburg Police were unable to verify this.

Fain was released on a $10,000 bond. He is scheduled to appear in Cook County Circuit Court in Skokie May 1st.

Public Safety was unable to provide additional information. "We don't want to jeopardize any pending court action," stated King.

King attributed Officer Richard Duran for his excellent work and dedication.

No room on campus for student commuters

By Marc J. Balke
Staff Writer

Overcrowded parking lots have become a problem to many students. With 12 lots surrounding Harper's campus, students are voicing complaints that inadequate parking has become a concern.

"I have a 9 a.m. class, by the time I arrive I have to park in the back of the lot. The parking lots are much too far from the buildings," stated a concerned student.

When Harper College was built 20 years ago, it was never anticipated that enrollment would reach 22,000. While Harper projected the availability of parking spaces.

Parking lots three, four and nine are usually empty. One reason is its distance from the entrances to the campus.

Most students entering the campus park close to the exits, not realizing the amount of spaces available in other lots.

"Harper's parking is worse than CODs. My shocks can't sustain all these potholes around the school," said John Sanders, student.

Harper presently has budgeted $825,000 for repairs and renovation of the perimeter roads as well as the parking lots. These repairs are to begin this spring.

Public Safety has suggested that students try car pooling, or parking in alternate lots till the problems are alevated.

College News Update

Harper President Honored:

Dr. Paul Thompson, President of Harper College was nominated and has been selected as a leader among American community college presidents. Community college leadership involves gaining staff and faculty commitment to reach goals for the present and future vision in education. All leaders will receive awards in June.

Harper VP Attends Conference:

Dr. Bonnie Heney, Vice President of Student Affairs was invited to the National Council of Leadership Development conference in Arizona. Approximately 30 women leaders attended the five day workshops which covered issues facing college administrators and women leadership roles.

Student fights for tuition

Susan Street, a student studying chiropractics, launched a campaign to retrieve all of the money she has invested in her physics class. She feels that Physics Professor Robert Boeke is an ineffective instructor because the entire class failed the first test. Street sited three major problems: his inconsistency in grading, his expectations were not clear and he did not cover test material in class.

"...I feel there is a failure in the system and I believe in the system," said Street.

Street has been following the guidelines set up in the student handbook and believes she is making progress. "Mr. Knight was extremely helpful," she said.

Street must set up several more appointments to complete the grievance procedure starting with a meeting with Division Dean George Domer.

The Harbinger was unable to contact Professor Boeke for comment.

D.A.W.N. Workshops:

Workshops on substance use and abuse are free for Harper employees and students on March 31, April 7 and May 19 from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. at the Parkside facility in Park Ridge.

Harper Sponsors Employment Fair:

Representatives from AT&T, Honeywell, Prudential and Northwest Community Hospital and other area companies will be on campus April 4 from 10:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. in Building M. The fair will allow students and the general public to seek employment or obtain information on career fields.

True Piano

By Justine Kubica
Staff Writer

Ten piano students were chosen to perform for Nehta True during her visit at Harper on March 12, 13 and 14.

True appeared at Harper to perform classical works by Beethoven, Chopin, Debussy, Griffes and on Sunday March 12. True conducted a workshop and master class for the ten students who were selected to perform their musical pieces.

These students were given an opportunity to receive advice on piano playing techniques.

The workshops consisted of students performing their works. True then critiqued their work and made suggestions to improve the rhythm, beat, and interpretation of their performance.

Pamela DesBarres

When Pamela Des Barres walked onto the stage she lit incense so the audience would get a feel for the 60's. She read her own self described "dumb poetry" and excerpts from her book I'm with the Band: confessions of a groupie.

She spoke for 45 minutes, then answered questions for 45 minutes. Her topics included such quaint childhood practices as keeping a list of farts and making a painting of Mick Jagger's genitalia. She readily admits that she was, "a rather strange girl." No matter, the audience enjoyed her unique perspective.

Writing Lab automates English papers: avoid typewriter frustration

By Christy Crawford
Staff Writer

Having difficulties putting together a well-written paper? There is a solution!

The Writing Lab, in F136, is available to all Harper students, faculty and staff. The lab has been opened since Fall 1987 and was designed by English teacher Mike Lackey. It gives students, faculty and staff assistance with writing skills and is staffed by five qualified aides including Lackey, Manager Pat Weinhold, and Joyce Jones.

The lab is complete with twenty computers. Prior to the lab no computers were available for English use. All computers contain supplemental programs concerning vocabulary, spelling and grammar to help the writer achieve a mechanically error free paper.

Other programs aid in suggesting appropriate synonyms and avoiding sexist comments. The word processing programs, PC writers, Word Perfect and PFS professional writer programs are utilized for writing purposes. The lab offers a wide variety of extremely extensive programs exclusively to aid in the writing problems that many students have.

Students need not fear the computers if they have no previous experience. Not only will the aides be available to lend a hand, a program has been devised to educate students on the keyboard and computer programs. It is unnecessary to bring a disk to work on the computer, the lab will provide one for use in the lab.

"Compared to the typewriter, the computer will save the time and frustration that occasionally accompanies completing a well-written paper," said Lackey. He encourages students to come to the Writing Lab to help avoid many typographical and grammatical errors while learning about the computers that are so prevalent during this day and age.

The lab functions as a walk-in service with convenient hours: Monday and Wednesday 1:00 p.m. - 6:25 p.m., 7:40 p.m. - 9:00 p.m.; Tuesday and Thursday 1:30 p.m. - 3:45 p.m.; and Friday 11:00 p.m. - 3:00 p.m.

TALKLINE, a crisis intervention hotline

By William Seils
Staff Writer

Sometimes life's problems seem too difficult to handle. How do I deal with this problem? Who can I talk to? Where can I get help?

One possible solution is to dial TALKLINE, a crisis intervention hotline where a caller can receive information or direction.

This 24-hour confidential hotline serves Cook, Dupage, and Lake Counties. It can be the number to call for help in dealing with all kinds of problems.

People call TALKLINE for help for a variety of reasons. Many of the types of difficulties callers discuss concern relationships, loneliness and depression, alcohol and drug use, and sexual issues.

Executive Director Lorraine Weymouth, "We get our share of pranksters. But most (of the people) who call don't know where else to turn, or can't talk to those who they're close to because they deny a problem may exist. They don't feel the problem warrants much concern, or they just don't have anyone around with the time or interest in them.

"Callers get an objective response to their questions which is often not the case when talking to family members or friends."

TALKLINE counselors do not give advice, but provide referrals, when necessary, to state sponsored programs and other agencies.

"Many (of the people calling) just want to talk but those with more serious needs are referred to one of the hundreds of agencies available for helping those with similar problems," said Phil Anderson, a Harper student who volunteers as a telephone counselor.

Weymouth estimates "about one-third of the calls are very serious and 3% of all calls receive referrals."

There's also a separate line for children, KIDSLINE.

They call in with many of the same difficulties as adults: family concerns, loneliness, peer pressure problems with grades and meeting expectations.

Many are "latchkey kids" who are alone at home for a period of time because their parents are at work.

"Sometimes these kids call because they're frightened, and we will send a police car over to their house for a 'well-being' check," said Anderson.

Harper students and community members can call TALKLINE or KIDSLINE if they feel the need. But there's also the opportunity to volunteer as a counselor.

People of all ages and interests volunteer. Currently about 125 active volunteers work with the phone lines. Twenty of the volunteers are Harper students and faculty members.

Weymouth would like to see the total number of volunteers increased from 20 to 275.

All the volunteers work part-time, a few hours a week to avoid burnout.

This type of program can be of special interest to psychology, sociology, and criminal justice majors.

"It gives you a good base of what you'll be seeing in your chosen field and a good chance to refine your skills," said Anderson, himself a psychology major. "You hear from all kinds of people and about their problems. So the program is kind of like an unique window to the real world."

Weymouth lists the requirements to be a volunteer:

•an interest in providing service in the mental health field

•a community-minded person willing to help people of all ages

•a good listener

The training consists of two 20-hour weeks with lectures and role-playing exercises taught by mental health professionals. The training can earn college and H.S. practicum credit, and is helpful for those going into a four year program.

Another benefit, according to Weymouth, is "a very rewarding feeling when you hear from those who call back later saying 'thanks', that information you gave me was right on target', and 'I've really been helped and have worked things out'."

The hotline phone numbers are 228-8400 (TALKLINE) or 228-KIDS (KIDSLINE).

For more information or to volunteer as a counselor call 981-1273.

Greece: the paradise of the gods-- for under $3000

By Alisa Chouland
Features Editor

Visit ancient Olympia, the site of the first Olympian games. Discover the beauty of Athens at the Acropolis, and see the Parthenon stand with its fluted marble columns as a tribute to the goddess Athena. Travel to Crete where Theseus killed the Minotaur.

Learn about the mythology, art, history, architecture, and philosophy of ancient Greek civilization as you tour sites of days gone by. Taste the flavor of the country that the ancient travellers, Odysseus and Perseus regarded as home.

This summer Martha Simonsen, associate professor of English and Ken Simonsen, professor of philosophy and humanities at the College of Lake County, will lead the third study tour to Greece. The Greek Islands, and Turkey from June 23 to July 8.

The tour is open to the community. All applicants must enroll as students, either credit or non-credit. Students may earn up to three hours in Humanities 124 from Harper College.

The trip costs approximately $2249 and includes round-trip airfare from Chicago to Athens, a four-day tour of the Greek mainland, three days in Athens, a seven-day Mediterranean cruise, accommodations in double rooms, breakfast and dinner on the land tour, all meals on the cruise, sightseeing, interpretive lectures, transfers and baggage handling.

"Throughout the tour, people are given a chance to discover the ancient Greek civilization that they've been learning about by examining the ruins and the culture," said Martha Simonsen. "It's not Palatine. It's a whole different world out there. The experience changes your life."

Participants taking the study tour for credit are required to maintain a daily journal, and write a research paper utilizing library materials from an approved bibliography.

"The benefits of this study tour are numerous. It exposes you to a different culture, democracy, western civilization, art, a different view of human nature, the origins of culture, and the ancient ruins," said Martha Simonsen.

Last semester, Cindy Elsasak, a second semester sophomore from Schaumburg majoring in special education, participated in the London Abroad Program.

Elsasak said, "Through my studies abroad I learned to live and adapt to different cultures, developed independence, and even gained knowledge about the U.S. government.

"I took a trip to Greece during my free time. Greece was not modernized compared to the U.S. Most of the people used mules for transportation. People buy groceries in the open market. The landscape is beautiful. The water is crystal clear. It was an interesting experience."

Payment is due no later then April 10. For more information call Martha Simonsen, xt. 2776.

Photo Opinion: What is your opinion of the American flag exhibit at the School of the Art Institute?

I disagree with having the flag on the floor and using the First Amendment to defend the exhibit. It may cause a lot of riots by veterans who fought to defend it. It should be lifted and presented the right way.
Jon Ourslet
Criminal Justice Major

I agree with the artists fundamental right to artistically express himself, but the issue at hand creates polarity in liberty, freedom and patriotism. The argument has become extreme, carrying the issue too far.
Chris Junge

I understand the artistic viewpoint but I also understand why people are protesting. I see the use of the flag in this manner as a desecration. Besides what is the artistic value of a flag draped on the floor?

Letter to the Editor
Blood Challenge

Dear Mr. Ray,

I'm writing to thank the students of Harper College and the Harbinger for their participation in the February 15 blood drive, sponsored by Health Service. One hundred twenty-five of Harper's finest came to donate, and 108 pints of blood were collected.

When factored into its component parts, that blood will make over 400 units of blood products available to patients needing component therapy.

Typically, one of the four products we produce from a unit of blood is platelets. They are used to treat patients with blood clotting disorders, cancer and leukemia; patients like Kim Newman, reported on by Lou Nunez in your February 9 edition.

There are many, many, patients like Kim with no one to tell their story. Many of the stories do not have happy endings, like Kim's. Her story is genuinely inspirational.

Finally, I'd like to issue a challenge to the students at Harper. The Public Relations Office reports 25,000 students and 1,400 faculty and staff make up Harper College. That means that approximately 4 out of 1000 donated blood.

In 1988, LifeSource had to import over 100,000 units of blood; this area does not collect enough to meet its own needs. If only five percent of the Harper population would donate twice a year, it would mean 2,460 pints - a giant step toward a self-sufficient blood supply. Think about it.

Are Harper students up to the challenge? I hope so. There are thousands of patients in area hospitals waiting for the answer.

The Political Perspective
The REAL solution to battle of the flag

By Mike Watson
Staff Columnist

On one side of the picket line we have angry veterans protesting the desecration of the symbol of our nation and claiming that since their tax dollars help finance the school, they have a right to see the flag removed.

On the other side we have the equally valid claim of the student artist. His American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) lawyer claims the flag exhibit is protected by the First Amendment's provision for free speech.

Both appear to have valid claims the veterans raise the issue of taxation, the artist and the ACLU claim First Amendment's rights.

While on the surface these appear to be the issues that must be decided by a court of law, actually the real issue behind the controversy has not been properly identified on either side. At issue here is not the First Amendment protection for the exhibit, but involves the definition of the proper role of government in a free society.

The essential point is that neither the veteran's tax dollars nor anyone else's should be going to finance the school. The government of a free society violates individual rights when it appropriates the wealth of its citizens to finance any type of cultural institution. The proper method of financing is one of private contributions by private citizens.

If a citizen of a free society wishes to support such an institution then he may do so of his own free will and with money from his own pocket. He has no right to demand that the government reach its hand into the pockets of those who do not wish to support such an institution.

Therefore, if the School of the Art Institute was privately funded, as it should be, the veteran's claims would be irrelevant, as the student and the School of the Art Institute would be protected by the First Amendment.

Thus, the real issue behind the flag controversy is one of properly defining the role of government in a free society. Only when this is done can any sense be made out of the situation at hand.

Rally around the flag

one persons abuse is another persons loss

I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America..

How does the rest of it go?

Americans have forgotten what patriotism is as well as the lyrics to some of the most inspirational songs). They abuse freedoms and rights and everyone else suffers the consequences.

In America, we are free to express our opinions, even if they don't flatter the politicians. Unfortunately, there is always one individual who crosses a fine line into disrespect and irresponsibility. Scott Tyler is obviously unhappy with this country, so perhaps he should go to South Africa or the Soviet Union for a brush-up course on how lucky we are to live here. As a result of this irresponsible, disrespectful artist, the Art Institute may lose government funding. Good luck studying at the Institute next year.

But Tyler isn't the only disrespectful American. I was taught as a child that life is priceless. Hence, in the ever popular abortion argument, I had always fought for pro-life. But it is an inherent right for a women to decide what is best. Those who use abortion as a form of birth control have put this privilege at risk.

The issue of gun control is very similar. The U. S. Constitution gives us the right to bear arms. Unfortunately, there are some people who have no respect for life and are quick to take it away. Fear is running rampant. Terrifying statistics have been published showing the numbers of attacks made against children, like the Lori Dann tragedy in Winnetka.

I do not discourage activists from fighting for something they feel is right. Just be responsible, and think about the nation as a whole. Will it benefit you or everyone?

If the government takes away a right or freedom every time someone abuses it, we will no longer be living in a free society.

Oh, say does that star spangled banner yet wave
o'r the land of the free and the home of the brave?

Some Tesla-- for a change

By Eric Jason
Staff Writer

I think that this page is in need of some variation. With that in mind, I wrote a letter to the editor last week, and the Harbinger invited me to write a review of some metal albums. So I guess it is time to practice what I preach.

The band I am reviewing is Tesla, a California-based band who had a debut album that won major critical acclaim. When I heard that they had a new album out, I was kind of worried that it would not meet up to the standards of their first release, Mechanical Resonance.

I found out that I had nothing to worry about, because their follow-up, The Great Radio Controversy, is as good or even better than Mechanical Resonance. This album also shows the potential of some of metal's newest talent- lead guitarist Frank Hannon, vocalist Jeff Keith, and rhythm guitarist Tommy Skeoch.

The album opens up in a very upbeat and confident atmosphere with Hang Tough. The next track, Lady Luck, keeps the aggressive tempo high but deals with lady luck taking a walk. The next two tracks, Heaven's Trail and To be a Man, deal with the downside of rock n' roll life.

The lyrics tell of the pressures of life offstage, dealing with groupies and people who do nothing but put them down for having long hair and playing rock n' roll. Both tracks are heavily blues influenced and Hannon does a great job showing off his slide guitar work that is reminiscent of Led Zeppelin or Aerosmith.

The atmosphere of this album, for the most part, is rebellious and aggressive. Good examples of this are Making Magic, a raunchy sex anthem, and Flight to Nowhere, which probably shows the best combination of Keith's powerful vocals and Hannon's six string attack.

Tesla also structures and ends some songs very strangely. The codas on Lady Daze, Crazy Nights, Yesterdaze Gone and Party's Over are abrupt with strong guitar riffs closing out songs instead of a slow fade. Did it for the Money, however, is the best example of different structuring.

It starts slow, then goes thrash for a few bars, letting the guitars and drums interact with short, heavy riffs and then the song goes back to standard metal. Did it for the Money is one of the choice cuts on this album. It tells a story of corruption and murder on the streets and crimes motivated for the need to get money.

The slower songs of Great Radio Controversy show off Tesla's musical roots. It is obvious that they were heavily influenced by Boston by the way Skeoch and Hannon use a mix of acoustic and electric guitars to give the song The Way It Is a lighter, more seventies atmosphere.

The lyrics deal with the unfairness of love. The next song, Love Song, starts with a classically influenced acoustic solo by Hannon that utilizes Bach-like structures. After the first minute or so, the electrics kick in and the song takes a rock n' roll sound. Jeff Keith's singing really stands out on this track.

The only disappointment on an otherwise flawless album is the last song, Paradise. It is a commercialized power ballad aimed at a pop audience.

What saves this song from being another brainless bit is the jam solo at the end, where Hannon and Skeoch trade lead breaks when the song gets to the climax. I hope this track is not released as a single because it does not accurately represent Tesla's straight-forward, non-commercial sound that has won them such praise.

Paradise is the type of song that bands use to get themselves a platinum album, but the album is strong enough to stand on its own. Without releasing a single, the album has already reached the top twenty a month after its release.

For the strength of the songs and the talent of Keith and Hannon that has come to age, I give this album a nine out of possible ten.

Tom Dahill shares Irish culture

By Brian Dawson
Staff Writer

What do bands like The Alarm, U2, The Pogues, Van Morrison and Hot House Flowers all have in common? They all started out playing Irish folk music.

St. Paul's Tom Dahill played his brand of Irish folk music on both acoustic guitar and fiddle when he played here last Monday. Growing up in the Irish neighborhoods of the Twin Cities, he learned the traditional songs from the Irish jams (ceilis) every Sunday.

"Most of the songs were passed down through the generations, though more songs have been lost than have been written down," said Dahill. Through his efforts, Irish folk music won't be lost.

The place-- the sold-out Capitol Centre in Landover, Maryland. The main event-- Metallica with special guests Queensryche.

Metallica is on a grueling world tour in support of their current album, And Justice for All. It has sold more than two million copies without hardly a stitch of airplay.

The members of Metallica are: James Hetfield on rhythm guitar/vocals, Lars Ulrich on drums, Kirk Hammett on lead guitar and Jason Newsted on bass. Newsted is the newest member. He joined them after the tragic death of Cliff Burton in 1986.

The show, to say the least, was awesome. It was two hours and ten minutes worth of pure power. The set opened with Blackened. After that, they went right into For Whom the Bell Tolls and Sanitarium.

No matter which Metallica album you prefer, you would have been satisfied by their performance. From Kill 'Em All they played Seek and

Happy birthday dear Batman...

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

1939 saw the introduction of one of America's most enduring fictional characters in the form of the Batman. A young comic book artist by the name of Bob Kane created the Darknight Detective and built the world of Gotham City around him.

1989 marks the 50th anniversary of the Batman, and there are many celebrations either in planning or in progress. DC Comics, the home of the Batman, has already begun one of two golden anniversary stories in their Detective Comics title. The other anniversary story is to run concurrently in the Batman comic beginning later this month.

The Detective Comics story is written by Sam Hamm who wrote the screenplay for this summer's Batman movie. The film has an all-star cast featuring Michael Keaton as Bruce Wayne. The choice of Keaton for the role of the Batman has stirred quite a controversy among the circles of film lovers and Darknight aficionados. Bob Kane himself, who is acting as consultant to the film, has said that he has faith in Keaton.

The selection of Keaton was tempered somewhat by the casting coup of the century — Jack Nicholson will portray the maniacal Joker. There is probably no actor better suited to play the part of the bloodthirsty villan. Also in the cast are Kim Basinger as Vicki Vale and Billy Dee Williams as attorney Harvey Dent, destined to become the villainous Two-Face.

The film will have no elements of the camp-like television series. It will be very dark, very serious, and probably very violent, perhaps even gaining an 'R' rating from the MPAA. The character of Batman will be portrayed as he was originally conceived: a tortured man, possibly schizophrenic, with a personal vendetta against the criminal life of Gotham City.

There will be no Robin in the motion picture, a decision made early by the production staff. They say the decision was made before Robin was killed by the Joker last year in the highly publicized "Death in the Family" storyline in the Batman comic.

Not everyone is exhibiting signs of excitement about the movie, even in the world of comics. Mark Evanier worked for Marvel Comics and has a tribute to Batman in the current issue of Detective Comics. He mentioned that he feels as if we will all be sick of hearing about Batman by the time the films opens, even though he remains somewhat enthusiastic about it. Evanier believes that, with all the hype, the movie can not possibly live up to its expectations.

The Batman movie is set to premiere on June 23. It will top off the career of Bob Kane, who started it all with the inspiration of having a man dress up like a bat to strike fear into the hearts of criminals. Kane attributes part of the character's endurance to the fact that Bruce Wayne is not endowed with any super powers. He is simply human, and any of us would conceivably aspire to be like him if we were so inclined.

The preview for the Batman movie has been showing in theaters across the country for many weeks now. It was shown here at Harper before the World's Worst Film Festival last month. Theater owners are reportedly clamoring for the clip to be shown, and response has been overwhelming. One person commented that if the response to the trailer is any indication, this could become one of the biggest moneymakers of all time.

Metallica

Destroy. From Master of Puppets they played the title song and Battery. They performed the majority of the new album, including Harvester of Sorrow and Eye of the Beholder.

One of the many highlights was the eerie Newsted bass solo. He cranked out some of the strangest sounds I have ever heard from a bass guitar. He was then joined by Hammett and Hetfield. The trio played a fantastic instrumental called To live is to Die.

Another highlight was the performance of One. Which is becoming very well known on MTV. Several explosions and bright lights made it interesting. After the song Hetfield replied, "Yeah man, that was my favorite Jethro Tull song," referring to the Grammy Award.

The set concluded with the title cut from And Justice for All. The song ended with a 30-foot statue of the lady on the album cover crumbling to the ground. Metallica exited and left the sold-out Capitol Centre hungry for a whole lot more.

The encore was just as powerful as the main set. It turned into a big jam session. They came back with two songs from Ride the Lightening— Creeping Death and Fade to Black. They exited again and came back with a Hammett guitar solo.

A string of Diamondhead cover songs followed the solo. They played Helpless, Last Caress and Am I Evil. A blistering version of Whiplash was next. Finally, the show closed with Breitlan an unreleased song, Metallica, exhausted stayed to celebrate with the crowd, passing out beers. With happy smiles, they retired to their dressing rooms.

Queensryche was a fine opening act. They are in support of their new album, Operation Mindcrime. They played the oldies as well as the newer songs. Such as: Queen of the Riche and Revolution Calling. Their up and coming song, Eyes of a stranger, was well done.

Metallica puts more energy into a show than any band I have ever seen, and I have seen a lot. I have been fortunate enough to see Metallica twice on this tour at the UIC Pavilion and Capitol Centre. Both shows were sold-out and filled to the rim with power, speed and energy. Metallica is here to stay. Master of Puppets has already become a metal anthem. Metallica is undoubtedly going to be the heavy metal band of the 90's.

Meet the battling bands

Threat

By Lisa Aust
Staff Writer

They practice in a small room over an abandoned store on downtown Elgin. There are padlocks on the door. Against one wall is a refrigerator containing beer, exclusively. On top rests a glass tank littered with shredded newspaper and two pairs of eyes peering out.

Charles Manson is the name of the black rat-white the white one prefers to go anonymous. Dominating the room are huge black speakers and an impressive, silver drum set. The members of Threat stand around drinking and laughing at a seemingly constant stream of inside jokes.

Threat consists of four members. Joe Castellon plays guitar and provides backing vocals. Jim Kirk plays guitar as well and provides lead vocals. Jim Malone plays the drums. John Sterba plays base and barking backup. Though none of these guys go to Harper, they will participate in the Battle of the Bands. They heard about it through Kirk's little sister.

Threat doesn't have much of a following at Harper. We need the exposure," Sterba states flatly, "We don't care for the prizes, we just want the exposure."

They describe themselves simply as metal. Their music generally sounds like it has Megadeath influences, but the diversity of style and sound lends itself to a class of its own.

Threat has a gig at the Thirsty Whale on April 1 with Tatoo. Past gigs include Chances R, Boy Scat, Oddesey, and McGreggor's. They advise others to be weary of McGreggor's. Kirk explains why, "It was a joke. That's the worst place to play.

Frenzy

The most typical stereotype of a rock band is of dumb, beer drinking dropouts of society. By just being themselves, Frenzy has dispelled this belief. They have been playing together for three years and have developed a hard rock tradition without the reputation.

The five members of Frenzy are each musically talented. Phil Baranchik has been playing guitar for six years. Matt Halminiak has four years of vocal experience as well as six years of piano experience. Kevin Morrisey has six and a half years of percussion under his belt. Lon Ripley has been playing guitar for five years. Seth Selkow has spent the past four years playing bass guitar.

Baranchik attends Harper as an art and music major. Selkow also attends Harper majoring in chemistry. Ripley is a senior at New Trier High School. Halminiak is a graduate of the now defunct Arlington Heights High School. Morrisey dropped out of Berkley College of Music because, "It was all theory and no application. I was learning but not using it, so I thought I'd come home to play in the band."

For a time, Frenzy was without a singer as well as the drummer. After trying several people they incorporated Halminiak into the band. His voice and personality clicked with the others.

Frenzy's educational record is very impressive. The individual members devote a large part of their lives to music, both playing and listening to it. An inherent part of their style is their diversity in style. Baranchik concurs, "We are real happy in the direction we have gone, because you can't categorize our songs."

Morrisey continues the dialogue, "We can take anything and everything and incorporate it. Take I use jazz in our hard rock. Its weird, I know but it works."

Ripley nods his head and adds, "It makes you a better all around musician. Just saying 'all I want to listen to is hard rock' isn't deep enough. There's no place to grow."

Baranchik and Morrisey have been planning on going to the Musicians Institute in California. Their first and main priority, however, is the band. Frenzy is currently looking for a producer.

'88 - '89 men's basketball overview

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

Although the Harper Hawks finished the year with a 5-22 record overall and a 2-12 N4C mark, which tied them for last place, the season had many highlights.

One was the performances of several key players including Sophomores Travis Perry, Joe Passi, and Kevin Simpson and Freshmen Donald Pierce, Jason Brooks, and Jerome Hardrick.

Perry earned many honors this season and by and large, he was the team's most valuable player. Perry was the lone Hawk to have a scoring average in double figures this season with a 19.7 average, which placed him in the Top 15 in the region. He also finished second in free throw shooting with a 72.8 percentage and third in rebounds with 169.

He also received third team N4C honors for the second year in a row by finishing second in scoring with a 21.4 average and ninth in rebounding with a 7.7 average. Travis was also named N4C Player of the Week on December 19th for his performance against Truman and Waukesha Tech in which he had 57 points, 15 rebounds, and 5 assists that week. Perry was also named to the Region IV East All-Star Team.

But the one big highlight of Perry's season was a 39 point performance in an 86-83 win over Joliet on January 31st that included 21 out of 25 at the free throw line. "Travis had a super game," Head Coach Bill Probst said.

Another player who had an outstanding season was Passi who received Honorable Mention from the N4C. Passi rewrote almost all of Harper's rebounding records. He broke the school's offensive rebound record with 136 and tied the mark for most defensive boards in a season with 191. A 25 rebound performance against Rock Valley on February 4th broke a 18 year old record for most rebounds in a single game. He also broke the record for most rebounds in a season with 327, which placed him third in Region IV.

Passi also broke the school record for most rebounds in a conference season with 219. That also gave him the N4C rebounding title as his nearest competitor (Rock Valley's Chris Lake) was 69 boards in back of him. He topped it all off by being selected to the Region IV All-Star Team.

Simpson also received Honorable Mention from the N4C this year. He lead the team in assists and finished 8th in the conference averaging 4.2 a game.

Pierce had some memorable games as he finished third in the N4C in rebounding with a 9.4 average and second in blocked shots with 25. Against Waukesha Tech on December 17th, Pierce led a second half rally with five steals that second half overcame a 36-32 halftime deficit to give the Hawks a 72-65 victory. He also had 13 points and 12 rebounds in that game.

Brooks also produced some memorable moments. He finished sixth in the N4C in assists with a 5.7 average, including a season-high 12 against Joliet on January 7th. He was also named to the Harper Thanksgiving Classic All-Tournament Team by putting out two sensational games against Lake County and Richland. In those two games he had 27 points, including seven three-pointers.

Hardrick joined the team after football season in November. After having to leave the squad for a month and a half due to an illness in the family, Hardrick finally showed his potential in the final three games of the year by averaging 17 points and 10 rebounds. Hardrick said, "I think I was starting to play up to my potential, but I was a little rusty."

Also contributing to this year's squad were Chad Hull, Dean Petrulakis, and John Townsend.

Hull had his best game of the year on December 22nd against Oakton where his 15 points contributed to a 72-70 Harper win.

Petrulakis stood tall against #1 Illinois Valley on January 26th where his 10 points, including a pair of three-pointers, kept Harper close. "I was really feeling confident," he said.

Townsend's best game of the year was against Richland where he had seven points including a three-pointer at the halftime buzzer.

As a team, the Hawks may have won only five games, but they were able to stand their ground against some of the top teams in the region.

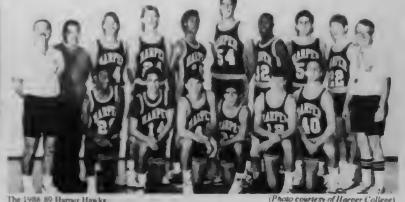

In both their meetings against #1 Illinois Valley, the Hawks played two good ballgames. In the first meeting on January 3rd at Oglesby, Harper came back to outscore the Apaches 38-37 in the second half after being outscored 53-32 in the first half.

In their second meeting in Building M, the Hawks stayed with IV for 3/4 of the game before the Apaches pulled away.

Next season is full of speculation as rumors persist whether or not Head Coach Bill Probst will return next year. After two years at the helm, Probst has had an 11-45 overall record. Many players agree that Probst has a good knowledge of the game, but he fails to use it to his full potential. Rumors also persist that there could be anywhere from one to eight players returning pending on Probst's decision to leave or not.

One thing's for sure, the 1989-90 Harper Basketball season opener is November 14th against Morton in Building M.

NCAA Tourney Picks

By Chris Boghossian
Staff Writer

The NCAA Tournament begins Thursday between 64 of the top college basketball teams in the nation.

The teams selected are divided into four regionals: the Midwest, the Southeast, the East and the West.

Each regional contains 16 teams. The winner of each will travel to Seattle with a shot at the National Championship.

In the Midwest, Illinois is seeded first, with Syracuse, Missouri and Louisville rounding out the top.

Oklahoma heads the Southeast, but North Carolina and Michigan figure to have strong showings.

The East is headed by Georgetown, the tournament favorite. Duke, Stanford, Iowa and North Carolina State are the other seeds.

In the West, Arizona is seeded first followed by Indiana, Seton Hall, and UNLV.

Ok, enough with what the experts think. Illinois and Missouri will battle for the Midwest title, Oklahoma and Michigan will duke it out in the Southeast, Georgetown will wipe out everybody in the East, and Seton Hall will beat Arizona in the West.

After Illinois destroys Missouri and Michigan edges Oklahoma, the Illini and the Wolverines will meet for the third time this year. The outcome will be the same, Illinois.

Although I hate to admit it, Georgetown looks awesome and will beat Seton Hall handily.

An Illinois-Georgetown showdown for the top team in the nation? You got it.

Illinois, led by Nick Anderson and Kenny Battle, look unbeatable in their victories over Iowa and Michigan. They will shock Georgetown with their quickness and great defense and end up as the National Champs. Bet on it.

Great season for Hawk wrestlers

By Jamie Beeson
Staff Writer

The Harper wrestling team had an excellent season under the expert guidance of Coach Norm Lovelace. In his 16 years, he has become one of the twenty winningest wrestling coaches in the nation with a record of 179-58-2. Lovelace commented, "Overall we had a very successful season."

Harper wrestlers consistently placed at tournaments this season. They won the DuPage Duals, and they were named champions of the Harper Invitational. The team finished second at the Carthage Invite, fourth at the North Central Tournament and they only lost two of their dual meets, one of which was against national champion Lincoln.

By the end of the season, the team was ranked 17th in the nation. They placed fourth as a team in the Region IV Tournament and had two wrestlers qualify for nationals at COD.

The two wrestlers who qualified for the national tournament and were season standouts were Eric Bakey and Mark Cecchi.

Bakey won more than 40 matches this season. He was the Region IV champion at 158 pounds and he also went to the quarterfinal round of the nationals. Probably the highlight of his season was being named MVP at the Harper Invite.

Coach Lovelace said, "Eric could very well be the national champ if it weren't for some tough calls."

Cecchi also had an outstanding year. He consistently placed at tournaments and he never failed to score points. He was the Region IV Runner-Up at 177 pounds and he won two tough matches at the nationals.

Lovelace said, "Mark has placed in almost every tournament. He's done a tremendous job by keeping us in the tournaments."

Other wrestlers who contributed to the team's success were Jason Finucane, Keith D'Mann, and Rob Malecke. Finucane and D'Mann placed fourth at the Region IV tournament. Malecke had a fine season, consistantly winning matches despite having suffered from a separated shoulder.

Injuries became a serious problems, as did academic ineligibility at the start of the season. The team overcame their problems and still had a fine season.

Coach Lovelace said, "They did a heck of a job in spite of it (injury). They chose not to quit."

Bakey said, "We have a small team to begin with. With some of the guys hurt, a lot of points were lost."

The grapplers are now looking towards the 89-90 season with as many as eight lettermen returning next year.

Lovelace said, "I am excited about their positive attitude for next year."

Many are already pumping iron in preparation for next year.

Keith D'Mann said, "I'm always ready to do better."

"A lot of people will be surprised. We feel we can contend with anybody. We're gonna rock next year," Bakey added.

Softball outlook bright

By Chris Boghossian
Staff Writer

The women's softball team, led by new head coach Martha Bolt, opens its season on March 21 against Lake County.

Bolt, who has been the assistant athletic director at Harper for 22 years, has high hopes for the upcoming season.

"I'm very optimistic about this team," Bolt said. "We have three returning players at very strong positions."

Catcher Connie Angel, pitcher Michele Theriault, and third baseman Lynn Hoyer are second year players. Their experience, along with a very strong group of 10 newcomers, make the Hawks a contender in the NJAC, the toughest conference in the state.

"One of our strong points is that we have a lot of depth," said Bolt. "We have back-ups at any number of positions across the field."

Our freshman pitcher, Barbera Barnett, looks great, and with Michele (Theriault) coming off a great season last year, our pitching is very strong."

The team, which has been practicing for almost two months, appears to be solid at every position.

"Our outfielders (Leslie DeMonte, Amy Kozsol, and Karen Larson) are dynamite," said Bolt. "They all have very good arms."

Kathleen Bouvert, Lisa Devereaux, Georgine Grisco, Christine LaSpina, Lisa McKinney, and Sue Tra bael gun Hoyer at the infield positions.

Last year's team ended with an impressive 18-12 record, but Bolt is not looking too far ahead. "We are just going to take one game at a time," she said. "I'm sure we'll have our share of success.

"All of the players are leaders. Everybody is working together very well. They are not a selfish team."

Bolt also credits the tremendous amount of help from her assistant coaches, Julie Elfelson and Robin Drackley. Drackley was a player on last year's team.

After practicing inside for so long, Bolt and the players are looking forward to some nicer weather. "We can't wait until it gets nice so we can move along into the season," said Bolt.

"We are really pulling together extremely well," Bolt concluded. "Everyone wants to do well for the benefit of the entire team."

Tennis team heats up

The men's tennis team's season got into the swing of things with daily workouts and drills in the gym. Practice continues indoors until the weather warms up. About twenty new prospects are trying out for the team and hoping to win a spot on this year's roster.

Head coach Roy Kearns says, "I have observed some new talent that could be very helpful in making this team a winner once again."

However, the true value of the team lies within the four returning players that were national qualifiers last season. These men are Bill Adams(Barrington), Mark Bartelson(Bartington), Jay Olrick(Elk Grove) and team Captain John Pitchford(Arlington Heights).

"I have full confidence that these four guys will perform 100% again this season. You really could not ask for a better group of winning talent and I feel fortunate to have them returning this year. I expect the entire tennis program to be strong top to bottom once again," commented Coach Kearns.

Last year's team finished second in Illinois. This qualified them for a trip to Texas to compete in national competition where they finished 14th in the nation. Returning team members know from experience what a great time and good playing experience the trip to Texas is and they will be working hard to make it there again.

The teams first competition begins March 21 with a three day trip to Springfield to compete against Lincolnland and Sangamon State.

Chicago sports rap

By Kevin Oates
Staff Writer

Opening day at Wrigley Field is just three weeks away so I feel it is time for my Chicago Cubs preview.

So far this spring the Cubs look like a sorry bunch. Poor hitting, fielding and pitching have all been evident in their spring training performance. But, surprise, I predict that the Cubs are going to be an improved ball club from last year. Keep in mind, I didn't say great- just improved.

On a whole the Cubs outfield looks Ok. It looks like the Cubs might have a center fielder and lead-off man in Jerome Walton. His defense is outstanding and if he can handle major league pitching consistantly, he'll be just what the Cubs need. Mitch Webster can be very fair in left field, and Dawson will still be very good in right.

The infield looks good. Law, Dunston, Sandberg and Grace make up a solid foursome. I predict Mark Grace will be an all-star this year. Wait and see.

Damon Berryhill looks solid but where's his back-up? Joe Girardi is very suspect. Remember Steve Lake and Jim Sundberg? I felt they were good but I guess the Cubs felt otherwise.

At this point, the pitching could be very good or very mediocre. The starting five will probably be Rick Sutcliffe, Greg Maddux, Paul Kilgus, Mike Harkey and Mike Bielecki. It could be a great starting five but Harkey and Bielecki are questionable.

The relief pitching is much improved. I think the five relievers will be Calvin Schiraldi, Scott Sanderson, Goose Gossage, Mitch Williams and Jeff Pico. This could change. Please get rid of Gossage.

The Cubs are a very iffy team, but if all the ifs come through, it may be a very promising season.

3 vie for Student Trustee position

Candidate profiles

By Mona Isa
News Editor

Three students are vying for the student trustee position in the April 4 and 5 election. They are Darlene Ivarson, Paul Lombardi and Jeff Michalski.

Ivarson, a Biology major, is currently a Senator of the Life and Human Sciences Division and a member of the Program Board. She feels that she can relate student opinions to the board's attention because of her experience with Harper.

One aspect she wants to focus on during her term is getting more student involvement with the student clubs and organizations.

"I hope to set up a system in which I can get more student input on publicizing activities and events," added Ivarson.

Lombardi, a data processing and business student, has also been involved in the Student Senate. He is currently a Senator of the Physical Education Athletic Recreation Division (P.E.A.R) and feels that he has become familiar with policies.

He says, "Through my experience as a Senator and being a member of the track team and Data Processing Associations, I feel capable of representing the student body."

"My main goal is to become directly involved with students and to link communications between Harper and the surrounding community," added Lombardi.

Lombardi hopes to continue the S.C.I.Q (Students Concerns, Ideas and Questions) that the current trustee, Laura Jacobson established during her term.

Michalski, an accounting student, intends to make students more aware of the services and aid that Harper offers for the new incoming students so they find out about them before their second year.

"I intend to compile, distribute, and encourage the use of this information to aid the student in a successful college career," added Michalski.

He will be revising the suggestion boxes currently displayed by offering a "Talk to Me" campaign.

"This will allow students to voice their opinions via questionnaires that will be made available on the box itself," added Michalski.

Overall, Michalski feels "that better communication will increase the colleges activities as a whole."

The new student trustee will begin his/her term on April 14 until the following year April 14, 1990.

Voting will be held in Building A at the Information Desk, Building D at the Computer Lab, Building F at the Media Center, and Building J at the Box Office.

Job Fair

By Marc J. Bolke
Staff writer

The Harper College Placement Office will be hosting its second annual Employment Fair here at Harper April 4. The fair will be in Building M, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

No registration is required, everyone is welcome.

Representatives from more than 100 companies will be here to talk to students and residents about job opportunities in the area.

The Placement office is gearing up for record crowds. Last semesters fair brought thousands of perspective employees.

Big-name companies from many different fields and sectors will have a variety of jobs to offer. Representatives will talk to students and community members who are currently searching for a career.

"These fairs really save a lot of leg work for job seekers," said Christopher Kranz, Placement Specialist.

Companies such as AT & T, Allstate Insurance, Citicorp Savings, Commonwealth Edison, The Daily Herald, Honeywell, J.C. Penneys, U.P.S., Northwest Community Hospital, Motorola, and many others will be present.

Smaller companies will also have representatives on hand to answer questions.

Board Update

Pro/Tech Agreement

By Brian Dawson
Staff Writer

An agreement has been reached on the first contract for the Professional/Technical staff, Local 1600, Cook County Teachers Union. The Harper Board of Trustees ratified the collective bargaining agreement at the board meeting on March 23. President Paul Thompson thanked all that were involved for resolving this matter.

A tentative agreement was reached between the negotiating teams on February 27, 1989. The Pro/Tech membership voted to ratify the agreement on March 9 and 10.

The agreement provides for a salary increase of 5.5 percent for fiscal 1988-89, and 4.5 percent plus a $500 flat dollar amount in 1989-90. The salary increase for Pro/Tech employees for the first six months of the 1990-91 year will be determined July 1, 1990. Other provisions of the contract address benefits, procedures, professional development funds, and promotions.

Faculty Promotions

The Board of Trustees announced the promotion of 8 faculty members for the 1989-90 academic year. The 8 faculty members were recommended for their promotions after a thorough review of the materials and information submitted by the applicants for promotion and the recommendations of the Faculty Promotion Committee and the appropriate administrators.

The following faculty were awarded promotions:

Susan Farmer (Reading/Learning Skills) from instructor to assistant professor. Farmer joined the Harper faculty in Fall of 1987.

Dale Ford (Nursing) from instructor to assistant professor. Ford began at Harper in Fall of 1985.

Michael Vrjuk (Management) from assistant professor to associate professor. Vrjuk came to Harper in Spring, 1981.

The following Associate Professors will receive full Professorship this Fall:

Gerald Mellenthin (Data Processing) joined the faculty in the Fall of 1971.

Ina Norris (Refrigeration & Air Conditioning) came to Harper in Fall, 1972.

Barbara Radebaugh (Management) began here in the fall of 1975.

Jim Reft (Psychology), Joining the faculty in Fall, 1970.

Paul Sipera (Geology) came to Harper in Fall, 1976.

College News Update

Dropping Classes?:

The Registrar's Office would like to remind students that the last day to withdraw from full-semester classes is April 15. This will ensure a grade of 'W' on your transcripts. Forms for dropping classes are available in the Registrar's Office, A213.

Registration for summer and fall classes:

Early registration for currently or previously enrolled students for summer semester is April 24-27. Appointment cards will be available in the Registrar's Office beginning April 10 at 8 a.m. Night-time registration for the evening students only will be April 24 and 25. Appointment cards will also be available for fall semester during this time. Registration for fall semester classes will be May 8-12.

Tuition and fees must be paid by May 30 or schedules will be cancelled.

Tuition Refund Changes:

A new tuition refund policy was approved by the Board of Trustees. The new policy calls for 100% refund through the first week of classes, and a 75% refund through the second week of classes. There will be no refund after the second week of classes.
The previous policy called for 100% refund of tuition prior to the start of classes, 80% during the first week of classes, and a 50% refund of tuition during the second week.
The change in the refund policy will provide more flexibility for students and a more efficient administration for the college by using only refund percentages.

Students win scholarships:

Three students in the Harper College Food Management Service Program received scholarship awards for their academic excellence by the Chicago Food Brokers Association. They are Peter Hegele, Lisa Miller, and Carrie Sinemi.
In addition, other scholarships are awarded for students seeking a career in food service management. To find out more contact Harper Food Service Management Program at 397-3000 ext. 2578.

Escape from New York:

A real-life adventure

By Marc Balke and Tari Vaughn
Staff Writers

Wednesday 6:30 a.m.: Two tired, but mild-mannered Harbinger editors hopped into a dirty maroon Escort in search of excitement, adventure, journalistic knowledge (we did have to attend a few of the convention's sessions, after all), and survival in the Big Apple.

8:00 a.m.: We boarded the United 727 and soon found our first obstacle- THE SNORTER! After surviving the first set of convulsions during takeoff, The Snorter settled back for a leisurely nap, only to be awakened by the tall, blonde stewardess.

Once arisen from the dead, he resumed his lifelong ambition- snorting (of course). Our mission was to survive the one and a half hour plane ride without strangling him. We passed the first test by the skin of our teeth.

9:45 a.m.: We landed (accompanied by another series of convulsions by our good friend). At which time, we immediately began our quest for transportation to the hotel. Three desks later, we were sent to a booth to share a taxi.

Thus began The Cab Ride from Hell! We felt sorry for the non-English speaking driver, until we saw the shining gold Rolex that adorned his left wrist, at which time we quit empathizing and began praying.

1:30 p.m.: After checking in, getting trapped in an elevator with a bellman (and successfully rescued by a large janitor), finding the other attending staff member, and discovering a decent restaurant, we set out for the Empire State Building.

It looked a lot closer than it was!

About 45 minutes later, we arrived. We purchased two tickets, and began the stuffy, cramped ascent to the observation deck. The view was beautiful. A penny dropped from the top will not kill one of the inferior, Barbie doll creatures below. (We tried it.) We headed back for the elevator.

12:30 a.m.: After a Broadway show, and a $40 Ponderosa steak, (thanks to the New York Marriot Hotel), we began our quest for the hotel. We battled beggars and other seedy "night people" before reaching our goal.

Thursday, 9 a.m.: Yes, we did attend some lectures!

2 p.m.: Central Park. Is it really as bad as they say? During the afternoon hours, the only illegal activity we found was two fools trying to earn money by trying to play heavy metal music. (well, it should have been illegal).

10 p.m.: Mission: the World Trade Center, and our first New York bus ride.

How were we supposed to know that the bus ride would end in a ramshackled, nearly uninhabited neighborhood somewhere in West Village? (Did you see that shadow moving?) We continued the journey on foot.

How were we to know the World Trade Center was closed? (Marc, are you sure the information book said 12:00? We didn't think so.) There were a few photographic opportunities to be taken at midnight, though. One couldn't just lie on the sidewalk and look up at the large building in broad daylight, could one?

12:30 a.m.: Let's take a taxi to the hotel. O.k., so let's find one. What, the driver knows a shortcut? It will take us all over Manhattan, and probably a few of the nearby burroughs, too? Sounds good to us!

2:30 a.m.: Two hours, five near misses, and thirty bucks later, we found the sanctuary known to modern man as the Doral Inn.

Friday, St. Patrick's Day, 8 p.m.: Any city with a huge St. Patrick's Day Parade must have green beer! (It's tradition!) Being in N.Y. with an Irish editor, we couldn't pass up the opportunity to experience St. Paddy's in the Big Apple! HA! THERE IS NO SUCH THING! We tried, believe me, we tried. Not even a little party in an Irish pub! We began having our doubts about the benefits of life in the Big City.

Saturday, 1 p.m.: The convention was over. We had all afternoon to absorb real life in N.Y. Back to Central Park. What? Rain? It can't rain on our day off! O.k., we'll wait for the rain to let up while we explore the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

4 p.m.: We wanted to explore this place, not live here! Where did the exit go? It was here a few hours ago!

4:30 p.m.: We found it! It's still raining. So, we get a little wet, let's just get back to the hotel.

7 p.m.: Marc, are you sure you want to see Oh, Calcutta? Do you know anything about it?

No, but you heard it was good. O.k., if you say so.

9:40 p.m.: The strip show began. Tari, why didn't you tell me? Well Marc, you never asked.

Sunday, 10 a.m.: We set out for The Statue. Two busses later we arrived at the Circle Line Ferry.

Once on Ellis Island, we

Salvador 's war against education

Max Friedman, a Latin American Studies senior at Oberlin College, was at the University of El Salvador from Jan. 11 through Feb. 3, 1989. This is an account of what he learned.

On Jan 10, a University of El Salvador (UES) campus auditorium was destroyed by an explosion. The newly formed death squad ARDE, which stands for "Revolutionary Anti-communist Extermination Action," took responsibility.

On Jan 20, uniformed soldiers arrested Victor Manuel Sanchez, a clerk in the Economics department, on his way to campus. He was taken to the Infantry Brigade garrison, beaten and detained for several days. In the meantime, other soldiers ransacked his house, told his 2- and 4-year-old daughters their father was a subversive, and said they'd never see him again.

On Feb. 2, economics student Mario Flores Cubas was taken from his San Salvador home by uniformed soldiers. His bullet-riddled body, showing signs of torture, turned up the next day in Sonsonate province.

When news of Cuba's death reached the campus, students hit the streets in fierce demonstrations.

Violence against UES is not new. In June, 1980, the army put down student demonstrations by invading with weapons firing. They attacked professors in their classrooms. They looted the buildings. Several students were raped.

The campus was closed, and stayed closed until 1984, when its students, teachers and staffers began trying to reconstruct it from scratch.

"When we returned to campus, we found that they had burned every book with a red cover, even the Bible," remembered Roberto (a pseudonym).

On Jan. 12, I attended a meeting held to organize a protest march against the continuing military presence around the campus.

"A regime in its dying agony makes use of all the forces left to it," said the vice president of the General Students Association. "The military cordon is psychological warfare against the university. It is an unacceptable interruption of our studies. It is intended to isolate the university to prevent student mobilization."

College in a war zone. Students set tires ablaze during a protest of the Salvadoran government's war against their university. (Photo courtesy CPS/Max Friedman)

The next day we walked out of UES's main gates four short blocks to the U.S. Embassy, a fortress within corrugated steel walls covered in spray paint from previous demonstrations. While soldiers in flak jackets watched, the students lifted their notebooks and pencils into the air, chanting "these are our weapons."

Student demonstrations nearly always focus on the U.S. Embassy because the United States supplies 50/80 percent of the Salvadoran government's budget, some $1.1 million per day in military and economic aid. As the students see it, the military campaign against them can go on only as long as the U.S. allows it.

In talking to the students, they frequently asked about how likely it was that the new U.S. president would cut off the aid. What did I think of George Bush's Central American policy? Would he be different from Ronald Reagan? Could public opinion influence him to stop the war?

My answer invariably left them unsatisfied. "He doesn't really have a policy yet, so it's hard to tell," I'd say. "We'll have to wait and see."

Instructors receive learning opportunity

Harper News Release

Six members of the Harper College faculty have been granted sabbatical leave for all or part of the 1989-90 academic year.

Sabbatical leave is granted to Harper faculty by the Board of Trustees for the purpose of study or research which will add to their work with students. Applicants for sabbatical must be tenured faculty who have been full-time employees for at least six years.

Dennis Brennen, an associate professor of economics, will spend the academic year doing research and writing a dissertation required for his Ph.D. from Purdue University.

Cecelia Cooper, assistant professor of mathematics, will spend the spring 1990 semester researching and reviewing computer software available for use in teaching mathematics, particularly in the calculus sequence.

Randy Illg, assistant professor in the Park Management Program, will be completing requirements for an M.S. degree. His work will emphasize teaching skills for the adult student.

History Professor Larry King plans to spend fall 1989 taking classes at Northwestern University. The classes will give him a new perspective on some facets of American history.

Patricia Smith-Pierce, Professor of Speech, will attend world legislative bodies in Helsinki and Brussels to compare persuasive speaking styles among delegates from various countries.

Joseph Yohanan of Winnetka, associate professor and coordinator of the architectural technology program, will spend the 1990 spring semester investigating and teaching current techniques in architecture modeling.

Vice President of Academic Affairs Dr. David Williams said, "We are pleased that the Board of Trustees support this type of professional development program."

Wilsondisc makes periodical searches a snap

By Alisa Chislund
Features Editor

Tired of spending hour upon hour manually sifting through periodical indexes trying to find resource material to include in your term paper? There is an easier way.

Since January 1989, students and faculty at the Harper College library have the opportunity to electronically access several years of information instantly via the Wilsondisc information retrieval system.

The Wilsondisc allows users to explore general subject areas in the browse mode or utilize a key word search in the wilsearch mode.

Information can be accessed via compact disc on four separate indexes: business, social science, humanities, and the reader's guide.

Students who use the Wilsondisc can search and print citations from the indexes for articles, books, reports, book reviews, and other topics that may be beneficial in preparing reports, term papers or research projects.

"The Wilsondisc is a transition between the card catalog and the on-line catalog," said Mary Severs, catalog librarian. "It's a welcome change for the students. We're in the media generation. Computers don't scare them. They're already used to video and television. Computer indexes are a step up. They're fast, current and easy to use."

"There are still some students who prefer to use the printed indexes," said Severs. "We hope more students will come in and use the Wilsondisc indexes. They provide more up-to-date information than the printed indexes in a fraction of the time."

For more information about the Wilsondisc or to set up a demonstration contact Severs at extension 2455.

Taking a bite out of the Big Apple

were informed that it would take two and a half hours to reach the crown. We continued, undaunted.

Is it my imagination, or are these stairs getting steeper and smaller?

Unfortunately, the view from the crown was, well, anti-climactic. In a space large enough for five people, we crowded around the windows to catch a glimpse of New York City.

A glimpse was about all we got before we were crowded down the stairs by the other ten hundred thousand people pushing behind us.

8 p.m.: Our plane is delayed due to "mechanical problems". Do you have another flight leaving tonight? No, well, let's get something to drink.

Did you know that LaGuardia Airport has no ice? We're not kidding. NONE! NADA! ZIL CH! We looked, but to no avail. We were furious, our plane was delayed, and we had warm Coke!

9:30 p.m.: One last obstacle to overcome. The plane ride home. (No smokers! This is going to be easier than we thought.)

Good-bye, New York, we'll definitely be back for another bite of the Big Apple.

Wellness week & health fair

During the fifth annual Harper College Wellness Week, April 11-13, free seminars and workshops will explore memory changes, fears and phobias, sexuality, compulsive overeating, prayer, chemical dependency, cancer risk reduction and cardiac health.

Practical topics such as managing your medicine cabinet, health issues for the traveler, dependent adult children and care of the elderly in your home will be presented along with audience participation programs on walking, yoga, and aerobics with weights. Individuals will have the opportunity to learn to love yourself, manage difficult people, increase self esteem and use natural highs to enhance the joy of living.

On Wednesday, April 12 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the Student Center of Building A, the Health Fair will feature free exhibits, information and screenings provided by over 60 health agencies and departments of Harper College.

Services include blood pressure, body fat distribution, vision and glaucoma, diabetes, hearing, oral cancer, foot and scoliosis screenings. Free blood typing, nutritional analysis, coronary risk appraisal, pulmonary function screening and hearing aid evaluation are also offered. Harper College Health Service will do fingerstick cholesterol screening for $3. Northwest Community Hospital will provide a complete blood chemistry screening for a $20 charge; advance appointments are required and can be made through Harper College Health Service, 397-3000, extension 2268.

A complete schedule of all the Wellness Week programs and Health Fair activities are available in A362 or at the Information Booth in A Building.

Who can you trust these days?

The Student Trustee is an elected official acting as liaison between the Board of Trustees and approximately 25,000 students. Consistently, less than 1% of the student body participates in the election. Hopefully this is due to uninformed students, not apathetic fools.

In past years, the board has approved tax referendums, tuition increases, school budgets, expenditures on a monthly basis, and (just recently) selected the president of the College. Anyone who claims this position is unimportant should be shot (no, informed and encouraged to vote.)

The two student trustees serving during my stay have made substantial contributions. Greg Miller, 87-88, brought important subjects to the board's attention and was a member of the presidential search committee. Laura Jacobson, 88-89, has also brought important topics to the board and initiated Students Comments Ideas and Questions (SCIQ) boxs which made the board aware of students concerns. However, this does not ensure competency of future trustees.

Jacobson has arranged a panel in the fireplace lounge of Building A. This gives you an opportunity to ask them questions and see their viewpoint. For more information, contact Laura Jacobson at extension 2244 or 2242.

If you haven't already read the profile of the candidates on the front page, take a few minutes to browse the comments and ideas. Then, on April 4 or 5, take ten seconds to jot down a name. What the hell, you paid for the privilege when Harper charged you the student activity fee.

Physics rebate

Regarding your "news item" on a tuition refund for a physics student: I can relate to this problem. I too flunked my first Physics test and a few thereafter. There is nothing surprising about this. Physics is a difficult subject.

The University of Illinois selects most of its students from the top ten percent of their high school class. Yet one-third of them receive a grade of D, F, or W in the beginning physics course. If Harper's failure rate was not as bad or worse, it would be astounding.

The student asking for a refund says that her professor did not cover test material in class. College teachers are not obliged to cover test material in class. Mine never did and I never expected them to.

The student also said the entire class failed the first test and the instructor's grading was inconsistent. It would appear to me that an instructor who fails the entire class may be lacking in some pedagogical virtues, but consistency in grading is not one of them.

Refund? If your physics professor does not know the material, does not show up for class, comes unprepared to teach or asks test questions in the field of political science, you have grounds for a refund. However, the fact that the tests are too difficult does not qualify a student for a refund.

One of the barometers of a good instructor (although by no means the only one) is how well students do in subsequent courses and in later life. Our physics department gets some good reviews in this regard.

Engineering students from four-year institutions write back quite often to thank us for being so demanding. With a good physics background, courses in applied mechanics, electricity and thermodynamics are doable, if not enjoyable.

One University of Illinois engineering student wrote to the dean of the TMPS division to tell him about the late Jordan Seiband of our physics department. He said, "He was a real bastard, and you should have more people just like him." Believe me, we do.

Raise your skirts?

I confess I hung around Building "J" last night to see who would actually PAY MONEY to hear or see Pamela Des Barres, author of I'm with the Band: Confessions of a Groupie. Surely I saw some of these same people at Carl Sagan's lecture last month, or maybe not.

Anyway, here is a woman who brags about being used by numerous men and then tries to legitimize her tasteless sexual activities by presenting herself as a lecturer and best-selling authoress. What does she possibly have to tell us? When she lost her virginity and to whom? How many times she did IT with Don Johnson? How big is Mick Jagger? Who Cares?

Ms. Des Barres' message is clear: "Raise your skirts, not your IQ!" It's an insult to every hardworking female student on this campus.

And, I wonder who we have to thank at Harper for bringing her to us. I suggest more thought be given to the "lecturers" brought to this campus, and no more groupies, please.

Library foot molestations

I am a librarian. I have worked here for over 16 years. I have gone through many trials and seen many strange things, but something has happened that upsets me, and should be brought to your attention.

Last Thursday, a man, for the third time this semester, has committed foot molestaion (played footsie) with female students. Life gets stranger every year!

Although I have seen this man, he is rather nondescript and I can not remember any details. I do not believe I could identify him if I saw him again.

He comes around noon and scans the study area for women not wearing shoes. He then sits opposite the girl, kicks off his dock shoes, and proceeds to move his foot on top of the girls (his foot is not adorned by a sock).

It scares me to think about this weird individual. Some of the victims have reported this incident to Public Safety (those that did not enjoy it), but so far he has not been caught and I wanted students to be aware of the situation.

There are many scholarships offered to Harper College students. For more information or scholarship applications stop by the Financial Aid Office in A-364.

The Auxiliary of Good Shepherd Hospital is offering $1000 and $1500 scholarships for students residing in the hospital area pursuing a health-related field. The number of scholarships will depend on the number and qualifications of the applicants, however, at least four will be given. The deadline for application is April 29.

The Veterans Administration announced that $8 million is available in scholarships to nursing and physical therapy students for the 1989-90 school year. Recipients will receive tuition, educational expenses and a monthly stipend of $621, in exchange participants agree to serve as a full-time registered nurse or physical therapist in a VA medical center for a period of one year for each year of scholarship support. May 29, 1989 is the deadline for application.

Seventh Heaven

By Lisa Aust
Staff Writer

7th Heaven has been around in one form or another for four years. The band's current cast includes two old-timers, Tony DiGiulio, providing vocals, and Richard Hofherr on guitar. The two newcomers are Dan Miller keeping time and Chris Senior on bass. Former band member Dean Cutenelli will be joining the band on guitar.

7th Heaven shys away from the overused expression "hard rock" to describe themselves. They feel that melodic hard rock is a more accurate choice. "We're not hard-core thrash, or death punk, but we're not posers either," said Senior.

Only one band member currently attends Harper. Senior is taking general courses. DiGiulio used to attend Harper but prefers to work. Hofherr attended Harper at one time. He has recently become tired of majoring in sleep at home, and so plans to return to Harper in the future. Miller currently attends Triton College as a music major.

One of the band's aspirations is to get a record contract, or as Hofherr puts it, "Every band's goal is to get a deal." In helping with this dream they have their producer, Ron Yukkona and his friend Steve Burnette to thank.

Continuing in the gratuitous vein Senior adds, "I would like to thank Tony Lauamic for organizing this whole Battle. He's one of the few people willing to take a chance on something new."

DiGiulio steps in with, "And Peter Soby and Dianna Dickson and Phil, too."

Hofherr takes the lead, "Yeah, no one's willing to do something different, and then they wonder why people complain that theres nothing to do in Chicagoland. It is really boring for kids our age. They never give us a chance. Just one bad experience can ruin it. Like this battle, sure theres going to be a lot of people, but its better than all of them being out on the streets."

7th Heaven has a unique way of turning their outlook into a positive focal point. This idea is clearly expressed in their music as well. DiGiulio explains, "Our songs come from our own beliefs. We write about what we know and what every one can relate to. We don't care to always be looking at the blackness."

7th Heaven has a major upcoming gig on April 22 at Gate Way Theater (Milwaukee and Lawrence in Chicago). Tickets are available through TicketTron. They will be one of six local hard rock bands.

Fourty-Three

By Lisa Aust
Staff Writer

Like other bands Forty-three has been around for a few years and has gone through several changes. The up-dated list of members includes guitarist Tom Moduckl, a Harper student; drummer Norm Lund, a student at the University of Illinois; and bassist Doug Moduckl, a senior at Hoffman Estates High School.

Tom Moduckl likes to call Forty-three music "regressive rock, as opposed to progressive rock like Rush or Yes. Another way of looking at it is as post-punk psychedelic country-folk blues metal."

Forty-three was recently featured in the Daily Herald. Most bands would be thrilled about the free publicity. Moduckl, however, is very distressed over it. Apparently the reporter was highly inaccurate with quotes.

When interviewed, this experience prompted Moduckl to plea, "You can make up anything about me, but please, just don't make it libelous."

Moduckl would like for people to know that Forty-three is not a joke band. He doesn't want to get caught in a trap like Mojo Nixon. When writing songs he tries to stay with a personal emotional theme. "I don't want to get too far into stuff about oppressed people, but I don't want to go into totally inane topics either."

Moduckl continues, "We don't do songs about politics or girls or cars. We're about emotions. Something everyone can relate to."

ADP

Automatic Data Processing, Inc. is the largest independent company in the U.S. dedicated exclusively to providing computerized recordkeeping and information services. Our mission is to help clients improve their performance by using our computing and information services for their recordkeeping, management information and database needs.

Since our beginning in 1949, ADP has been a service business with a firm commitment to consistent, superior service. During the past 39 years, the company's services have grown from the processing of simple payrolls to include the most complex business and financial applications and information requirements.

Today, ADP uses more computers and data communications systems than any other independent computing services company in the world.

Us Out at the Harper College Employment Fair April 4th

We are leading the way into the 21st Century with the most sophisticated data processing environment around. This growth and success can be seen at our ADP DEALER SERVICES Division located in Hoffman Estates.

ADP Dealer Services provides fully integrated computing, communications and management information systems for 8,000 auto, truck and farm equipment dealers. Our broad range of accounting, inventory, servicing, leasing and ordering services provides our clients with up-to-the-minute financial control and the highest level of customer satisfaction.

For further information about our Dealer Services Headquarters in Hoffman Estates or about ADP in general, please stop by our booth at the Harper College Employment Fair on April 4th, 1989. A representative from ADP will be there to answer any questions you may have concerning career opportunities.

Leviathan..

All-Star cast missing All-star script

By Scott Neidt
Entertainment Editor

All sails being set, he now cast loose the life-line, reserved for swaying him to the main royal-yard head, and in a few moments they were hoisting him thither, when, while but two-thirds of the way aloft, and while peering ahead through the horizontal vacancy between the main-top-sail and top-gallant-sail, he raised a gull-like cry in the air. 'There she blows!-there she blows! A hump like a snow-hill! It is Moby Dick!"

This dramatic excerpt comes from Herman Melville's classic tale of a terror from the deep- Moby Dick. 1989 is now becoming the year for movies about the terrors of the deep. Movies like Leviathan and Deep Star Six are two of the movies that are starting this craze, with another, as yet to be announced, on the way.

I personally did not see Deep Star Six, but I was advised to stay away from this would be blockbuster. I did, however, see Leviathan and am therefore going to give you my advice and comments on this horror from 20,000 leagues.

Leviathan takes place in a deep-sea oceanic silver mining site. At this location there are eight people on staff: six miners, one geologist (Peter Weller), and one doctor (Richard Crenna).

The miners have extracted almost all the silver necessary for their quota. Retrieval of the crew is only two day away, and then a wrench is thrown in the works.

Two of the miners, Sixpack (Daniel Stern) and Willie (Amanda Pays) were out on duty when Sixpack strays into a deep sea chasm. While in the chasm, Sixpack discovers a Russian shipwreck named Leviathan and goes investigating. Willie, who by now is worried about the whereabouts of Sixpack, goes into the wreck looking for him.

Sixpack and Willie return to the "shack" with the safe from the wreck and the entire crew examines the contents. During the sorting, Sixpack sneaks out a flask of vodka. We later find out that the vodka is laced with a genetic alteration experiment and it kills Sixpack--sort of.

Sixpack returns from the dead as a mutant sea creature that not only kills its victims, it absorbs them and incorporates them into its own deformed body. Now we have the entire crew of the "shack" trapped deep beneath the ocean, fearing for their lives over something they know nothing about. That about sums up the plot.

Peter Weller, aka Robocop, gives an incomplete performance. Throughout the show it seems that there are attempts to establish a relationship between Weller and Pays, but it is never really made clear. Weller does do an-- O.K. job, unfortunately that is the extent of it.

Amanda Pays portrays a health conscious astronaut wanna-be. Pays, who played Theora on the short-lived series Max Headroom, does a good job with what she has to work with.

Richard Crenna, probably best known for his role of John Rambos commanding officer, is not necessarily all he is cracked up to be. He tried to do many wonderful things with the character of the doctor, but he didn't always pull them off.

The other cast members were good, not great but good. Most of the names you may recognize- Ernie Hudson (the only minority Ghostbuster), Hector Elizondo (Private Resort), Lisa Eilbacher, and special mechanical effects by the award-winning Nick Adler (Alien and The Empire Strikes Back).

Overall the movie was a versatile rip-off of the horror that made us all frightened of what is really out there- Alien. You had a small crew trapped in an inescapable location being attacked by a not so-friendly creature.

If this movie preempted Alien, it would have been good and Alien would have been better. Now it is just the latest Hollywood trend for genre, replacing the overdone "adult/kid body swap."

I'm not saying don't see this film, because it would fine to R-E-N-T.

Guadalcanal Diary 'flip-flops' to the top

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

Crack open the plastic seal and tear open the box. Pull out the brand new CD and put it in the drawer. Press play. You are listening to the latest from Guadalcanal Diary, and even though its only the first track, you know flip-flop is a good album.

Guadalcanal Diary has more than a few similarities to R.E.M. Guadalcanal Diary is a foursome from Athens, Georgia. Their producer is Don Dixon. Even lead singer Murray Attaway's voice reminds one of Michael Stipe (the two are probably good friends).

The guitar laden pop-rock is a little harder than R.E.M. in these days. Guadalcanal Diary still retains the jangly-guitar sound that R.E.M. has mostly abandoned, with just a bit more feedback on the guitars. There are guitar solos in greater abundance than on R.E.M. albums as well.

In a way I regret having to compare Guadalcanal Diary to R.E.M. because it makes them sound like a copycat band, which is in no way true. The two bands may have the same roots, but the branches lead in different directions, and the leaves are of different colors. They deserve to be mentioned in the same breath as R.E.M. because they show the same inventiveness.

In comparison to 1987's 2x4 LP, flip-flop is not as varied. There were several great slow songs on 2x4 and there's really only one in evidence on this album. The rest are of the uptempo variety featuring Attaway's great singing voice, Jeff Walls' guitar, Rhett Crowe's bassline, and John Poe's beat. The songs are entertaining, well written, memorable and instantly enjoyable. That's not something that can be said about a lot of albums these days.

Guadalcanal Diary gets bizarre on the CD-only track Vista. It's a barely describable tune that marries the conventional sound of the band with something that sounds like a voodoo chant. It's the kind of song that makes you smile, and you figure the band must have had a lot of fun recording it.

Judy and Emo return to Harper

Comedienne extraordinaire Judy Tenuta returns to Harper for another performance on April 28 at 8 pm

By Brian Dawson
Staff Writer

If you like comedy, (and who doesn't) hold on to your sides! Judy Tenuta and Emo Phillips return to Harper College in the same evening on Friday, April 28 at eight p.m. in M-Building.

Judy, who was raised in West suburban Oak Park, has appeared on such comedy stages as Zanie's, George's, and HBO's Comic Relief. The self-proclaimed love goddess packs a mean accordion and a meaner comical wit. She appeared on campus last spring with WLUP's Kevin Matthews, in front of a nearly sold out crowd.

Emo, born in Chicago, returns to Harper two years after first appearing here. This is probably because it took Harper that long to recover from his bizarre and wacky form of humor. Phillips has been called the "E.T. of comedy" appearing on Late Night with David Letterman and Friday Night Videos.

Tickets for this double-header are on sale now, at the Box Office in J-Building. Tickets are $10 for Harper students (with an activity card) and $12 for general public. Tickets bought at the door are $3 more in both categories. For more information call the Box Office at 397-3000 extension 2547.

Emo Phillips, the E.T. of comedy, brings his bizarre form of off the wall comedy back to Harper's M Building.

Some music to watch for

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

XTC
Oranges and Lemons

Andy Partridge, Colin Moulding and Dave Gregory return with their impressive, facted pop in Oranges and Lemons. The follow up to 1987's masterpiece Skylarking is longer, looser, and a lot less interesting. XTC will always be masters of the art of pop (much like Squeeze) but Oranges and Lemons is not their finest hour.

Elvis Costello
Spike

A great disappointment from another all-lets-cash-in-on-Elvis music. Check out "The Abyss" instead and the especially worthless "Satellite." Of course when he rocks he rolls with the best, as shown in his current single "Veronica." The only track that is

[illegible]

Front 242
Front By Front

[illegible] look [illegible] to say about the latest from Belgium's Front 242 to absolutely no avail. Overall, the best non-pop dance album in years, perhaps ever. Front 242 is a permanent fixture on the alternative dance floor, and Front by Front serves up nine more tracks including last years [illegible] Headhunter. The 12" version also includes the remixes, [illegible] of Headhunter [illegible] Circuitry.

[illegible] may lay an album [illegible] for dance. Not only are all nine of the tracks eminently danceable, but the beats per minute are listed on the CD package to make for easy (and fancy) mixing. Very highly recommended, nearly but not quite a five.

Jacques Brel is Alive and Well and Coming to Harper

By Lisa Aust
Staff Writer

Tickets for "Jacques Brel Is Alive and Well and Living in Paris" are now on sale at the box office in J Building. Students and staff are limited to two tickets at $3 each, additional tickets are available for the public price of $5.

The show will run on Friday and Saturday April 14, 15, 21, and 22 at 8 p.m. and on Sunday April 16 and 23 at 2:30 p.m. in J Building Theater. On Saturday, April 22 there is a special dinner/theater package available to students for $15 and to the public for $17.

The musical has been described as cabaret in style. There is no central plot theme, instead it features 25 songs each about some aspect of life in Paris. Belgian-born Jaques Brel lived his adult life as a poet and singer in Paris.

Theater director Mary Jo Willis says, "This play is very adult, very sophisticated. This is by far the most adult thing we've done here." She has also described the show as, "...intense; it touches you in very human ways."

Five men and five women have been chosen to perform the songs. Mark Hilan, from Chicago; Jamie Lynn James, from Inverness; Bruce Johnsen, and Andy Leahy, both from Maywood, Harold LeBoyer, from Rolling Meadows; Joe Pulio, and Tracy Payne, both from Hoffman Estates, Debbie Royals, and Bobbie Proper, from Schaumburg; and Mary Strickland from Palatine will sing the highly emotional songs.

For tickets and further information, call the Harper College Box Office at 397-3000, extension 2547.

Diary

The album and its artist are both worthy of attention. flip-flop will probably spend a few weeks on the college charts and then disappear, because it's not the kind of album that brings instant fame. Become a Guadalcanal Diary fan now and when they hit it big in the next decade you'll be able to say you already know all about them. This is definitely a band on the edge of a major success.

Three victims report foot molestations

By Lawerence Digit
Ace Reporter

In an attempt to confirm some allegations that a student was playing "footsie" with surprised victims in the Library, I was sent to the scene.

The first clue that the foot-fondling maniac had struck was a table with two books, one a Freud book opened to the Oedipus Complex, and the other, "Anatomy of the human foot".

I scoped the entire Library looking for signs of the suspect. I staked-out the section on podiatry. (There were three books and one was checked out).

I asked some particularly observant looking students if they had seen a suspicious man without shoes.

"We call him Dr. Scholl. He wears deck shoes without socks. He enters the Library and scans the scene for women who have taken off their shoes."

The concerned librarian related, "I'm afraid to work late at night. I hope public safety catches him soon."

His foot was so strong. He pinned my foot to the floor. And then, he disappeared. I checked the carrel across from me, but it was empty except for a bottle of Dessecta," confided a victim who wished to remain anonymous.

Finally, my efforts paid off. I dressed as an unsuspecting female without shoes and sat alone. I felt the firm ice gripping of what had to be the foot-fondling maniac.

I chased him up an aisle, but he made a hasty exit down the staircase and disappeared into a crowd of students. I reported the incident to Public Safety, who have made a composite sketch of the offender's foot.

Anyone with information regarding these incidents please contact Inspector Brown at extension 0666. (This guy is in big trouble!)

All photos by ace photographer D. Klaban.)

"You never know; he could strike anywhere," said a student who did not want to be identified.

Dr. Scholl eludes Ace reporter Digit. "He was just too fast," said Digit.

The alleged foot molestor dashes down an aisle in the library. Ace reporter Lawerence Digit is not far behind.

Baseball: Going for a 20-win season

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

Last year Head Coach Dan Koss and his Harper Baseball team were in the midst of an amazing 37-9 season (school best). The team captured a sectional title and landed a spot opposite Kishwaukee in the Region IV Championship where they were eliminated by falling to the Cougars twice.

"It was amazing, there were about five or six guys who gave us everything they had, game in and game out. And sometimes there were players who you didn't expect to come out to play that came and picked us up when we needed it. It was more than nine players that carried us, it was the whole team," Koss said.

Unfortunately, many of the keys to last year's season have transferred or gone elsewhere, including catcher Paul O'Callaghan who earned a scholarship to Oklahoma, pitcher Al Levine (East Carolina), and catcher Mark Kuffel (Northeastern Illinois), making it very difficult in trying to score their fourth 20 win season in a row.

Then again, the cupboard isn't exactly bare either. Four players return from last year's squad: Dave Szarzynski, Tony Vaca, Dave Perns, and John Burzawa. A fifth, Rick Bartell from St. Edward High School, is back after sitting out last season due to not having enough credits to graduate. Add that to a fine bunch of incoming freshmen, the Hawks may just have what it takes to pull off another 20-win season.

"Right now what we have to do is to have everybody stay quiet and worry about themselves, staying within their own game. If everybody does that, then we can try to put the team together," Koss said.

The important thing that may keep this season from being a rebuilding one is that the five sophomores will have key roles. Vaca had the team's second best mark on the mound last spring and a .376 batting average, 6 home runs and 22 RBI's.

"He's got the potential of being a great baseball player. He's got to mentally concentrate on every pitch he throws. He's going to play first base, outfield, and he'll DH a little," Koss said.

Szarzynski lent his helping hand to the pitching staff last year by going 3-0. He also hit well as his .333 batting average and 16 RBI's indicated.

"He' our leader, one of our team captains. He never gets down. He comes through for us when we need it. He does the little things that help us a lot, but he always has his head in the game," Koss said.

Burzawa was in and out of the starting line-up last season while batting .378.

"He did very well for the time that he played," Koss said, "there was a lot of pressure on him being in and out of the line-up. He's matured to the point where we're going to move him from third base to second base. He has confidence in his abilities."

Perns was also in and out of the starting line-up last spring.

"He's a good kid, an over acheiver who has to work hard stay in the line-up. He could be a streaky player," Koss said.

Bartell's return brings another strong arm to the team. In his 3-3 mark of 87, he went the distance in each of his three wins.

"He's kept himself in good condition during all that time, that's probably why he's the best conditioned player on the team right now," Koss said, "he's got all of his pitches down."

Newcomers to this year's team are Sophmore Tim Longmore and Freshmen Tony Vivarito, Tony Pignataro, Todd Lambel, Dave Miller, Andy Fortunski, Serry Pollock, Brad Dahlstrom, Rod Sowizrol, Marty Cruzan, Dave Westmland, Angelo Turrelo, Paul Scaglione, and Jim Falicone.

One of the reasons that this is a fine core of freshmen is that they all come from one of the strongest areas for high school baseball in the state, the Northwest suburbs.

Dahlstrom, Westland, and Vivarito played together on a strong Prospect team that won the Regional Championship and advanced to the Sweet Sixteen in the spring of '87. Cruzan played a reserve role on last year's Hoffman Estates team that won the Mid Suburban League championship. Last spring, Miller pitched Carmel to their first ever Regional Tule, and a berth among the final 32 teams in the state. Fortunski's pitching was one of the major contributing factors in St. Viator being ranked among the top teams in the Chicago area. And Sowizrol almost led Elk Grove into the Regional Semi-Finals.

Still, Koss doesn't want to see them rest on their credentials. "We're going to need them to prove themselves," he said.

Assistant coach Mike Brake gives his observations on the first weeks of practices, "Right now, we have a good level of energy and our spirits are high. I think we're going to be a stronger defensive team to begin with because we still got a lot to go on offense. Our pitching is improving, but we've got to practice hard because we are a couple of weeks behind."

Perhaps the biggest problem that Koss has to face before the season goes into full swing is trying to replace graduated catchers O'Callaghan and Kuffel.

"We currently have two guys that we're thinking about going with, Viverito and Westland. Both can catch, they have good arms. What we're looking for is a catcher that has good defensive skills, can throw runners out, and has total consistency," he said.

Despite having a bunch of incoming freshmen, the four return players feel confident that they can have another successful season. "The sophmores have to show some leadership and we've got to get off to a good start like we did last year (The Hawks won their first nine games)," Vaca stated.

"We lost some good players, but we picked up some good freshmen. We'll be competitive," Perns replied.

Nunez's Outlook: Expect an early stuggle as the freshmen get their feet wet in Junior College Ball. In the meantime, the sophmores will carry the team until they are in the swing of things. Then watch out for that Harper Heat.

Probst resigns as men's b-ball Head Coach

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

Bill Probst announced his resignation as Harper College's Head Men's Basketball Coach last week. It ended a two year reign in which he had an 11-45 record.

"I just wanted to go back to high school (coaching)," Probst explained in a telephone interview on Monday.

Probst also expressed the same thought in his letter of resignation.

"I have decided to go back to the level that was most satisfying to me, the high school level. During my 11 years as a head coach at three private high schools, I now realize the tremendous value of such things as academic responsibility, a good work ethic, school spirit and the ability to incorporate a head coach's philosophy in to a four-year program."

Probst also expressed a desire to return to coaching in the IHSA State Tournament.

"I also realize how much a part of me the chance to compete in our high school state basketball tournament has been. It is still the greatest show in the world and I want to get back into it."

Probst has been coaching basketball for the past 24 years. He started his coaching career back in 1966 at St. Joseph the Worker Jr. High in Wheeling where he coached the seventh and eighth grade teams to 12 conference titles in a nine-year period.

After that, he coached at St. Michael Central High School in Chicago for a year. Then he received his first head coaching position at the high school level at St. Francis High School in Wheaton in 1976.

In his first year there he earned West Suburban Catholic Conference coach of year honors by turning around a team that was 1-23 the year before into a 14-14 team that won the school's first-ever Christmas tournament championship. They also had the most wins in school history prior to this year's 28-5 Spartan team.

He then moved on to St. Viator High School in Arlington Heights in 1978. In nine years there, his teams won 195 games, including five Wheeling Wildcat Hardwood Classic tournament championships, four St. Viator Thanksgiving tournament championships, two Harper summer league championships, and the school's first ever IHSA Regional championship in 1987. They also set a school record for most wins in a season with a 20-6 mark in 1986.

While at St. Viator, Probst was voted East Suburban Catholic Conference Coach of the year in 1982 and was chosen by the Chicago Sun-Times as one of the top five high school coaches in the Chicago area who "get the most out of the least" in 1984.

These credentials indicate why Harper hired Probst to turn around their program. Despite these past two tough years at Harper, he still believes in his philosophy of defense, good shot selection, making free throws, execution of offense, and the "we" player concept, "I'll never change my philosophy," Probst replied.

Probst feels that his two seasons of coaching at the junior college level has made him a wiser man," "I've learned to appreciate things on the four-year program that are sadly lacking in the two year program."

B-ball splits opener

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

The Harper Hawks spring break trip to Godfrey, Illinois wasn't a smashing success, but it wasn't a total wash-out either.

The Hawks split a double header to Lewis & Clark on Thursday, losing game one 7-5 and winning game two 1-0. On Friday, they were swept by Rend Lake 3-0 and 13-8. The Hawks currently stand at 1-3.

Head coach Koss knew going into the trip that his Hawks were in for a hard fight, "Both teams - piece and we were playing our first."

After the tough loss in game one, Harper put together a strong defensive show. The Hawks prevailed behind Rick Bartell's two hitter and a strong relief appearence by Rod Sowizrol who sealed up the victory with a strikeout as Lewis & Clark threatened late in the game with men on first and second base.

The only offense the Hawks needed was Dave Szarzynski's second inning single that brought Tony Vaca in from third after he had tripled.

Unfortunately, the Harper offensive attack was put to a screeching halt in game one of the Rend Lake double header. In game two the Warriors were able to out run the Hawks, making Good Friday not good at all for Harper.

In general, Koss summed up the trip, "We proved that we still have a long way to go before we can start becoming a really good ball club. We'll just get back to work and start over on Thursday (against Kishwaukee)."

Tennis takes off

The men's tennis team started the season on a winning note by taking two out of three meets during their spring break trip to Springfield.

They returned home to defeat Oakton and Wright Colleges in a scrimmage on Thursday. Bill Adams, Jay Olrick, and team captain John Pickford all won 6-0, 6-0 against Aurora on the trip.

Mark Bartleson, digusted that he was left behind due to last minute eligibility reasons, took out his frustrations Thursday by blasting his opponent from Oakton 6-1,6-0, and his Wright College opponent 6-1, 6-2. Bartleson also teamed with newcomer Jeff DeWert to shoot down Oakton 6-1, 6-0 in doubles competition.

First year man Eric Ford also did not get to go on the Springfield trip due to eligibity problems, but after getting them solved he showed his winning ways by defeating his Wright College opponent 6-4, 4-6, 7-5, and on doubles with Joe Olrick 6-0, 6-2.

Thursday's scrimmage gave many of the new guys who are trying out for the team a chance to compete.

"I don't see any weaknes in this years squad. The talent and competitiveness is certainly there and I'm sure that we will continue to roll," said coach Kearns.

Chicago sports rap

By Peter Soby
Sports Editor

Kevin is on vacation again, so I am talking sports again this week.

I'd like to start by noting that the Harbinger's very own Chris Boghossian picked three out of the final four teams in the NCAA tournament.

In last week's paper he predicted the final four would be Illinois, Michigan, Seton Hall and Georgetown. He missed picking Duke by one game. Pretty good, huh? Chris picks Illinois to take it all.

In Bulls news, they are on one of their hot streaks. On their last road trip, a crucial West Coast series, they ended up 4-0.

They played very tight, offensive games in beating Los Angeles, Sacramento, Phoenix, and Portland. That streak has boost them to fourth place in their division, only three games out of third. That's as far as the Chicago "hot-streak, cold-streak" Bulls will go, but I hope they prove me wrong.

The Black Hawks? What can I say since you can't see my tongue sticking out. After showing signs of life and moving up to second, they have lost eight of their last ten games. They are only two points out of the cellar and the cellar is the only place a team can be and not make the playoffs. It all comes down to their last three games, and more directly, their final game against the now cellar-dwelling Toronto Maple Leafs. Sorry, Chicago "even if we make the playoffs we'll be annihilated" Blackhawks.

The Cubs released Goose Gossage (there is a God) and they also released Al Nipper. One surprise of spring training was the bad performance of pitcher Mike Harkey. Mike is saying, " Hello minors."

Jerome Walton, Joe Girardi, and Gary Varsho all made the club. The Cubs will still be the Chicago "Wait 'til next year. This is next year. Oh. Well wait 'til next year" Cubs.

Even though White Sox catcher Mark Salas gave the White Sox manager Jeff Torberg's son a hair cut, he was released. The White Sox sent Tom McCarthy and Marc Sullivan down to the minors. The Chicago "Who cares?" White Sox.

Art department features talent

By Alisa Chinlund
Features Editor

On April 1 to April 29, members of the art department carry on a yearly tradition as they exhibit their work in the spring Harper Faculty Art Show.

This year's show was arranged by Ben Dallas, associate professor of art. "The art show is a chance for our department's practicing artists to display at least one example of their work," said Dallas.

The exhibition is one of a series of month-long shows presented each semester at Harper.

Artists may express themselves in any media: ceramics, computer generated art, acrylics, prints, paintings, and mixed media.

This year's exhibits include: ceramics by Ruella Anne Beauchonville; computer generated self-portraits by Michael Brown; three prints by Joel Bujnowski; images of cats made from cremated cat ashes and acrylic medium--4 cats (1989) by Ben Dallas; and a computer generated image series called Genegraphic tongue by Ken Dahlberg.

Other art works are: an acrylic painting on paper by Linda Emmerman; a series of three monoprints called Progression by Mary Elizabeth Garcia; three pastel and charcoal works on paper from 1989 by Thomas Hancock--1. Dream Parade, 2. Harvest Time, 3. When In Doubt, two drawings in mixed media by Thomas Kapheim.

Additional art works on display include: two oil on canvas paintings by Karen Lebergott--1. Burden Of History (1986), and 2. Things Fall Apart (1988); paintings by Teresa Ann Kramer-Pared; ceramics by Michael Pfeiffer; two mixed media works by Perry Pollock; three colored xerox prints by Larry Price; and paintings by Blair Trueblood.

"This show normally interests a diverse group of people. The works are unique, of high quality, and vary in design," said Dallas.

The exhibit will be on display in Buildings C and P at Harper College. Admission is free, and the public is invited to attend.

Speech team claims fifth in regional

By Mona Isa
News Editor

The Harper Speech Team won fifth place in the Regional Speech Tournament at Highland Community College on March 17 and 18. Harper competed against 16 regional colleges and brought home a total of eight awards.

The team was led by Linda Lang, who brought back bronze awards in Persuasive Speaking, Communication Analysis and Speech to Entertain divisions, and a silver award in Informative Speaking.

Rosemary Langer also brought back a gold award in Impromptu Speaking and silver in Informative Speaking while Peter Lindstrom received a bronze in Extemporaneous Speaking and Roger Biers also merited a bronze in Prose Reading.

Other students participating and adding to the team sweepstakes points were Elaine Conrad, John Gardener, Keith Miller and Doug Ray.

Anyone interested in participating next year should contact Marcia Lutrenta at 397-3000, ext 2284.

Employment Fair offers jobs

By Mona Isa
News Editor

Representatives from 101 major companies offered students, employees and residents an advantage to obtain career information and job opportunities at the "Employment Fair 1989" in the gym of building M.

Approximately 1,000 students, employees and residents crowded the building with corporations such as Abbott Laboratories, AT & T, Citicorp Savings, Honeywell, IBM, Motorola, as well as companies such as Coldwell Banker, Scott Foresman and Company, The Daily Herald and military branches.

For many job seekers, the employment fair provided an informal way to talk to corporate companies without the hassle or pressure of setting up interviews and the tables were conveniently located in close proximity to one another.

"From the perspective of the employer, there was a good cross-section of job seekers and they were quite pleased to see the different levels of interest," stated Chris Kranz, a Job Placement Specialist in the College Placement Office.

The timing of the fair during the spring semester was better-suited than last year's employment fair in the fall semester "Having the fair held in the spring allows students to seek summer jobs and attracts more people," added Kranz.

Among those who contributed to the fair were the Young Corporate Achievers of Harper. "The Young Corporate Achievers really helped out by giving 'person power' and assisting the representatives," stated Kranz.

Faculty Foreign Exchange

By Douglas Ray
Editor-In-Chief

In the '50's, one would be lucky to visit a neighboring state. Today, thousands of people visit a foreign country (at least once in a lifetime). As the world bridges the international gap, we realize that we can learn from foreign counterparts.

Harper takes this to heart as they implement an extension to the foreign exchange program--for faculty. The Illinois Consortium for International Studies and Programs sponsors the Administrative Exchange Program for the first time at Harper.

Twenty-eight British educators will visit community college campuses across Illinois; Jim Borland, faculty at Kirby College, Middlesbourgh England and Bob Billingham, Director of Marketing at Matthew Boulton, Burmingham England will be working with Tom Johnson, Dean of Business and Social Science and Elaine Stoermer, public relations at Harper.

The English guests will remain on their respective payrolls back in England while they learn the job of their counterpart and tour the sights of Chicago. Billingham and Borland arrive today and will stay in Chicago thru April 17. Then, later in the year, Johnson and Stoermer will visit England to work with their English counterparts.

"(Eventually) we would hope to have some of our experts be utilized as consultants in foreign countries," said Dean of Liberal Arts Martin J. Ryan.

"There will be opportunities for everyone to meet Mr. Billingham and Mr. Borland," said Stoermer. "During a reception everyone can hear about the colleges they represent," she added.

Rock-n-Roll

The long anticipated '89 Battle of the Bands will come to a climatic conclusion Friday, April 7 at 7:30 p.m. in Building M.

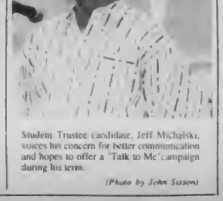

Tickets are available to both students and the public for $3. Over 600 tickets have already been sold. The crowd size is expected to surpass 1,000.

Harry Tennowitz, a comedian from the Barn Comedy Club, will function as the Master of Ceremonies. Participating bands; Aquatic Noggin, Frenzy, Forty-three, 7th Heaven, and Threat, will each perform 20 minutes of music.

The audience determines the winner by casting a vote for their favorite band. At stake are $1,500 worth in prizes.

Health Corner
Learning to l♥ve yourself

Wellness Week activities begin on April 11 at a 7:30 a.m. kick-off breakfast in the dining room. The speaker, Dr. Randy Georgemiller, will discuss memory changes due to age versus abnormal changes found in people with Alzheimer's disease. This program requires pre-registration. The cost is $4, payable to Health Services.

Other programs are scheduled on April 11-13 during the day and evening. On Wednesday, April 12, a health fair will be held from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. The programs and health fair are open to the community.

On Tuesday, April 11, Sharon Foy, nationally recognized aerobics expert, will speak about how to increase upper body strength and endurance while having fun working out safely with hand weights. The lecture will be held at 11:45 a.m. in M249. At 3 p.m. in A242, Jim Spivey, Olympic athlete and world champion runner, will share his experiences and speak about the benefits of a personal fitness program.

Self-esteem affects every facet of day-to-day life. When we feel good about ourselves, we feel good about life. We utilize our energies to meet life's challenges and responsibilities.

On Tuesday, April 11, Joyce Nolen will present "Learning to Love Yourself," a workshop in A315 at 1:15 p.m. Nolen will discuss ways to increase self-esteem by focusing on personal assets and strengths as opposed to reliance on chemicals or food to feel good.

On Wednesday, April 12, Dr. Marguerite Ewald will discuss the factors that contribute to an individual's confidence, self-worth, and self-esteem. Ewald will give suggestions about factors that can be developed and nurtured.

Dr. Noah Inbody of Northeastern Illinois University will describe recent discoveries about normal brain functioning. Inbody will relate them to the ways people manipulate cerebral processes to meet their emotional needs on Thursday, April 13, at 1:15 p.m. in A315. Participants will learn how natural highs are produced and experienced by the brain. They will learn how to use this information to easily increase the joy of living.

Do you break out in a cold sweat at the thought of speaking before a group, taking a test, going to the dentist, or flying in a plane? Fears such as these are common to millions of Americans who suffer from phobias or panic disorders. On Tuesday, April 11, Chris Louro, Marleen Lorenz and Roberta Olenbeck from the Agoraphobia and Anxiety Treatment Center, present an overview of common fears and phobias at 6 p.m. in A115. The speakers will discuss how to understand, treat, and overcome these problems using self-help methods.

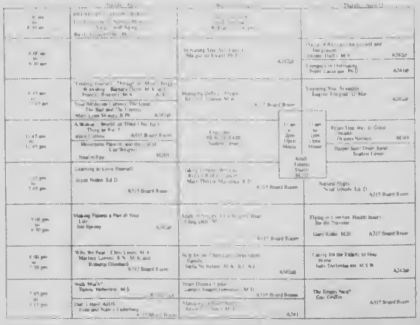

Conflict can be difficult, but conflicts with a "difficult person" like spouses, co-workers, friends and family members can seem impossible. Kevin O'Connor will highlight do's and don'ts when managing conflicts during his presentation on Wednesday, April 12, at 9:45 a.m. and 7:45 p.m. in A241.

The health fair will be held in the student center on Wednesday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. It features exhibits, information and free testing services which include a coronary risk appraisal, nutrition analysis, visual acuity and color perception testing, blood typing, and hearing testing. Blood pressure, tendinosis and posture, body fat distribution, vision and glaucoma, foot, and diabetes screenings will also be available.

In addition, Health Services will conduct stick cholesterol screenings for $3. Northwest Community Hospital will perform a Chem Screen 23, HDL and complete blood count for $20. This test requires a 12-hour fast. An appointment must be scheduled at 397-3000, ext. 2268.

Check the Wellness Week schedule for other programs of interest to you. Brochures are available at the Information Booth or in Health Services, A362.

Gripe, gripe, gripe, gripe, gripe, gripe.....

During my three years at Harper, I have heard many concerns voiced about curricula problems. Examples include:

•Journalism: In the two-year career program, many courses are offered, but are regularly withdrawn due to limited enrollment. A language or mathematics class is then substituted for a required class.

• Photography: There is no photography course within the art department.

• Speech: Introduction to Acting (SPE 212) is taught as a basic acting class and might be better classified as a 100 level course. A second course for acting or theater majors is desirable.

• Biology: Although courses specifically for biology or pre-med majors (BIO 210, 220 and 240) have been listed in the catalogue for at least three years, only Biology 270 has been taught (once) and offered.

Contact with Dean of Instruction Dr. Charles Harrington was insightful and promising. Light enrollment and loosely-structured academic plans are th culprits. "However," cited Harrington, "these are some of the universal problems of the community colleges."

When asked about solutions to the problems, Harrington quickly responded, "Eliminating a course does not solve a problem. The division deans and Vice President of Academic Affairs David Williams are currently considering viable solutions to our concerns."

A number of options are under consideration:

1) Offer courses only during a specified semester (Example: Fall in even-numbered years). Although this would require students to plan in advance and adhere to a sperific schedule, Harrington visualizes that this will eliminate light enrollment problems in specific career programs as well as upper level science and mathematics classes.

2) Another method entails cooperation with other community colleges. Certain schools would specialize in and administer different programs. Either chargebacks (tuition credits) would be allowed or students would register at their local school, but attend classes off-campus with tuition credit transferred to the out-of-district school.

Sometimes there are very different, yet legitimate reasons for not offering courses. An art/photography class has the limitations of space, staffing, demand and equipment, whereas a sequence to Speech 212, Introduction to Acting, has limited demand.

I realize that degree-seeking students appreciate the value and convenience of community college education, but sometimes forget the fact that Harper curriculum is preparatory for a four-year degree. Courses in major areas of study are available at an introductory level.

Dean Harrington recognized the shortcomings of the system, and is evaluating alternatives for fall semester 1990. Today's criticism will benefit tomorrow's students.

Lecture #12: Griping accomplishes nothing. Constructive criticism benefits everyone.

Letters to the Editor

In defense of DesBarres

View #1

RAISE YOUR IQ, PLEASE!

--Regarding Beverly M. Tenuta's letter to the editor last week--

Beverly, do you consider yourself an intelligent person? Anyone who attends Carl Sagan's lectures must be right. Well, let me ask you this. Seeing how you are so intelligent, that must be why you are able to judge Pamela DesBarres, her presentation and those who attended, even though you didn't participate yourself, correct?

Please allow me to correct your inaccurate point of view. Pamela DesBarres' lecture on March 14 was not a brag or pillowtalk session. She did not present herself as a best-selling authoress. DesBarres, like many others in her generation, was moved by the music of her time. She wanted to associate with the people behind this music and was fortunate enough to have the chance. She experienced many things (not just sex) that most dedicated music fans only dream about. She then wrote about it. No harm done.

Her message is not in any remote way, "Raise your skirts, not your IQ!" In fact, had you have been there, you would have discovered that Pamela does not recommend her behavior to the many fans who write to her. Also, this presentation was in no way an insult to "every hard-working female on campus." There were plenty of hard working females at this presentation who I can guarantee, do not share your point of view. This lecture was very interesting and the 158 people who attended enjoyed every minute of it.

Nevertheless, if you are offended by this lecture, Beverly, I have no problem with that. That is your opinion. I feel this college should have lectures that interest the students even if they are controversial. There was a lot of thought and discussion that went into the decision of whether or not to have this lecture and it was not chosen for what you call Pamela's tasteless sexual activities. It was chosen because Pamela gives an excellent presentation.

If you are concerned about the thought going into upcoming lectures on campus Beverly, maybe you should join the club responsible. The Program Board tries to offer different events to suit all different types of people and it you have something to say about their events, say it to them.

But, please, try to have some idea of what you are talking about first and be a little more open-minded, you might learn a thing or two.

No, you can not get away with it! I must register my extreme displeasure with Lisa Aust's review of Pamela DeBarres' recent lecture here.

Ms. Aust's comments were not only shallow, but misleading. It would be better to have no story than to present such a juvenile and inept attempt at journalism. This article hit a new low in collegiate news-writing.

I found Pamela to be extremely witty, intelligent, aware, and a true free spirit. She provided a most interesting and informative report of her involvment in, and her view of, a recent time in our social and cultural history. She is an expert witness of the music, musicians, and mores of a recent era. Unfortunately, Ms. Aust's comments were completely out of context and made little sense of what Pamela actually said and how well received she was by her enthusiastic audience.

May I strongly urge you to upgrade the level of your reportage on campus events. Improvement must be made if the Harbinger plans to keep any remaining credibility.

Sincerely yours,
Frank L. Oliver

Thank you

To the staff of the *Harbinger

Thanks for proving me wrong to my criticism of your paper's music column. You have allowed me to give the non-technical, more rebellious side of rock'n'roll a say in your paper in a very open-minded, cool way.

Thanks again,

Electric Phase: Metal News

By Eric Jason
Staff Writer

Dokken Breaks Up

George Lynch and Dokken front man Don Dokken have had it with one another. After years of denying any problems between them, the original line-up has split. The split was over the creative directions each of them wanted to take, but they could not agree.

Lynch, along with Dokken bassist Jeff Pilson and drummer Mick Brown, have formed a band titled Lynch Mob, while Don Dokken will continue with Dokken, and recruit a new line-up. It will be interesting to see if Don Dokken can replace the void left by the strong guitar talents of Lynch

Rumors

Although Guns and Roses new EP Lies is doing well, they plan to release a new album later this summer and tour in late '89.

Jason Bonham (son of the legendary Led Zeppelin drummer John Bonham) will soon have a solo album that might have ex-Zeppelin members John Paul Jones, Jimmy Page and Robert Plant playing on certain tracks. Many believe there is a good chance of this happening. The members of Zeppelin owe Bonham a favor for playing on Page's solo album and taking the drum spot of his father for last year's Zeppelin reunion.

Tours

The major metal concert of the summer will be the World Series of Rock with some of Metal's hottest bands: Poison, Tesla, White Lion, Winger and the Bullet Boys. The concert is scheduled for May 27 and 28 at Alpine Valley. The MTV-sponsored Headbangers Ball tour will hit the Aragon Ball Room April 28. Halloween, Exodus and the headliner Anthrax will be featured.

Moore and Osborne Blast Led Clones

On the forthcoming solo album by ex-Thin Lizzy guitarist Gary Moore, Moore and legendary ex-Black Sabbath front man Ozzy Osbourne team up on a song called Led Clones, that intentionally sounds like a Zeppelin rip-off song. Its lyrics deal with the ripping off of Led Zeppelin by bands like Whitesnake and Kingdom Come. The song clarifies the point that "clone" bands should stop ripping off the '70s greatest band.

Locing Not Very Original

One of the hottest new rap artists Ton-Loc has an unoriginal view of the guitar riffs he uses in the songs Wild Thing and Funky Cold Medina. Like most rappers, Loc uses pre-recorded riffs as the main stomp for his songs. What angers this writer is that I can recognize that he took the riffs for Wild Thing from the Van Halen song Jaimees Crying and lifted the guitar line for Funky Cold Medina from Foreigners' Hot Blooded.

Not being a big fan of rap, I picked out Loc for criticism because other rappers don't make the riffs recognizable. Loc does not hide the fact that he lifted it.

I think if it's recognizable and it's taken from another artist without their permission that this is a violation of the song's copyright. The originators should be able to sue. This proves to musicians that the technical movement in music has gone too far. Copycats who sample from others are showing their lack of original ideas and don't deserve to be called musicians or artists.

Anzalone battles the bands

By John Sisson
Staff Writer

More than 100 people crowded the Building A lounge area Monday afternoon to witness comedian Tom Anzalone's shameless destruction of the music world's biggest stars. Those on his hitlist ranged from Frank Sinatra to Frank Zappa.

The highlights of Anzalone's performance, which drew thunderous applause and laughter from a large afternoon crowd, were his renderings of Johnny Cash in different nationalities; Jack Nicholson singing Pink Floyd and his imitation of the cheesy Freedom Rock television commercial.

Some of Anzalone's other superstar mockeries included Bob Dylan, Prince, Bruce Springsteen, and Whitney Houston. Anzalone's finale was a crotch-yanking Michael Jackson extravaganza, which featured a revision of moonwalking that resembled Neil Armstrong more than the one-gloved wonder.

Anzalone plays up to the camera during his version of the Who's Pinball Wizard, which was performed in true rock-opera fashion.

'Just say yes' to Sunkist scholarship

By Marc J. Batke
Staff Writer

Does a $2000 scholarship interest you?

Sunkist Growers Inc. and Students Against Drunk Driving (SADD), in support of the third annual Alcohol-Free Weekend sponsored by the National Council on Alcoholism, present a non-alcoholic drink recipe contest for students under the age of 21, with a grand prize of a $2000 scholarship.

The contest runs April 7 thru 9. This year it's expected that more than 2 million people will refrain from the use of alcohol for the three-day weekend.

To submit an entree to the contest follow these simple rules:

Develop an original recipe using one or more fresh Sunkist citrus fruit juices, including a garnish of oranges, lemons, tangerines and grapefruit. That's it!

Send your entry typed or neatly printed with your name, address, phone and your age to: Sunkist / SADD Mock Cocktail Contest, P.O. Box 4587, Overland Park, Kansas 66204.

"Sunkist recognizes the dangers of students and abuse in this country, with drinking and driving the number one cause of teenage fatality in America," said Russell L. Hanlin, president of Sunkist Growers, Inc.

Contest entries need to be postmarked by midnight May 1. For more information, contact the Drug Alcohol Wellness Network (DAWN) at extension 2626.

Team spirit prevails for swimmers; end season at nationals

Trudy Herbst
Staff Writer

The Hawk swimmers finished the race in national style. The early March cold weather stifled the competition held at Indian River Community College in Fort Pierce, Florida.

Even at nationals, the relays scored the most points, rewarding team effort rather than individual races. The relay development was obvious early in the season when the men's relay qualified for nationals during the first half of the season.

Coach Roy Kearns and Assistant Coach Gordon Auckerman evaluated and developed the Hawks to their potential. Kearns and Auckerman recognized the value of depth in regional and national competition and trained in this direction.

"Compared to last season, participation and the level of training(workouts) increased," cited women's team captain Julie Nefczyk. Undoubtedly these differences were responsible for ten swimmers qualifying for the national team.

Season highlights include latecomer Nickie LaBeau's team record in the 100 backstroke at 1:11.07 and Peggy McCann and Jeff Smith both qualifying for three individual national events.

"Team swimming required immeasurable discipline," commented Nefczyk. For these Harper swimmers, the reward of this discipline will serve them well in future endeavors.

Women's track & field setting goals

By Peter Soby
Sports Editor

The Harper women's track and field team has a lot to look forward to this season. They have some great range and depth, and a very fast 400 meter relay team.

Coach Renee Zellner is entering this season with her largest team ever.

"The girls are very pleasurable to coach and they have a lot of potential," said Zellner. "I just hope the short schedule does not hurt them."

Because of the short and tough schedule, coach Zellner hopes the team can reach a lot of their goals early. The goal as a team is to do well, but the individual goals vary.

For some girls, it is to establish a time, some to improve their high school times, some to be first in the region, and some to make nationals. They will also be working for scholarship recognition.

"My job is to direct them and help them attain their goals," said Zellner.

The team includes four returning members: Irene Reichmuth, a distance runner; Anne Thayer, a 200 meter sprinter; Lori Wilkins, a high jumper, discus thrower and part of the relay team; and field event athlete Karen Witsiepe.

Other team members that look to be very promising this season are Nikki Hollingsworth, Pam Weisler, Dana Peterson, and Michelle Maxwell.

"Hollingsworth is probably the strongest and fastest on the team," said Zellner.

Hollingsworth is training for the heptathlon, with her specialties being the 400 meter hurdles and the shot put.

Wesler will be excellent in the distance relays as well as the 800 and 1500 meters.

Peterson is another member training for the heptathlon. She will also compete as a hurdler, sprinter and a relayer.

Maxwell has already surpassed national qualifying high jump of 5'4" and is also training for the heptathlon.

Other team members include: Vikki Gudavsky, competing in the 800 meter; Carla Munger, a sprinter, hurdler and member of the 400 meter relay team; and Stephanie Gorecki, also trying to compete in the heptathlon, specializing in the high jump and shot put.

Rounding out the team are basketball crossover Pascale O'Donahue in the quarter mile and discus, and Patty Canchola, competing in the high jump and the 800 meter.

Improved men's track team

By Peter Soby
Sports Editor

The Harper Hawk men's track and field team will be improved in all aspects this season. Last year's team consisted of five members, four field competitors and one runner.

"We were very limited in our potential and our range," said coach John Johnson.

This year the team consists of over a dozen athletes who will considerably broaden the team's range at meets as well as individual's chances to place at nationals. The men's track team still lacks depth at each event but Coach Johnson feels good about this year's squad.

"We have great quality at more events," he said. "With the addition of good distance runners and sprinters, along with returning lettermen in the field events, we will have a strong showing."

The returning athletes in field events include Andy Lerman at the shot put, Brian Pawlak at discus, Marc Rader at javelin, and Pat Ludvigsen at the hammer throw.

"I have seen immense improvement in the field athletes," continued Johnson. "Brian just missed nationals last year, and I think they all have a shot at nationals this year."

Two newcomers, Peter Beach and Paul Lombardi, are learning to compete in the field events and are getting a lot of tips from Rader.

The area where Harper's track team will improve is in running. Not only do they have more runners, but good, quality runners.

For distance they have John Beatty, who placed second in state last year, Tom Irons, who went to nationals for Harper's cross country team this fall, and Mike Doyle.

One of the most talented sprinters on the team this year will be Jerome Taylor, who will compete in the 100 meter, 400 meter, and on the relay team. Other runners include Dave Talken, Chris Switzerbinski, and Karl Johnson.

"They will give us depth in running the 10,000 meter to the 800 meter, as well as the relays," said Johnson.

Rounding the team off are runner/hurdler Mike Valdes, who will compete in the 400 meter low hurdles as well as the long jump, and Frank Bataih, who set a Harper school record last year in the high hurdles, and will also compete this year in the triple jump, long jump, and relay team.

Coach Johnson feels more at home in his second year of working men's track at Harper and feels optimistic about his athletes.

"They've been great. They are working hard, and if they keep it up, I can see four to six of them making it to nationals."

Slow start for Hawk baseball team

Kishwaukee 12, Harper 5

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

Against Kishwaukee the Hawks (2-5, 1-1) saw a comeback turn sour last Thursday. After tying the game at five in the top of the fifth, the Cougars (6-9) blew the game open with a two-run fifth, and a three-run seventh.

In the meantime, the Hawks kept themselves at bay by leaving the bases loaded in the seventh, eighth, and ninth innings.

Illinois Valley 5-7, Harper 1-13

In game one of the Illinois Valley doubleheader, a two-run fourth and a three-run fifth by the Apaches (4-6, 1-1) did the damage off pitcher Andy Fortunski, who was pitching for the first time since injuring his rotator cuff.

The Hawks were able to rebound and take game two. After trailing 3-0, the Hawks retaliated with a six run second inning that made the difference. Rick Bartell went five innings for the win and Rod Sowinski picked up the save.

The major reason to why the Hawks are struggling is simple: newcomers need to gain experience and returning players need learn leadership skills. Of this year's 19-man roster, 14 of them have never played junior college baseball before. And the five returning lettermen are just getting used to being team leaders.

Still, Assistant Coach Mike Brake has a positive outlook on the situation, "We've been in every ballgame so far, it's just that we've been making mental mistakes that have been hurting us."

There have been a couple of bright spots along the way for the Hawks in Freshmen Tony Pignataro and Marty Cruzan. Both players went .500 for the week with Pignataro going 6-12 with 5 RBI's and 3 stolen bases. His second inning round-tripper keyed the big six-run second that won game two of the Illinois Valley doubleheader. Cruzan went 5-10 with 3 runs batted in and a stolen base. Two of his RBI's kept Harper in the Kishwaukee contest.

Tennis team cruises along

The Harper Men's Tennis Team continues to cruise along as they captured the Harper Doubles Tournament title by winning seven of nine matches in the tournament.

Two of the three teams representing Harper went unbeaten in their three matches. The tandem of Mark Bartelson and Jay Orlick pounded their Kankakee opponents 6-2, 6-1, and their Lake County opponent 6-1, 6-3. They topped it off by defeating their Rock Valley opponents 7-5, 6-2.

The duo of Bill Adams and Eric Ford also went undefeated in the tournament. They won over their Kankakee opponents 6-0, 7-5 and their Rock Valley opponents 6-2, 7-5. They concluded with a 6-2, 6-4 victory over Lake County.

Also competing in the tournament was the team of John Pitchford and Ed Feramme. They went 1-2 by falling to their Kankakee and Rock Valley foes 6-1, 4-6, 7-2, and 6-3, 6-2 and beating their Lake County opponent 7-6, 3-6, 7-1.

Softball wins first two

Harper 11-6, Truman 8-5

By Chris Boghossian
Staff Writer

The Harper softball team outlasted the cold and a tough opponent last Wednesday, defeating Truman in both games of a doubleheader.

Michele Theriault pitched the season debut, leading the Hawks to an 11-8 victory.

In the second game, pitcher Barbera Bartell shut down the Truman batters to ensure a 6-5 win in a game shortened after four and one-half innings by cold and darkness. Both pitchers threw a complete game.

Since the first two games were cancelled due to poor weather conditions, the Hawks stand at 2-0 heading into conference play.

"The pitchers came through in clutch situations," said assistant coach Julie Ellefson.

Temperatures were in the 40's for the game, but strong winds made it feel much colder.

"Everyone played really well," said Ellefson. "It was really cold out there and that slowed everyone down, but our team handled it well."

Infielder Georgine Grisco had a good day at the plate, but Ellefson said everyone contributed to the winning cause.

Major League Baseball: National League predictions

By Kevin Oates
Staff Writer

It's baseball prediction time. The baseball season is upon us with all its' gambling, brawling and million-dollar contracts underway.

The National League East is my first subject. First place: New York Mets. As much as I hate them, they have the best team in the East. The pitching is outstanding and the fielding is improved with Greg Jeffries in fold. The depth on this team cannot be beat.

Second: St. Louis Cardinals. It is an odd year which means the Cardinals are clue. Every other year the Cards do well, which is the only reason I am picking them for second.

Third: Pittsburgh Pirates. The Pirates have a shot this year. The addition of Glenn Wilson will add more pop, but they will have to play a bit above their heads for a title shot.

Fourth: Chicago Cubs. The Cubs looked awful in the spring and refused to sign a left-fielder. The entire team is suspect. This team will probably be better than last year, but who knows? Jerome Walton might come through in center which could help, along with an improved bullpen.

Fifth: Montreal Expos. The Expos are having some troubles with their pitchers. It seems a couple of them are having nose problems. This could drag the team down. They don't have a lot of big-hitters, and without a solid pitching staff, I don't see them doing anything.

Sixth: Philadelphia Phillies. This team is bad. No pitching, fielding or hitting = Last Place.

The National League West looks interesting. First Place: San Diego Padres. The most improved team on paper. Good management really solidified the whole team with good signings. Jack Clark is an extra 100+ RBI's and Bruce Hurst is an extra 18 wins.

Second Place: Cincinnati Reds. With the Rose scandal underway, this will give the team something to fight for. The Reds always have a good team but need key players to come through to have a legitimate shot.

Third: San Francisco Giants. They have a chance, but really need to play over their heads if they want to win. Suspect pitching might kill their chances.

4th place?

Fourth: Los Angeles Dodgers. Their improvements didn't impress me. All the huge signings, and coming off a championship, dream, year will have an effect on the team. They have a shot but are doubtful.

Fifth: Houston Astros. Even Yogi Berra says they don't have a chance. They continuously don't have power hitters who can hit homers in that Coliseum they play in. Let's face it, Glenn Davis isn't getting any younger.

Sixth: Who else? Atlanta Braves. The old folks home for baseball. This team will be the Orioles of 1989. They have a couple of good starters but that's it. They are a dead team. A bunch of has-beens and never had-beens.

Next week: American League predictions.

Fans' voices voted for Frenzy

By Lisa Aust
Staff Writer

More than 1,100 fans of original music made their voice heard in a decisive way Last Friday night, in Building M.

The long awaited Battle of the Bands was finally fought with only the audience to judge. One band emerged as the victor.

Frenzy received an overwhelming amount of votes and claimed a substantial list of prizes. They won recording time, a guitar, a plaque, drum heads, guitar strings, comedy club tickets and a $50 gift certificate.

Talented members of Frenzy are Phil Baranchik (guitar), Matt Halmmiak (vocal), Lon Ripley (guitar) Kevin Morrisey (percussion), and Seth Selkow (bass guitar).

7th Heaven came in second place and won six hours of recording time and tickets to the Barn of Barrington Comedy Club.

Threat succeeded in capturing third place. They received three hours of recording time.

All of the prizes were contributed by local businesses. Part of the $3 charge per ticket will be donated to the Little City Foundation. After deducting the expenses of coordinating this event, WHCM and the Program Board will have approximately $2,200 to give to the foundation. It has not yet been decided when or where to hand over the money.

WHCM would like to put stipulations on the money. It is feared the money will become lost in bureaucratic red tape. The funds could go to a specific project instead of being used at the discretion of the administrating body. The donation will directly benefit the residents of Little City.

WHCM predicts that there will be future battles due to the success of this one.

Ivarson sweeps Student Trustee election: 131 of 222 votes

Editor-in-Chief

Darlene Ivarson swept the Student Trustee election with 131 votes, Student Activities announced. Three candidates ran for the office this year. The vote tabulation was: Darlene Ivarson (131), Paul Lombardi (62), Jeff Michalske (18). There were 11 write-ins and no invalid ballots.

"I was pleased that there was a voter turnout in all of the buildings and that it improved over last year," said Director of Student Activities Jeanne Pankanin. "I would still like to see a higher turnout," she added.

While the turnout was not record-breaking, 222 votes, it was a larger turnout than 182 votes last year. The worst recorded Student Trustee election result was in 1986 with a total of 52 votes. In 1981, 409 students voted, but the average voter turnout is about 225.

No election complaints were made; however, Lombardi was displeased with the results and was considering circulating a petition that would make him co-Student Trustee.

Pankanin did not advise the candidate to proceed and thought it unlikely the board would grant his request.

Lombardi withdrew his petition after consideration.

Ivarson, a biology major and Life and Human Service Senator, will end her one year term in April 1990.

Ivarson wants to stimulate student involvement in clubs and organizations. Currently she is working with Laura Jacobson, Student Trustee, and will give her first report to the Board of Trustees on Thursday, April 27.

College News Update

Partnership award:

Harper College will receive an award from The American Association of Community and Junior Colleges (AACJC) for developing and offering on-site educational programs with Motorola, Inc. These programs are customized to meet the needs of the company and the employees.

Harper initiated a program involving literacy and productivity for the Motorola employees. This program provided more than 47,700 hours of on-site literacy instruction in reading, math and language skills.

The AACJC Project involves helping leaders of the nation's businesses, industries and labor unions.

Student Senator dismissed:

Senator Chairmaine Mizanlit of the Clubs and Organizations division was dismissed because of poor attendance at the Senate meetings. The Senate constitution states that if a senator has more than two unexcused absences there is cause for dismissal.

The senator will not be replaced due to the lack of time left in the spring semester.

New committee meeting time:

Next fall, there will be a scheduled agenda for faculty and administration to meet for committee meetings from 1-3 p.m. This has been done in the past but not recently.

The agenda will be discussed in the next Senate meeting held on Friday at 2 p.m. in Building A 242.

Harbinger places second in state

By Mona Isa
News Editor

The Harbinger received eight awards and placed second overall at the Illinois Community College Journalism Association (ICCJA) in Springfield on April 4 and 5. This annual contest allowed individual staff writers, editors and photographers to be evaluated on the quality of their work.

For overall excellence in Illinois community college newspapers, College of DuPage received first place and third was Parkland College for weekly newspapers.

Each community college was evaluated in eight areas: news, features, entertainment, sports news, sports features, editorials, photo specials and layout.

From Harper, first place was awarded to Alisa Chinlund in features, "A different generation on campus, older students choose Harper" and Steve Hill in entertainment, "Pink Floyd: Two Sides of the Coin" An honorable mention was Lou Nunez in sports news, "Lady Hawks advance".

Second place awards were presented to Robyn Davis in editorials, "We are only 'semi-aware' here at Harper" Scott Neidl in entertainment, "Lean on Me' stands up, Lou Nunez in sports features, "Illness loses while life triumphs" and Tari Vaughn in features, "Back to school for ex-harperite Marlee Matlin"

The annual convention is one of the membership benefits of the ICCJA, which has its executive office at the Department of Journalism at NIU. This year's conference was coordinated by Avi Bass of NIU, the ICCJA executive director.

In addition to the presentations, members heard an address on the driving problems of Illinois and the illiteracy rate by Jim Edgar, Secretary of State.

Illinois House bills

Currently several bills are under consideration by the House of Representatives that will have an affect on the Harper community at large. If anyone has questions or comments, now is the time to contact your representative.

Illinois Clean Indoor Air Act

Designated areas of smoking and non-smoking has become a pertinent issue to the public. Illinois health agencies is collaborating with people of Illinois and the state government to pass a bill, Illinois Clean Indoor Air Act, which prohibits smoking in areas which are used by and open to the public.

The bill does not ban smoking or is anti-smoking but gives smokers and non-smokers a choice to designate smoking and non-smoking areas. Surveys have shown that up to 92% of non-smokers and 87% of smokers favor this type of bill.

Currently, 43 states have the Illinois Clean Indoor Air Act; however, Illinois is one out of seven states who hasn't passed the bill.

Anyone who has an interest in supporting the bill (House Bill 0120) should contact the Cook County Board of Elections, 443-5519.

Tax Exempt Status for Tuition Benefits

A state bill was passed to permit employees of tax-exempt tuition payments in order to pursue studies which are related to their jobs.

In the past, graduate students were confronted with having to pay taxes on their tuition waivers. With assistance employees can upgrade their skills, creating a more productive environment.

Students, show your creativity in art show

By Alisa Chinlund
Features Editor

Photograph a favorite subject, mold a memorable sculpture, or draw a remarkable portrait. Do it quick. Time is running out. There is less than two weeks left for students to enter their original artwork in the Annual Harper Student Art Exhibit.

This show gives students a chance to show people examples of their artwork throughout the current year," said Ken Dahlberg, associate professor of art. "The exhibit is not limited to art students or current works. Any student may enter their best work."

Students may enter up to three works per category. The mediums are: painting, drawing, sculpture, ceramics, print making, computer graphics, fashion design, mixed media and interior design.

Students should submit their artwork by Tuesday, April 25 to Ken Dahlberg (C222) or the Art and Music office (C216).

Each piece should have an entry tag filled out and attached to the back. Students may pick up entry tags in C222 or C216.

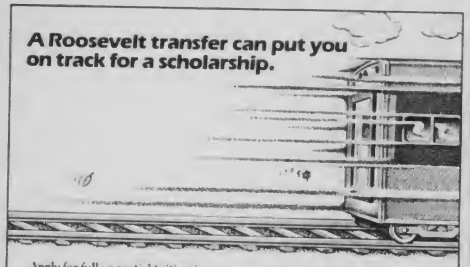

Each piece will be judged by a jury of art faculty. The judges will select work for the exhibition based on criteria which includes: technical proficiency, originality, creativity, and unusual ideas," said Dahlberg. "Class projects will also be judged on the degree in which they successfully go beyond the general assignment requirements."

The Best of Show winner will receive the Sue L. Schultz Memorial Award from the Harper College Educational Foundation. The Foundation will also give out an Honorable Mention Award.

"I encourage students to submit their best work for the exhibition," said Dahlberg.

The selected pieces will be on exhibit on the second floor of Buildings C and P. For more information contact Ken Dahlberg at extension 2308.

Take a walk for handicapped

By Chris Boghossian
Staff Writer

Do you want to go for a walk? How about a six-day, 250-mile walk?

A dozen Harper students, led by organizer Kevin O'Connell, will be participating in the American Handicapped Association's (AHA) Second Annual "Helpful Hearts and Hands" Walk-A-Thon.

The event begins in Springfield on July 28. From there, the group will walk about 40 miles per day and reach their destination, Barrington, six days later.

"The purpose of the walk is to raise money for the AHA," O'Connell said. "We also would like to heighten awareness concerning the handicapped community in the Chicago area and throughout the state of Illinois."

Other Harper students participating in the walk include Tom Downs, Greg Chapman, Spencer Prow, Steve Drury, Albert Vazquez, James Hoffman, Lorraine Zischke, Karen Theisfield, Cindy Syoen, and Craig Iverson.

O'Connell, a 20-year-old student majoring in agriculture, music, and philosophy, has worked hard on this project, looking for sponsors and gathering participants, but this is his second time around.

Last summer, he and former Harper student R. Scott Engmann walked and biked from the Golden Gate Bridge in San Francisco to Barrington- a trip covering 2,000 miles and 31 days.

Kevin said the idea of a fund-raiser has been in the back of his mind for a long time. "Ever since I can remember, I was interested in developing a summer camp/ranch community for the handicapped. Then Pete's (friend Peter Soby) injury spurred the refinement of that idea."

Soby is a Harper student who was seriously injured in a diving accident almost two years ago and now is confined to a wheelchair.

"After that," O'Connell continued, "we played it by ear. We made about 100 phone calls to find out what we had to do. It is more complicated and time-consuming than it looks."

Kevin and Scott raised $11,500 last summer, but $5,000 of that was donated from one source, an insurance company.

With about 15 people participating in this year's walk, O'Connell hopes to raise $20,000.

O'Connell said he decided, after his experience last year, that he could raise more money this year although the group is traveling a shorter distance in less time.

"We are aiming for $1,000 per walker and hope another $5,000 is donated from surrounding communities and businesses," he said.

"The account is open now for donations. I want to thank everyone who contributed last year and everyone who has contributed this year."

He also said that they welcome members to join them in their walk for a day or two.

Kevin O'Connell remembers last year's walk and displays Chicago Sun Times article. (Photo by John Sisson)

O'Connell is better known to Harbinger readers as Pseudophile Green and Max Hobner, and prefers to maintain a low profile. However, he goes beyond his ideas by putting his intentions into action and is an asset to the Harper community.

Donations for the "Helpful Hearts and Hands" Walk-A-Thon can be collected by an AHA member or can be sent directly to the Suburban Bank of Barrington, 333 N. Northwest Highway, Barrington, IL, 60010, Attention Loss Pals. Make checks payable to AHA Walk-A-Thon.

For more information, call the AHA at 231-0220 or Loss Pals, of Suburban Bank of Barrington at 381-3500.

Health Corner

There was a case of seven-day Rubeola at Harper College in March, reported by the Cook County Department of Public Health.

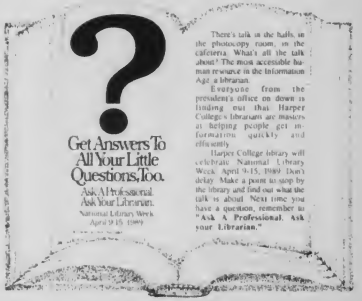

It is strongly recommended that you check your immunization records as soon as possible. Family physicians can help verify immunization records.

You need a vaccination if you were born after January 1, 1957 and vaccinated before 1980.

Free vaccine is available in the Harper College Health Service, in A362, from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. on Monday through Thursday, and on Friday from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

The Cook County Department of Public Health also has free immunization clinics in this area. Call 470-7227 for the locations of the clinics.

Contact Health Service at 397-3000 extension 2849 if you have questions about your immunization status. Become immunized and stay healthy. The spread of measles can be prevented.

The price of pride

As Business Manager of the Harbinger this past year, I realized how much hard work goes into publishing a weekly newspaper. Most of the staff working here are volunteers, who receive no weekly paycheck. After learning that other college newspapers pay their writers, I wanted to find out who they were, and how much they received.

I was quite shocked to learn that local colleges allocate funds to pay writers for their stories.

College of DuPage's staff is paid $10 per story and $5 per photo used in publication. Editors are paid $35 per issue. Triton College writers receive an hourly wage of $5. Elgin College pays their staff $5 per story, and photo published. Editors receive a flat rate of $40 per issue.

Although this does not represent a great deal of money, it's something. The Harbinger staff is not paid in this fashion, although editors can qualify for a partial tuition rebate. This amounts to, $10-15 per publication, or $300 per academic year.

Student aides are paid $4.25 an hour. What makes the services they perform for the college so different from ours?

This past week, the Harbinger placed second in state for overall quality and content (see related story, page one). Although this is admirable, the school that took first for the seventh year straight was the College of DuPage.

The DuPage student newspaper, the Courier, has a budget of more than $65,000; of this, $45,000 is allocated from the college. The Harbinger has a current budget of $23,000; Student Activities allocated $9,000. The remainder is produced through advertising revenue.

This past year more than 30 persons quit the Harbinger. Students would rather work on campus and get paid an hourly wage for their contribution.

The Harbinger for more than 20 years has provided a quality weekly paper, free to the college community. What we get in return is a pat on the back and some pocket change.

One possible solution is that Student Activities allocate more funds to student organizations, such as the Harbinger, Student Senate, WHCM, and other contributing groups. This will allow students to be paid for their work.

Student Activity fees were raised in fall of '87; where is all this money being spent? Harper should create a payroll system thru Student Activities for student groups who contribute to the overall college learning experience.

After all, anything of value has a price.

Harper's Front Porch: Use it or lose it

Two students stand next to some obsolete kitchen equipment on the main floor of Building A. The first says, "What is it?"

"It WAS the snack bar," says the second.

"What happened?"

"A fire," the first student explains.

"When?"

"1984."

"Oh."

The snack bar has opened and closed more times than the bathroom door. It was originally built in the late 70's.

There have been four directors of Food Service over the past 10 years (three of them affiliated with Canteen Corporation, a food management company) and apparently the cost of operation has fluctuated causing the snack bar to open and close.

In Nov. 1984, a grease fire damaged some of the equipment and it closed. It reopened in April 1985 and stayed open until fall 1986.

Then newly appointed Vice President of Administrative Affairs Vern Manke closed it due to excessive costs and is now considering reopening it, perhaps in Building J.

Reopening the snack bar in Building A, is unlikely because current Director of Food Service Bob May believes it costs more money than it would bring in. "We would be serving the same customers," explained May. There would be three Canteen-operated food facilities in Building A, if the snack bar were in reopen.

However, "Some sort of satellite set-up would be possible," May said. A snack bar near Building J would reach different students, especially in the winter.

To me, and to other students too, the important thing is either to reopen the snack bar or, . . close it. Manke suggested a few years ago that the space could be allocated for storage of tables and chairs used for special events. Yet, the equipment is still in the public eye. It is a waste of space and perhaps a hazard.

The good news is that Student Senator David Pantella has motivated the administration to take action. Manke and May will meet today to discuss the possibility of opening the snack bar in Building J.

We should know the results of the meeting within one week.

Letter to the editor

Thank you for publishing in the Harbinger what is seldom published in the mainstream media: some truth about El Salvador and the U.S. role in financing repression and murder there.

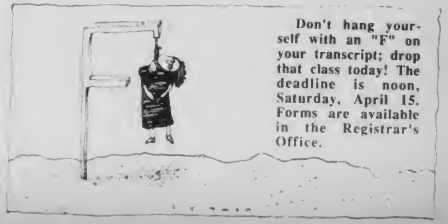

Since the early '80s, some 70,000 Salvadorans, most of them civilians, have been killed, mostly by right wing death squads and U.S.-funded Salvadoran armed forces--all this behind a facade of "democratically elected" civilian governments.

In March of this year, Freddy Cristiani, nominal leader of the ARENA party (the death squad party), was elected President of El Salvador by about 15% of the total potential electorate, and the U.S. press immediately advanced him as the latest Salvadoran "moderate" (because he said he was a moderate) and declared his government deserving of our aid (because, I suppose, butchering his own people is expensive business).

Under the guise of encouraging democracy, our government funds death and destruction to the tune of half a billion dollars a year, and most of the media won't touch the story.

But hats off to the Harbinger for countering these distortions and silences about our part in bankrolling slaughter in El Salvador, a nation whose name is Spanish for Vietnam.

Anxious actors wait backstage as a hush falls across the audience. The house lights slowly fade as the nerves build. This is it. Opening night has finally arrived.

At some time, most people have experienced the butterflies an actor feels during an opening night. They might have felt the same sensation before a final exam, while giving a speech, or acting in a play. Most people, however, don't realize the months of preparation that go into making an opening night possible.

This preparation has made Harper's Spring Musical possible. Jacques Brel is Alive and Well and Living in Paris opens on April 14 and runs for two weekends, but much of the work is done before the audience arrives.

Director Mary Jo Willis

The process begins months ahead of time, when the show selection is made. Mary Jo Willis, the show's director explains, " You choose a show for a number of reasons: what would work best on the stage, what would be challenging for the students, or what your audience would like to see. This year, I picked the show because it's something I wanted to do. It's wonderful to be able to personally do this piece that I have loved for so long."

Jacques Brel was born in Belgium, and moved to Paris as a young man, where he became interested in music. He began singing and playing his guitar in bars and coffee houses in France in the 1960's.

Stagecraft student touches up a flat.

Soon, he was very popular in France and throughout Europe. He was invited to tour in America, but the tour was short-lived. Brel was opposed to America's involvement in the Vietnam War, and as a form of protest, decided to end the tour after two performances.

American producer Mort Schuman then developed an evening of 26 songs written by Brel, but performed by other singers.

Willis explains that the performance is not at all like conventional musical theatre. While the show consists solely of songs by Brel, each song tells its own story. "It's the kind of music that makes you think. You can't just come and be a passive listener.", commented Willis. The songs are about growing old, relationships, children, thoughts on life and death, and what it all means. Willis says, "Brel writes about things that are human."

Jacques Brel is Alive and Well and Living and Paris first opened off-Broadway in 1968, and was performed in Chicago in the early 1970's at Happy Medium, which is where Willis first saw the show.

The next step, after the show is decided on, is casting and rehearsals. Jacques Brel has parts for 10 singers. Some songs are group numbers, and some are solos. Casting the musical was difficult, but Willis explains that "Most of the voices determined the cast. Some songs needed a more delicate sound, while some are more powerful and driving."

The Jacques Brel cast members are Mark Hilan, Jamie Lynn James, Bruce Johnson, Andy Leahy, Harold LeBoyer, Joe Pulio, Tracy Payne, Debbie Royals, Bobbie Proper, and Nancy Strickland.

Overall, Willis was very pleased with the cast selection. "I used to flow together to express a theme. Lighting has helped create the overall feeling of the show.

While the cast is busy learning parts, the technical staff is also hard at work. First, the sets need to be built, props and costumes made, and finally, lighting plotted.

Jacques Brel has been an especially challenging musical for Technical Director Michael Brown. The paintings on the sets plus over 100 slides are used to enhance the songs.

Brown explains that the visual images on the flats and many of the screen projections are computer generated images. Willis and Brown searched for, and selected 200-300 images that were appropriate for the songs in the musical. The selections were then narrowed down to the images used in the show.

Emotions are set for the performance.

The images were entered into the computer using a video camera and reworked to simplify them. For example, background and subtle shading were eliminated to make them more effective. The computer images were then re-photographed and made into slides.

Some slides were projected onto flats and painted for use in set decoration, while some are projected onto a screen during selected songs.

"The images are used to enhance visually the poetry of Brel's songs. This total process is done in hopes to heighten the emotional impact of the show," Brown commented.

Willis explained that the biggest technical difficulty was the slide projection. Usually slides are projected from behind a screen to improve their clarity. However, due to the small size of Harper's theatre, the images had to be projected from the light booth. This posed a real problem while trying to achieve clarity on the screen.

Willis commented on the extra help that was given by the campus, "We get such great cooperation from everyone on campus. The library staff, photo lab, graphics department, TV production, roads and grounds crew, and the music department were all a tremendous help. It's really a great spirit."

When all the preparation is done, the only thing left to do is sit back and enjoy the show. Willis expresses only one final wish, "I would hope that people come with an open mind."

Jacques Brel is Alive and Well and Living in Paris will be performed on April 14, 15, 21, and 22 at 8 p.m. and April 16 and 23 at 2:30 p.m. in the Building J Theatre. Tickets are $3 for students and staff and $5 for the public. On Saturday, April 22, a special dinner/theatre package is available for $15 for students and $17 for the public.

For tickets and further information, call the Harper Box Office at 397-3000, extension 2547.

Final rehearsals take place

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

In the next few years, the number of jobs requiring a college education will greatly exceed the number of college graduates available to fill them. Employers are racing against time and each other to begin attracting future college graduates to their organizations.

Don't waste your summer working low paying menial labor type jobs. MIDWEST SUMMER CO-OP represents thousands of Illinois corporations and organizations that want to hire college students to work full-time during the summer in career related positions. Work in your field of interest and gain valuable experience while earning a healthy income this summer. To be eligible you must have completed a minimum of one year (24 credit hours) in college and have attained at least a "C" (3.0) or a 2.5 scale (grade point) average.

To get your summer position, simply match your career interests to the needs of an employer listed in our SUMMER CO-OP DIRECTORY. The directory lists thousands of summer positions available in Illinois. While a slight majority of the positions are in the Chicago and surrounding suburban areas, there are still many located throughout the rest of the state. Job descriptions are organized into 50 general categories: Accounting, Advertising, Engineering (civil, electrical, mechanical) Education, Fashion Merchandising, Finance, Graphic Arts, Law, Marketing, Nursing etc. Whatever your interest, there are a number of positions to choose from. Work with and learn from some of the top professionals in Illinois. The directory comes complete with application materials and a toll-free number to call for assistance in arranging interviews.

OUR GUARANTEE

For every summer position we fill with an eligible college student, MIDWEST SUMMER CO-OP receives a fee from the employer for our services. Services to the employer include: listing in our directory, pre-screening applications and arranging interviews. Our services are at no cost to the college student. However, we cannot afford to waste our time and resources on those who are not serious about finding quality summer employment. The costs of producing and sending the directories alone (then, are the size of a telephone book) are very high. That is why we must request $5 to help cover the costs of your directory and set of application materials we send out. If you the unable to find a summer position suitable to your needs and interests, you can return them for a full refund. If you do accept a position under a training agreement with MIDWEST SUMMER CO-OP the employer will refund the $5 on your first paycheck.

This is an excellent opportunity to "taste" your career interests in the real world before you begin your degree. Take advantage of the shrinking pool of educated workers. Earn while you learn this summer. The time was to fill your pocketbook is now. All jobs provide great pay and benefits. Commuter? Paid travel fee or Fantasy 500? The choice is yours.

Don't procrastinate, this can be a very important and valuable summer for you. Send your name current school address, home address, and $5 refundable to:

MIDWEST SUMMER CO-OP
Summer Applications Dept.
Oak Brook Center, Box 954
Oak Brook, IL 60522-954

Make check or money order payable to MIDWEST SUMMER CO-OP

Directory and application materials will be sent out to you by express mail the same day we receive your request. Please, no phone calls until after you have looked through the Directory and know which positions you are interested in.

Joey O needs some control

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

Every local band dreams of national success and making it big. We haven't recently seen Chicago bands breaking through. The last one I can remember was the Insiders, and it's been awhile since I've heard from them.

Joey O's Out of Control, a local band fronted by Joey Orlandino, have the big success dream. They finally got a record pressed and released, and are pushing for things to happen. The problem is that things won't happen unless some slight changes are made to their music and more important changes are made to their attitudes.

First the attitude problem. . . The press releases that accompanied this EP to the Harbinger are arrogant. The quotes from Joey Orlandino especially display an arrogance that perhaps is supposed to be seen as confidence.

The other core band members aside from Orlandino on guitar and vocals are: Chickie Farella for vocals, Ken White on percussion and vocals, and Bill DeJonghe playing keyboards guitar and vocals.

It is the music, however, that matters. Their style is pop-funk. Of the five songs on their Hold On Tight EP, two of the tracks are mostly good, and the others are totally unremarkable. The songs John's Notion and Trouble Down Below are the good ones. The lyrics, mostly by Orlandino, are a bit overblown, but okay and the choruses are good.

One of the biggest problems I have with the band is Chickie Farella's vocals. She doesn't sing lead all the time, but her voice is simply not right for this type of music. Farella would be a natural for belting out the blues. (In fact, she should try it sometime, if she hasn't already.)

Aside from the music is not too bad for a pop-funk fusion. The instrumentation is well constructed and accomplishes anything it sets out to do. The problem is just that they can't help get lost in the shuffle of other hoping-for-national-exposure, unsigned bands. If they make it, more power to them, but I'm not holding my breath.

Headbangers' Treat

By Jamie Beeson
Staff Writer

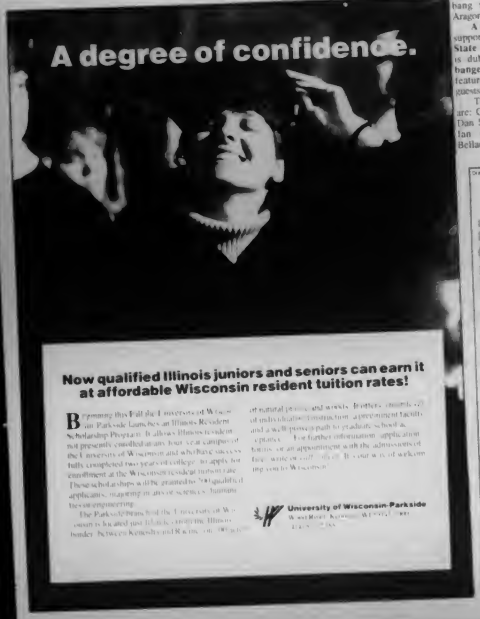

For all of you headbangers out there, now's your chance to bang the walls of Chicago's Aragon Ballroom.

Anthrax is on tour, in support of their current album, State of Euphoria. The tour is dubbed the MTV Headbangers' Ball Tour. The show features Anthrax, with special guests Halloween and Exodus.

The members of Anthrax are: Charlie Benante on drums, Dan Spitz on lead guitar, Scott Ian on rhythm guitar, Joe Belladonna for vocals and Frank Bello on bass.

State of Euphoria displays that special thrashing sound that only Anthrax has. Songs such as Who Cares Wins, Misery Loves Company, Make Me Laugh and Out of Sight, Out of Mind are what make State of Euphoria so heavy. Antisocial is a standout, despite not being an Anthrax original.

The MTV Headbangers Ball Tour has engagements at middle-sized performance arenas. The show is scheduled for April 28 at the Aragon Ballroom in Chicago. For Anthrax fans, it should prove to be a royal treat.

Harper baseball turns up the heat

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

The Harper baseball team is on a hot streak. The Hawks have won four of their last six games to put their season mark at 6-9 overall, and 3-3 in the N4C.

"We should be about .500 but for what we have, we're doing O.K.," Head Coach Dan Koss said. He went on to say, "We're scoring five runs a game but our opponents are scoring six or seven runs a game."

Harper 3-4
Joliet 17-17

The Hawks' home opener was an absolute nightmare. The Wolves took Harper by the jugular vein and didn't let go.

Brad Dalstrom gave up the Hawks' first grand slam homerun of the year. It got to the point where third baseman Tony Pignataro was called in to pitch. The only major highlight of the day was a pair of homers by Tim Longmore.

Harper 0-9
Lake Co. 4-5

Rick Bartell picked up his first loss of the year in game one as Harper committed three errors and Lake County pitcher Bruce Wimer handcuffed the Hawks by allowing only three hits. In game two, the Hawks blew a 5-1 lead as Dave Miller gave up a three-run homer in the bottom of the third that tied the game. But the Lancers (9-9) gave the game back to the Hawks as they committed five errors, including two in a four run fifth that gave the Hawks the win. Tony Vaca closed the game and picked up his second save.

Harper 5-3
McHenry 3-5

Harper took game one of the double-header on the strength of six McHenry errors and a super pitching performance from Rod Sowarzni, who went six innings for the win. Vaca picked up his second save in as many days. The Fightin' Scots (1-10) were able to pick up their first win of the year as they ganged up on Dalstrom for three runs in the second. Harper would cut it to 3-2 when Vaca broke out of his 0-18 slump with a two-run homer in the fourth. But McHenry would lock it up when Ty Barack countered Vaca's two-run shot with one of his own in the top of the sixth off reliever Dave Perks. Ted Nowakaski went the distance for the Scots.

Harper 2-13
Rock V. 1-3

The Hawks came away with their first sweep of the year by outlasting the rain, snow, and freezing temperatures to beat the Trojans (2-15, 0-6). In game one, Dave Szarzynski gave the Hawks the victory with a game-winning single in the seventh. In the meantime, Vaca held Rock Valley off by hurling a five-hitter. Game two went just six innings thanks in part of an eight run second inning keyed by hits from Szarzynski, Longmore, and John Burzawa. Angelo Turrelo finally put the Trojans out of their misery by capping off a four-run sixth with a double that gave the Hawks the win via the 10-run slaughter rule. Rick Bartell got his third win of the season and Szarzynski helped out in relief.

The Hawks will play host to Oakton in a doubleheader this afternoon at 2:00. A Saturday doubleheader with COD in Glen Ellyn at noon will also be on this weekend's menu for Harper as well.

Bolt & co. get down to business

By Chris Boghosian
Staff Writer

The Harper softball team had a busy week, playing six games in five days while battling tough opponents and unseasonably cold and wet weather conditions.

On Tuesday, April 4, the Lady Hawks lost a doubleheader to Moraine Valley by scores of 12-3 and 9-3.

The following Thursday, they lost the first game of a doubleheader to Elgin, 3-1, but bounced back for an 8-7 victory in the nightcap.

On Saturday, the Hawks beat Joliet, 7-6, in the first game of a scheduled doubleheader. Due to the cold and the mixture of rain and snow, the second game was postponed until Monday, when the Hawks completed a delayed sweep with a 4-2 win.

After last week's action, the Hawks stand at 2-2 in the N4C and 5-5 overall. Their next home game is at noon on Saturday, April 15, against McHenry.

Women's track team hurdles opponents

By Peter Suby
Sports Editor

Despite very cold weather at the Harper Open, the women's track & field team were able to get their season started as well as get a feel for the season.

Nikki Hollinsworth had a good day by placing first in the long jump (16' 5 1/2"), and second in the 100m (12.59). Hollinsworth, a heptathlete, also competed in the shot put (29' 3"), the high jump (4' 8") and the 400m relay team consisting of herself, Irene Reichmuth, Carla Munger, and Michelle Maxwell (54.32).

Maxwell and Lori Wilkens also had a good day at the open. Maxwell placed first in the high jump (5' 1"), and also competed in the long jump (15' 6 1/2"), the javelin toss (71' 4", a personal record) and the 100m hurdles (16.81).

Wilkens placed third in the high jump (5' 0"), attained personal records in both the discus (87' 6 1/2") and the javelin toss (8' 9"), ran in the 200m (27.54) and was part of the Anne Thayer, Dana Peterson, and Stephanie Gorecki 400m relay team (53.80).

In the field events, Karen Witsiepe competed in the shot put (28' 5") the javelin toss (7' 7") and the discus (76' 5").

Pascale O'Donoghue also competed in the discus throw and achieved a personal record (69' 7").

Other accomplishments were made by Stephane Gorecki: high jump (4' 8"), long jump (13' 10 1/2"), 200m (29.9) 100m hurdles (20.3) and the 100m (13.9).

Anne Thayer competed in the 200m (27.74) and the 100m (13.0). Carla Munger competed in the 200m (29.65), the 100m hurdles (20.74) and the 100m (14.02). Dana Peterson competed in the 200m (30.41) and the 100m hurdles (18.10).

Long distance runners Irene Reichmuth had a time of 11:47 in the 3000m and Pan Weider finished fourth at the 1500m (5:06.8).

Coach Zellner commented, "The girls competed very well, and now have an idea of what to expect for the rest of the season."

Next week: Results of both men's and women's track and field events from the Chicago Metro.

Major League Baseball: American League predictions

By Kevin Oates
Staff Writer

This week, as I promised, my American League predictions. I am not real familiar with the A.L. but here I go.

The A.L. East

First place: Cleveland Indians. My longshot. I like them, they have good power and if the pitching comes through they have a legitimate shot. Phat, a movie made about them, so it could be their year.

Second place: Milwaukee, if Paul Molitor comes back and has like he did last year they have a good chance. Pitching is improved.

Third place: Detroit Tigers. Sparky Anderson is a winner and won't let his team lose. Lack of pitching talent and loss of Kirk Gibson is taking effect.

Fourth place: Baltimore Orioles. Last year was a fluke. They still aren't great but with bad boy Eddie Murray gone, attitudes will get better.

Fifth, Sixth, and Seventh places: A toss up between the Yankees, Blue Jays and Red Sox. They are three messed up teams. The Blue Jays just don't seem like a good team. They have always fallen short and I think they are falling apart. The Yankees and Red Sox soap operas make me sick. These teams are going nowhere.

The A.L. West

First Place: Kansas City. Kansas City here they come. The Royals are back. Brett is great. Yount is healthy and the pitching looks strong. They are a classy team and I think they will do well.

Second place: Chicago White Sox. The Sox aren't as bad as everyone thinks. Their lineup is strong. Steve Lyons, Carlton Fisk, Ivan Calderon and Greg Walker aren't little guys. If the pitching holds up the hitting will be there. Fielding is much better than last year. Wait and see.

Third place: Oakland A's. Yes, I know they're the favorites but I think after a winning season there is always a let down. They still have a shot though.

Fourth place: Texas Rangers. Good acquisitions in the spring will make this team much better. Pitching is somewhat improved. Jamie Moyer and Nolan Ryan must come through for the team to turn around from last year. Give this team two more years.

Fifth place: Minnesota Twins. Ever since they won the World Series they lack what got them in it; team work. The team hasn't pulled together and moaning about money always drags a team down. I still think Kirby Puckett is great but Frank Viola has turned into a real jerk.

Sixth place: California Angels. They don't have much that I can see. Lance Parrish was a good find but can he get back into the form of 1984?

Seventh place: Seattle Mariners. Why does this team exist? They stink in every way. They did sign Steve Trout though so maybe they have a shot at first.

Second flasher emerges on campus

Marc J. Balke
Staff Writer

A second flasher exposed himself at Harper this past week. The alleged offense took place in a stairwell in Building F, last Tuesday night at 9 p.m.

A white female student was exiting the building when she noticed a man standing on the staircase landing. He had his pants down to his ankles, and his genitals revealed.

The offender was described as a white male in his mid twenties, 145 pounds, thin build, clean shaven, and dark brown combed back hair. At the time of the occurrence he was wearing a beige topcoat, dark dress pants and a solid colored dress shirt. It is not known if he is a student of the college.

This current offender is the second flasher this year and has committed the fourth exposure this semester. There has been an indecent exposure reported to Public Safety in each of the past four months, each occurring near the end of the month. All four exposures have happened in dark areas around the campus.

One possible reason for the occurrences is that Harper's stairwells are inadequately lit, allowing such activities to happen without being seen by many students. In a different case a girl was exposed to by a man in parking lot six, near the path leading to the campus, where it is dimly lit. Dark areas around campus have become a concern to many students.

"I sometimes stay late and work on homework in the Building A lounge. When I leave, the lots are dark and deserted, it scares me to walk out alone," stated Sherri Hamilton, student.

Lights are occasionally turned off as early as 10:30 p.m. However, Public Safety will escort a student to his/her car, if needed.

In a similar case, alleged offender Steven D. Fain was arrested for indecent exposure last March. He is also being charged with attempted battery.

He allegedly grabbed his victim while she tried to escape. Later the victim recognized the suspect in a parking lot and wrote down his license plate number, she then reported it to Public Safety. Fain was then arrested. He is currently released on a $10,000 bond, and is scheduled to appear in court May 1st.

Public Safety would appreciate any information leading to the arrest of the latest flasher. Names are withheld on request. Contact Chief Kevin King in Public Safety at extension 2330.

Wellness Week a success

By Mona Isa
News Editor

The fifth annual Wellness Week Celebration encompassed all areas of healthcare last week, April 11-13 in Building A Lounge. Booths, seminars and workshops provided students and residents an opportunity on the awareness of health issues.

"We had a very good turnout at the booths and seminars, with good attendance throughout the week, stated the Supervisor of Health Services, Rosemary Murray, and Wellness Commitee Member Becky Sarnier.

More than ten different tests were given, including vision, hearing, diabetics, and cholesterol were offered at little or no cost.

"This really gave a chance for students to find out their conditions and to information without going through the hassle of appointments, stated student Doris Johnabergs.

The main contribution for the Health Fair was the students and residents who attended. "Everyone looks forward for the fair each year and without everyone's participation the fair wouldn't be possible," added Murray.

Planning for next year's Wellness Week has already begun. "The scheduling is a full-year process and we are all enthusiastic to plan ahead," stated Murray.

College News Update

Two Harper Administrators were chosen to participate in the Leaders Program, Elaine Stoermer, Director of College Relations and Lee Vogel, Director of the Learning Assistance Center.

The Leaders Program is designed to improve the skills of decision-making roles. Stoermer and Vogel will be paired with advisors at Harper.

Stoermer, whose advisor is President Paul Thompson, will oversee the creation of communications manual. This manual will address various forms of communications such as media and print materials.

Vogel, whose advisor is Vice President of Student Affairs Dr. Bonnie Henry, will spend a part of the year in advanced study at the University of Texas. She will investigate the field of human resource development activities.

The position for head basketball coach is currently vacant. Physical education administration are reviewing applications. A decision will be made during the first week of May.

Former head coach, Bill Probst, resigned during spring break. Probst had been head coach for the last two years at Harper, guiding the Hawks to 11-45 record.

A steam pipe broke and stalled last Saturday's performance of "Jacque Brel is Alive and Well and Living in Paris" last Saturday in Building J. The show was delayed due to a power failure when a steam pipe sprayed water into open electrical panels.

The incident occurred just before intermission, knocking out the house lights, the lights in both the dressing rooms, washrooms and some of the stage lighting. The show continued after an extended intermission in which staging for the Second Act was re-worked.

No injuries were reported. Commonwealth Edison worked through the night to repair the damages. Sunday's Matinee Performance went on as scheduled.

Building M Facility Manager Dennis Ryther has accepted the post of manager of the new aquatic facility at Oklahoma City Community College in Oklahoma.

The pool, when completed, will be one of the top three aquatic facilities in the country, and will host the swimming events at this summer's Olympic Sports' Festival.

Dental hygiene clinic serves community

By William Sells
Staff Writer

Although it may not be too well known, Harper College has a dental hygiene clinic where students and community people can have their teeth checked, cleaned, and sealed.

The first appointment is a screening, or a general assessment of the condition of your mouth and gums. This is required of all new patients, and the cost is $5.

A full-mouth radiographic x-ray costs $15. Single x-rays are $1. Two sets are made. One set of x-rays is sent to your dentist.

Fluoride treatment charges vary with the difficulty of the case from $10 to $25. Other services include the application of sealents to molars for $2, and the prescription of medications for $3.

Senior citizens receive dental services at discounted prices. Compare these prices with regular trip to the dentist.

Another way the clinic differs from a normal dentist is in the amount of time you'll spend at Harper's Dental Clinic. Since the treatments are more personalized, the student-hygienists take their time while they develop their skills, and the instructors must inspect the students' work.

Clients will receive instructions on proper home tooth care and dental nutritional information.

If you need more involved dental care than the clinic can provide, you'll be referred to an area dentist, oral surgeons, and orthodontists.

Sixty-plus students and 25 faculty members make up the dental hygienist program.

After the student completes an intensive curricula, and passes state board tests, she or he is licensed to work in the dental health field.

Anyone can take advantage of this service, but first call and make an appointment. The phone number is 397-3000, ext. 2534.

The main appointment days and hours are Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Additional hours may be added if the need arises.

During this semester, some late afternoon or evening hours may be convenient for those who work or have classes during the day. These days and hours are Tuesdays and Thursdays from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m.

Accredited by the Commission on Dental Education of the American Dental Association, the clinic is located in D Building (D172) among the math, chemistry, and biology classrooms and labs.

Parking spaces, exclusively for clients, are directly behind the D Building.

Counselors can make a difference

By Alisa Chitalwal
Features Editor

Do you have problems getting along with your parents? Are you finding it hard to adjust to college life? Do you have low self-esteem? Are you suffering from depression? If you answered yes to any of these questions you are not alone. These are just a few of the problems that trouble today's students.

Help is near whether you need vocational, personal, or marital counseling.

"We have 18 counselors on campus to see faculty, staff or students," said Colette Moore, counseling intern.

Counseling centers are set up in A347, D142, F132 and I117. Sixteen counselors are available for academic counseling. Two counselors Moore and Dr. Pierre Lacocque, student development counselor, are accessible only for personal counseling.

"We are here to see students, staff, or faculty for personal counseling," said Lacocque. "We also serve as consultants. Somebody may want to ask questions about what we do or how to live with a difficult sibling."

"A lot of our clients need someone to talk to," said Moore. "They may come in and say I'm depressed. They may not know why. Our task is to go beneath the suffering and find out why the person is depressed. What is the theme? For example, the person may have been abused as a child. They maybe suppressing their true feelings. We need to find out how long they have been feeling this way and how to help them."

"We try to show the client that they are not alone. Other people have similar problems. They need to normalize the way they feel by making sense out of the situation."

Lacocque and Moore are available for short-term counseling typically over a semester. "We are not committed to years of counseling," said Lacocque.

"We refer clients who need long-term counseling," said Lacocque. "But we remain with the person until an appropriate referral has been made."

The counseling services are available free to students, and for $5 per session for faculty and staff.

The counseling center in I117 is open Monday through Thursday from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m., and Friday from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Interested in Harper Theatre?

Jacques Brel is definitely the show to see

By Tari Vaughn
Staff Writer

The spirit of Jacques Brel is alive and well and living in Harper's theatre.

Harper's Spring Musical, Jacques Brel is Alive and Well and Living in Paris, opened last Friday. The musical consists almost solely of music by Jacques Brel, a 1960's French musician. The concept of the show is by Mort Schuman, an American producer. The musical is intended to bring Brel's work to the United States.

Andy Leahy, Nancy Strickland and Joe Pulin sing about Frieda.

While the show has no overall storyline, each song tells a story of its own. The subjects range from life and death to romance and relationships. For example, the song Carousel is about the craziness of life, while Girls and Dogs reflects on relationships between men and women.

The most important quality of Brel's music its humanity. Brel writes about events and emotions that everyone has experienced. The emotions run the gamut, from happiness, sorrow, jealousy, and fear.

The cast, as a whole, does an excellent job. Their singing voices are superb, as well as their interpretations of the songs. The performers developed a different feeling or scenario for each of the songs. Vocally and physically they express themselves very well.

It would be impossible to single out any one or two members of the cast as being exceptional, as they all were wonderful. The cast of Jacques Brel includes Paul Dombrowski, Mark Hilan, Jamie Lynn James, Andy Leahy, Harold LeBeyer, Joe Pulin, Tracy Payne, Debbie Royals, Bobbie Proper, and Nancy Strickland.

Mary Jo Willis, the show's director, has done a very good job with the staging of this performance. The songs manage to move from one to the next very smoothly. Also, she has created appropriate movement and scenarios to help communicate the message of each song.

Special recognition must also be given to Michael Brown, Jacques Brel's set designer. During most of the songs in the show, slides were projected onto the set to enhance the feeling of the song. The projections were outstanding. I was especially impressed by the slides during the song Carousel. Images of carousel horses were flashed onto the screen as the song began. Gradually, the song becomes more frenzied, and the images match the songs feeling. By the end of the song, the horses faces are close up in expressions of sheer terror, as the singer is becoming more terrified.

The set and costumes for the show are very simple and work well. The costumes are uncomplicated and lend themselves to the singer's various roles, sometimes adding a hat or a prop.

Tracy Payne preforms Brel's Brussels.

The humanity of Brel's music in expressed well through the cast.

Before you decide where you'll go for your bachelor's degree, we think you should read a little fiction:

Transfer Myth #1: You can't afford a private college.

Transfer Myth #2: Your credits won't transfer to a small college with high standards.

Transfer Myth #3: Liberal arts colleges don't offer the majors you want.

IN FACT, over 85% of Rockford College full-time students, including those transferring from community colleges, receive financial aid. The average financial aid award was $6,110 last year.

The Harbinger celebrates 20 years on campus

Does Harper's strengths outweigh its concerns?

I'm sorry. We lied. Harper really isn't 20 years old. We didn't originally intend to be misleading.

The first Board of Trustees was elected in 1965 after the four district (Elk Grove, Palatine, Schaumburg and Wheeling) referendum was passed establishing the Harper district. Also in that year, a president was hired and a campus site selected.

The first academic year began in 1967 when classes operated out of Elk Grove High School with over 1,700 students. Construction of the new campus began.

Finally in 1969, the Palatine site, became the Harper campus complete with six buildings. The new campus opened to more than 5,300 students.

Harper took a very important step that led to its success and rapid enrollment growth in 1968. Harper applied for, and received membership in the Commission on Institutions of Higher Education of the North Central Association of Colleges and Schools. Among other benefits, the commission accredits colleges, which boosts their credentials and is excellent PR.

The commission accredited Harper for 10 years after their first visit in 1971. During their visit in 1981, they extended the accreditation six years.

Finally, in their last visit in 1987, the evaluation team left Harper with excellent news: the commission awarded Harper the highest honor, a 10 year accreditation.

The commission's written critique of Harper shines with praises and compliments. Over the past 20 years on campus, Harper has accomplished a great deal.

Some of the commissions positive observations were: Harper was well-prepared for the evaluation; all members of the institution take great pride in their work; all members take part in a "participative management structure (shared governance) through committees" which is "working well and is well-liked by the faculty and administration"; the Public Relations Office is "well-run"; Harper has a strong commitment to its transfer function, as is evident by the "quality of the arts and science programs"; students who continue their education do not have problems at four-year state institutions.

The commission listed 35 'strengths'; but they also listed some concerns. Some concerns were: a relatively high percentage of part-time faculty in certain programs; building and grounds renovation is long overdue; the LRC (Building F) is crowded; more full-time faculty is needed; no administrative personnel are on duty during evening classes.

While Harper has been very successful in the past, it is important to look to the future and prepare for the next evaluation (1997).

Harper's full-time to part-time faculty ratio is approximately 1:4, dnable the state average.

"The fall 1987 total number of full-time faculty (in the state) was 4,517 compared to 9,812 part-time faculty," said Director of Research Virginia MacMillian of the Illinois Community College Board. The state average is approximately one full-time for every two part-time faculty.

"While there will never be a ratio that will satisfy everyone efforts are being made to staff those areas that need full-time personnel," said President Paul Thompson.

There is a constant effort to improve cleanliness and upgrade housecleaning; however, that is not enough. Start a college-wide recycling program for paper and cans. As President Thompson said, "There are 15 buildings on this campus....With approximately 20,000 students and nearly 1,400 staff members moving through these buildings each semester, housekeeping becomes a gargantuan task." If we all "give a hoot" and help keep our own areas clean, it will show during the next evaluation.

A new building may help relieve the crowded LRC. The Executive Council, consisting of the president and the three vice-presidents, are discussing how to reduce cost and to fit it in the budget. The council originally hoped to have plans to present to the board by last fall. They are now targeting for this summer, but there are no guarantees.

To solve the need for full-time faculty, 11 faculty members have been hired both to fill positions created by retirements and resignations. And finally, Vice President of Administrative Services Verne Manke said the Executive Council was also considering the lack of administrative personnel on duty in the evening. It is possible that there will be a dean on campus during night classes in the future.

Harper has come a long way in the last 20 years: from operating out of a high school to a 200 square acre campus, from 1,700 students to over 20,000 students.

In the next nine years, plenty of work needs to be done for Harper to sparkle during the next North Central Evaluation. The time to start is now.

Election upset

There never was a petition and there never will be. I deny everything said about my seeking a position as Co-Student Trustee. I don't plan on seeking this position unless the students ask me to.

What I was seeking was increased communication between the students and everybody who has anything to do with Harper. This would help the students receive more recognition. Jeanne Pankanin (director of student activities) explained that there are many ways the students can be recognized. I truly believe she is right.

An overview of Harper

By Mona Isa
News Editor

This year Harper is observing the 20th anniversary of the opening of this campus in 1969. Over the years, Harper has grown and developed as an educational resource and a means for students to pursue the first two years of baccalaureate education. This anniversary observance allows administration, students and community residents to reflect on the past and look to the future.

The first faculty members were hire and the first student was accepted in January 1967. In June, the first meeting of the student government was held. In September, classes opened for 1,725 students in temporary facilities held at Elk Grove High School. Ground breaking for the first six buildings at the 200-acre campus site was in October.

From the beginning, Harper acquired a reputation as a strong community institution, especially for transfer students. Over the years, the college worked to improve agreements with Illinois universities in order to increase the acceptance of credits, and in return, enrollment increased.

Phase one of campus construction was completed on schedule in September 1969 to serve 5,400 students. In spring of 1972, Harper received approval to build a Health Science Complex (Building D) and a music wing (Building P). In fall 1974, Buildings D and P were opened for classes, and enrollment climbed to 15,500.

Looking back over the 20 years, there were staggered moments, the decreased enrollment, financial problems, and other misfortunes faced by Harper administrators.

Enrollment dropped sharply in 1977. Harper's fieldhouse, a barn which housed all physical education activities, was destroyed by fire in 1978. In 1978, there was an effort to cut costs and increase revenue due to lack of funds from the state.

However, the economic downturn also affected four-year colleges. Their rising costs made Harper the feasible choice for many. Meanwhile, there were many additions to the campus. Buildings J, J and M were completed in 1980. Harper's environment encouraged students to enroll.

In 1981, the enrollment continued to grow to more than 22,000. The Human Performance Laboratory in Building M offered fitness workshops. A cable television network was installed. CAD/CAM Center opened and established a partnership with area industries.

With all the added facilities and benefits, students became more involved.

A wide variety of cultural arts programs were featured. Well-known comedians such as Steve Martin, Cheech & Chong and Judy Tenuta drew crowds. Journey, Chubby Checker and the Violent Femmes added to the musical entertainment. Lectures such as Oprah Winfrey, Ralph Nadar and John Houseman provided us with knowledge.

The mission of Harper is to offer academic programs of the highest order of excellence. Harper's commitment includes quality education and activities for students to take advantage of. Harper also serves the community through teaching and research. It is a city dealing with public issues and supporting its students.

As Harper plans for the future, it will remember the past and thank those for being part of the development of Harper and the community.

A little 'binger history

Harper College tuition raised from $12 to $15 per credit hour?

Appearing next week in the Building A lounge . . . Harry Chapin?

Groundbreaking ceremony for new Buildings I and J?

It's unlikely that current students can remember these Harbinger stories from Harper's timeline, but perhaps staff and faculty members can. For the twenty years of the College's existence at this location, the student newspaper, the Harbinger, has been here to report all the relevant stories to the Harper community.

The newspaper began as Harper Grove in 1967. After two issues into its life, it assumed the name it has kept since, the Harbinger (affectionately known to its editors and staff as the 'binger). It is still written and laid out in the Harbinger Office, room A367, often until the wee hours of the morning.

The tone of the newspaper has changed with each editor-in-chief. Back in the early '70s there were several politically-oriented articles, in keeping with the times. One article emphasized the good and bad points of Nixon vs McGovern.

There were articles about the harmful effects of marijuana use. There were articles dealing with student elections. (The vote counts were no better then than they are now.) After an attempted rape on campus in 1974, there was a heated debate on whether Harper College's Public Safety officers should carry firearms.

There were advertisements for Levi's flares for only $8. There were movie reviews of "The Godfather", "The Candidate" and "Deep Throat". There were letters of complaint from students who were unable to get tickets for the Rick Nelson concert in the Building A lounge.

Through it all, the Harbinger staffs have always maintained a sense of humor. In May 1973, the staff printed something they called "Son of Harbinger", with bizarre and off-the-wall stories that had no credibility at all. Even these days, you can see the lighter side of the Harbinger staff creeping into the newspaper (hopefully discreetly).

Lately, the Harbinger has increased its revenue and its average number of pages per issue. For the past few years, the newspaper has been produced using Apple Macintosh computers and a LaserWriter printer thanks to the class gift of 1986.

The final layout of the newspaper is sent to the printers on Wednesday morning, as the editors sigh with relief.

Finally with a cup of coffee in one hand and the latest Harbinger in the other, many faculty members, staff and students begin their Thursdays at Harper College. This will likely be true twenty years from now just as it was twenty years ago.

Harper walls can not hear or speak. They have stood silently watching 20 years of students gather to learn and share experiences, and then move on with their lives. What would the brick walls of Building A say if given the opportunity?

One generation ago, in 1969, things were a bit different. Nixon was our President, America landed the first man on the moon and Neil Armstrong took a small step into history. Charles Windsor was crowned the 21st Prince of Wales. Teddy Kennedy had his accident at the Chappaquiddick Bridge which effectively ended any presidential hope.

The Warren Court ended in 1969, and the Burger Era followed. The Supreme Court under Warren is remembered for its liberalism. The high court opened itself up to political issues for the first time, such as the landmark case of Plessy vs. Ferguson in which segregation was overturned.

The minimum wage was $1.30 an hour. Sesame Street aired its first show and introduced the world to muppets. Miniskirts were in vogue. Hippies had become a national phenomenon.

If the brick walls could speak they would talk of the extremes in the Harper students' opinion of the Vietnam controversy. In the February 1, 1968 issue of the Harbinger, the results of a poll asking if the United States should withdraw from South Vietnam, was published. Seventy percent of the responding students thought we should STAY in Vietnam. The Chicago Tribune, the Chicago Daily News and a Washington D.C. paper all found this very newsworthy. In just one year, opinions shifted a full 180 degrees.

On October 15, 1969 a Vietnam moratorium, sponsored by Harper's Human Rights Club, was held in the lounge of Building A. It attracted speakers from outside the community, students from Columbia College in Chicago performed an anti-war skit. It was a peaceful demonstration, even though shouts of, "Peace now, bring them home", and "Blow the hell out of Hanoi!" were heard.

Class gifts: past and present

By Alisa Chlinlund
Features Editor

A note to all of you about to graduate: What would you like to give Harper as a class gift? The Student Senate is looking for ideas for the class of '89.

Any Harper student, administrator, staff or faculty member can submit ideas to be mulled over by a special subcommittee of the Student Senate. The final choice, if approved by the senate, will be announced May 5 at the annual Harper student awards banquet.

"Every year, a class gift is selected and funded by excess revenue from student activity fees," said Jeanne Pankanin, director of student activities.

"There have been a few suggestions for this year's class gift such as a large screen television for the student lounge, more outdoor benches near the lake, additional message displays for the campus, or funding to purchase the canoe artwork in Building A," said Pankanin.

Over the years, funds were allocated for a variety of class gifts. Pankanin recalls some of those gifts:

•Algonquin Road marquee (1973)

•Acoustical improvements in the Building A lounge (1974)

•Euclid Road marquee (1975)

•Two 16mm Bell & Howell movie projectors (1976)

•Anatomical Annie for CPR classes, and the William Rainey Harper room for artifacts (1977)

•Equipment for the Building M gym (1978)

•A news control board for WHCM, uniforms for the pom-pom and cheerleading squads (1980)

•Message displays for the cafeteria and ticket booth, trees and benches for the campus, and two programmable marquees (1981)

•Trees for the Algonquin Road entrance, portable sound equipment and a stage platform (1982)

•Three microwaves, furniture and typewriters (1983)

•Furniture for the campus, funding for the choir's Australia trip, and a fence for the prairie area on the east side of campus (1984)

•A bust of William Rainey Harper, and six outdoor campus directories (1985)

•A desktop publishing system and a laserwriter for the Harbinger (1986)

•An outdoor marquee for Building J (1987)

•Purchase of the dome for Harper's Observatory (1988)

Anyone who has an idea for this year's class gift should submit it to the student senate in A332 or call 2244.

Staff members reminisce about Harper's beginnings

By Jamie Besson
Staff Writer

Harper College has been at its present location since 1969. Over 70 people have been with the institution since that time.

John Gelch, is currently the Dean of Physical Education Athletics and Recreation (PEAR). Gelch started working at Harper, 22 years ago, when it was located at Elk Grove High School.

He began his career as a faculty member. With the assistance of co-workers he developed athletic programs as students' attitudes changed. In the early '70s, the students leaned towards group programs and team sports. The students of today are geared toward physical fitness, such as weightlifting and aerobics.

"Harper has always had a goal for quality," praised Gelch.

George Voegel, Dean of Educational Services, has been at Harper for 21 years. In the library, as the head of the Learning Resource Center, his main concern was to teach the faculty how to use new equipment purchased due to advancements in technology.

Voegel also noticed a change in the students' attitudes. In the 60's, the attitude was "to do it on my own." The students were interested in peace and saving the environment. Nowadays, the students are more interested in business and making money.

Carl Butterfield has been at Harper since 1970. He is the supervisor of the Utility and Maintenance departments. Originally, he was an operator in the boiler room.

Butterfield noted that the students of today are much more serious about education than in past years. The biggest change has been in technology. In the past, repairs were simple. But today more specialized equipment is needed to make repairs or improvements.

Butterfield said, "It has been nice to see Harper grow and become a bigger institution."

Robert Thieda, a reference librarian, has been at Harper for 23 years. He was originally the head of print circulation. His mission was to organize the library.

Thieda noted many changes in the students. The use of resources has declined, as well as grammar and reading skills. The students' conduct has improved. They are not as unruly as they used to be.

Thieda said, "I am happy to see changes, but it is frustrating because the budget can't keep up with the electronic gadgetry of today."

"The students remain the most interesting aspect of the job!" exclaimed Thieda.

Memories

Then just as now, the student body was interested in more than just politics. The overindulgence of student smokers had reached such a climax that a total ban on smoking was seriously considered. Harper walls have heard students complain that staff members hog the best parking spots. This resulted in the formation of permanent staff parking lots. Then the students complained of receiving citations for illegal parking.

I wonder, What will the walls of Harper think of our class in years to come?

Marijuana Poll

The Harbinger Poll

☐ I believe Marijuana should be legalized.

☐ I believe Marijuana should remain illegal.

(Make your choice. Drop the ballot in the ballot box.)

This poll, the second in a series, appeared in the Harbinger's sixth issue. The poll results, published one week later, indicated 235 participants in favor and 373 opposed to the legalization of marijuana. The first Harbinger poll, concerning U.S. involvement in Viet Nam, found 70% of poll participants in favour of U.S. involvement. The results of the Harbinger's Viet Nam poll appeared in the Chicago Tribune as well as several suburban papers.

A Sweeney Medley

By Peder Sweeney

Having written for the Harbinger in '82, '86, '87 and '88, I thought I'd add '89 to the list by accepting an invitation to put something together for this twentieth anniversary issue. It's kind of a "Best Of" thing like TV shows do when the female leads are all knocked up or the entire writing staff is in de-tox.

I've learned a lot about writing and, more importantly, about the creative process in those seven years, and I think I am now in a position to share some hard-won insight with you, not just about writing or creativity, but also about their younger cousin--life. Here is my advice:

Get wasted and have lots of sex.

No, but seriously, get wasted and have lots of sex.

Don't seek knowledge, don't pursue holy enlightenment, don't try to be successful in your chosen field. Just get wasted and have lots of sex.

What are you gonna do? Take biology so you can work in a lab so you can make 25K a year so you can get married and have children who are gonna grow up and be just as boring as you are now? Think!

Get wasted and have lots of sex. Seriously, I'm not making this up. You're gonna be dead soon, ever think about that? And do you know what 9/8 out of 100 people say right before they die? That's right! "I wish I got wasted and had more sex."

Get wasted and have lots of sex.

Trust me on this one.

Best of Sweeney

It is from this stage of his life that we get our first glimpse of his budding literary greatness. Upon viewing the remains of the village drunk, who had stumbled in front of a speeding locomotive, young Peder is said to have quipped: "It must concern him greatly, not only that the train has thrashed him so soundly, but that, as a result, his brain now occupies a quarter mile of track." Peder was only four at the time, but already we see his emerging comma wizardry.

BEAVER: Gosh Mom, if Mr. Winky-Tink means my penis, and if scrub means masturbate, then I guess I do know what you mean. Now let me tell you what I mean. When I say shower, I mean masturbate. When I say change my socks, I mean masturbate. Brush my teeth, comb my hair, feed the turtle, make my bed, test the smoke alarms, do my homework. All these things mean Beaver wants to masturbate. I'm a little boy for God's sake! What do you think I'm gonna do in the shower? Cancer research? Of course I'm gonna masturbate. # Bickley's blast at 'binger launches career

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

For Chicago Sun-Times sports writer Dan Bickley, the opportunity of writing at the Harbinger was simply stated: "a blast."

Bickley remembers, "I was writing a column for a college paper. I wasn't getting any money for it. I wrote for the self-satisfaction that one gets when they see their name on top of a product that's been printed. It was the greatest."

"There was a great deal of artistic expression there (at the Harbinger). No outside forces came between you and your copy. You weren't being told what to do. It was having a chance to put Mike Royko, George Will (ABC News Commentator), and Bob Verdi (Chicago Tribune Sports Columnist) on the back page of the L.A. Times."

Bickley grew up in the southern suburb of Dolton, but moved north to Palatine prior to entering high school.

"My sister was having a tough time of it. My parents didn't want to have that happen to me, so they decided to move," Bickley recalled.

Upon graduation from Fremd in the spring of '82, Bickley decided to take his wagon down the street and to the right where he hitched it at the friendly confines of Harper. Here he decided to become a sportswriter.

"I had always done well on high school term papers and compositions, and I've always loved reading the sports section. My dad always wondered if I'd ever read anything besides it. I figured that it was a good outlet to combine the two," Bickley said.

After a two-year stint at Harper, Bickley was ready to enter the University Of California at Berkeley to major in journalism but a job offer at the Daily Herald kept him in the northwest suburbs.

"I applied for the job earlier and I completely forgot about it. Then, about two weeks before I was scheduled to leave, Bob Frisk, the assistant sports editor, interviewed me then offered me the job," Bickley explained.

At the Herald, Bickley worked mostly in the Sports Department covering high school sports and pro tennis. He also covered such things as neighborhood events, local politics, human interest, and feature stories.

Then Bickley got the biggest break of his career about three years ago. A friend of his, who worked at the Sun-Times, heard that his boss (Prep Editor Taylor Bell) had liked Bickley's writing.

This inspired Bickley to apply at the Sun-Times for a job covering high school sports. "I called over there and the rest is history," Bickley said.

Like any other journalist, Bickley has his share of memorable stories.

"I did a story on the closing of Hales Franciscan High School (in Chicago, earlier this year). The story received favorable reviews and now I understand the school won't be closing," Bickley said, "I choose not to think if my stories were responsible for the school staying open."

While he was at the Herald, Bickley recalled "I was covering a Pro-Triathlon in Chicago on a windy day, and the scaffold holding people at the finish line blew over. It was very chaotic."

Bickley advises people who have an interest in journalism, "if you're in it for the money, you're in the wrong business."

"There's a special thing about working on a newspaper. You put out a product like a business, but a great deal of artistic expression goes into it as well. It's your name that goes on top of it," Bickley explains.

Right now, Bickley likes where he is, but he always has his eyes open for something else."One never knows. In this business upward mobility is very slow. To move up in this business (and cover the college and pro beats), you may have to move to a smaller market. I don't want to be covering high school sports all my life."

Cultural events: the best of all worlds

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

Harper College's Student Activities department has sponsored many cultural and entertainment appearances in the past twenty years. Appearances can be broken up loosely into four main categories: music, lecture, comedy and drama.

Dramatic productions have mostly been Harper's own productions, but the past has seen appearances by the National Theatre of the Deaf as well as the National Shakespeare Company.

Harper has upheld an excellent reputation for comedy shows. Coming soon are Judy Tenuta and Emo Phillips for their second appearance. Also, performing in the past years have been Jay Leno, Steve Martin, Jim Belushi, Graham Chapman, Rich Hall, Second City, Yakov Smirnoff, Richard Lewis and more.

On the lecture front, Harper's lecture hall has housed some of the best. Dr. Mortimer Adler, R. Buckminster Fuller, Margaret Mead, Rod McKuen, Ralph Nader, General Westmoreland, even Gene Siskel and Roger Ebert have all graced the stage at Harper. Marlee Matlin, once a student at Harper, returned for a lecture after winning the Academy Award for Best Actress in 1986-7.

Musically, the Program Board has brought some of the big underground names to the stage as well as some phenomenally popular mainstream acts. Rock acts including: Journey, The Fabulous Thunderbirds, the Rainmakers, the Psychedelic Furs, Jason and the Scorchers, the Violent Femmes, Heart, the Insiders, Richard Marx, and Joan Jett and the Blackhearts have mingled with famous jazz artists such as Pat Metheny, Wynton Marsalis and Lyle Mays.

Blues greats Muddy Waters and Willie Dixon have performed here, along with Jim Croce, Steve Goodman, Harry Chapin, Steve Morse, local talent Nicholas Tremulis, country-rock star Steve Earle, former Styx member Tommy Shaw, drummer Buddy Rich, and even the Chicago Symphony Chamber Orchestra.

Student Activities Coordinator Michael Nejman recalls one of the more memorable performances. "For the Psychedelic Furs in 1983 the Public Safety department was waging an ongoing battle with the band. The band wanted beer for their show, and the campus policy is no alcohol. The roadies kept bringing beer backstage and Public Safety kept taking the booties and breaking them out back. Then the roadies would go out and get more."

Nejman also recalls how Harper's longest-standing attendance record was set. "Muddy Waters was playing, and somehow a rumor had started that the Rolling Stones might show up. They had played in St. Louis the night before and had this particular evening free. Of course they never showed up, but the attendance was over 1800. That record stayed for a long time."

The attendance record broke during a lecture by the famous talk-show hostess, Oprah Winfrey.

Future plans call for an International Week during the upcoming fall semester. "We will focus on one country per day," says Nejman. "We've booked the Golden Dragon Acrobats from Taiwan, which is nothing like we have ever had before. It promises to be pretty exciting."

Considering Harper's excellent reputation for cultural and entertainment events, the next twenty years should be exciting as the first two decades.

$CHOLAR$HIP$

There are many scholarships offered to Harper College students. For more information or scholarship applications stop by the Financial Aid Office in A 364.

The Auxiliary of Good Shepherd Hospital is offering $1000 and $1500 scholarships for students residing in the hospital area pursuing a health-related field. The number of scholarships will depend on the number and qualifications of the applicants; however, at least four will be given. The deadline for application is April 29.

The Veterans Administration announced that $8 million is available in scholarships to nursing and physical therapy students for the 1989-90 school year. Recipients will receive tuition, educational expenses and a monthly stipend of $621. In exchange, participants agree to serve as a full-time registered nurse or physical therapist in a VA medical center for a period of one year for each year of scholarship support. May 29, 1989 is the deadline for application.

The International Association of Hospitality Accountants offers four scholarships each year: the Charles FitzSimmons Award, $1,500; the Frances Talley Award, $1000; and two additional scholarships of $1,000 each. The applicant must be majoring in the field of Hospitality Management or Accounting at an accredited institution of higher education. The deadline for application is May 15, 1989.

Track & field place high at Chicago Metro Open

Men's & women's results

By Peter Soby
Sports Editor

The Harper Men's and Women's Track & Field teams competed in their first meets of the year the past two weeks.

At the Chicago Metro Open in Naperville last Saturday the Men's team placed 4th and the Women's team placed 6th in a 15-team field consisting mostly of NCAA Division II and III schools. And this past weekend at the Eastern Illinois Coors Silver Bullet Open in Charleston, both teams were able to set personal bests despite placing low.

At the Chicago Metro Open first-place finishers for the men were Brian Pavlack in the discus (142'1") and Frank Barath in the Triple Jump (44'5"). Barath also took second in the Long Jump (22' 3/4").

Pat Ludvigsen and Jerome Taylor also produced some highlights as Ludvigsen took third in the Hammer Throw (124'), and Taylor brought home a pair of top finishes with third in the 100m (11.50) and fourth in the 200m (22.90).

For the women, several had big days as they placed more than once.

Nikki Hollinsworth took first in the 400m hurdles (69.5). She was one of four Harper women to place in the top seven of the Heptathlon with a second place finish (3,910 pts.). Hollinsworth was also a member of the third place 400m relay team (51.06) along with Carla Munger, Michelle Maxwell, and Anne Thayer.

Maxwell also placed in the Heptathlon by taking fourth (3,285 pts.). She also placed second in the High Jump by clearing 1.57 meters. Thayer also placed by taking sixth in the 200m at a time of 28.3 seconds.

Pam Weider raced to a pair of fourth-place finishes in 1500m (5:02.84) and the 800m (2:33). Lori Wilkens took fourth in the 200m (28.2) and sixth in the High Jump.

Also placing for the women were Dana Peterson with a sixth-place finish in the Heptathlon (2,468 pts.); Stephanie Gorecki (seventh in the Heptathlon with 2,448 pts., and Pascale O'Donoghue, fourth in the 400m (70.86).

They can feel good about themselves, they ran a great meet," said women's head coach Renee Zellner.

At the Coors Silver Bullet Open, both teams faced their most formidable opponents yet in NCAA Division I competition.

Both teams return to competition this weekend against NCAA Division II and III teams at the Lewis University Relays in Romeoville.

Tennis team unable to win conference play

The men's tennis team continues to play hard-nosed, competitive tennis, however, they have lost every conference meet by one point.

They were shut down 5-4 by Rock Valley on Tuesday and lost to DuPage by the same score on Thursday.

On Friday, the team traveled to Whitewater to take on the University of Wisconsin. Harper was not expected to win this event against the much larger college and in fact did not win overall.

Number one singles player Bill Adams and number three player Mark Bartleson were not intimidated by their beefed-up competition as they both shocked their Division II opponents and walked away victorious.

On Saturday, the team traveled to Kankakee to compete in a singles tournament against 10 other colleges. Eric Ford and Adams both advanced to the semi-finals while Mark Bartleson and Jay Orlick made it to the final round where they were eliminated by a tough Parkland College team.

This snapped Bartlesen's season-long undefeated streak.

"I think that some of our guys who had trouble winning from the start have broken the ice now and when it comes down to regionals in a couple of weeks, well, we just might win the big one," said Head Coach Roy Kearns.

Mark Bartleson received the "Player of the Week" award for consistent improvement in maintaining a winning record. He has won at the number three through six positions.

Errors plague softball

By Chris Boghossian
Staff Writer

The Harper softball team split its games last week, moving its conference record to 5-3 and 8-6 overall.

On Tuesday, April 11, the Lady Hawks swept South Suburban in a doubleheader, 16-3 and 20-3.

Michele Theriault and Barbera Barsell both pitched complete game victories.

"Everything really came together that day," said head coach Martha Bolt. "We had good pitching, good hitting, and our attitude was great. We were able to mix up the hitting and stealing really well."

The highlight of the week came on Thursday, when second year pitcher Theriault pitched the first shutout of the year in a victory over Rock Valley, 5-0.

In the second game, the Lady Hawks fell behind early, then stormed back, only to fall short 5-4.

"It was to late to pull it out," said Bolt. "Our attitude was off."

The loss followed the Hawks into Saturday's doubleheader against McHenry, where they fell 7-5 and 10-1.

Like Thursday, they fell behind big in the first game, 7-0, but came back with five runs.

"It was too little, too late. Our defense was disasterous. We made errors we never made before. The attitude just was not there," said Bolt.

After this week's play, Theriault's record stands at 5-2 and Barsell's at 3-4.

"The errors put a terrible burden on our pitchers. They work so hard. The team did not do the job defensively, and that cost us the games," commented Bolt.

The team is at its busiest point in the season, playing eight games in five days, and will try to get back on the winning track for sectionals on April 28 at Rockford.

"There is no doubt we are talented," said Bolt. "Our attitude is either way up or way down, and that is killing us.

"We are working hard as individuals and not as a team, and that makes it harder to win. We are going to have to pull it all together this week and turn it around for sectionals."

Olympic athlete speaks at Harper

World Class runner Jim Spivey spoke at Harper College last week as part of the Wellness week sponsored by Health Services. Spivey, a 1500m runner, is a world champion, won a bronze medel in the 1984 Olympics and missed the 1988 Olympics by one spot. He gave a speech full of helpful running tips, time management suggestions, running stories and inspiration to an audience primarily consisting of athletes and fitness enthusiasts. (Photo courtesy of Harper College)

Rose deserves Hall of Fame

By Kevin Oates
Staff Writer

Through the years baseball has had many heroes Hank Aaron, Babe Ruth, Ty Cobb, and Ernie Banks just to name a few. Oh yes, there is one more-Pete Rose.

Rose has been a hero for a good sixteen years, leading the Cincinnati Reds to two World Championships and four World Series appearances. He also led the Phillies to the World Championship.

Rose always gave 110% of himself to the game. Now he might have a problem with gambling. It's a disease, just like drugs, alcohol, and nowadays, sex. But baseball and all its experts just want to kick Rose out, get rid of him. No way is he going into the Hall of Fame, the experts say.

Why?? Babe Ruth ate too much and had VD, he shouldn't be in. Ty Cobb, a bastard, was hated by everyone in baseball, he shouldn't be in. Dwight Gooden, a great pitcher, played with cocaine, no way should he get in. Wade Boggs cheated on his wife, throw him out of baseball.

Doesn't this sound stupid? Pete Rose has a problem and no one wants to help. The media only wants to get rid of him. Baseball will help drug addicts and alcoholics, but it won't help Pete Rose. Rose belongs in the Hall of Fame regardless of what he did in his past on or off the field. Pete Rose is one of the greats of all time.

The Blackhawks won their first playoff series in the last four years by eliminating the Detroit Red Wings in six games.

The Hawks faced the St. Louis Blues Tuesday in the quarterfinals' opener, with a surprising first season win at St. Louis. The Hawks fell to them 4-1 in last year's playoff opener. It should be a great series. The Blues have beaten the Hawks all but two times this year.

The Cubs had a seven game winning streak going until they fell to Montreal 2-1 on Monday night and 11-2 on Tuesday. Right now, General Manager Jim Frey still looks like a genius.

Paul Kilgus and Mitch Williams have both been playing great so far for the Cubs. Williams already has six saves in six attempts, one on opening day against Philadelphia. Kilgus picked up his first victory of the year with an eight and one-third inning performance last Wednesday against the Cardinals.

Correction to last week's prediction: Robin Yount is still with the Brewers not the Kansas City Royals.

College reorganizes for the future

By Mona Isa
News Editor

A revised administrative organization will enhance the future of Harper according to President Paul Thompson. For the first time in Harper history, President Thompson and the three vice presidents have reviewed the organizational structure and determined that certain areas need to be more defined.

The areas are curriculum development; publication and printing management; marketing and outreach; instructional and classroom research; and grantsmanship, the art of obtaining grants.

"The reorganization process took about six months; we thought of ways to use the people most effectively," stated President Thompson.

A critical area that the reorganization is emphasizing is curriculum development. George Voegel who previously was the dean of educational services will take the responsibility and become dean for curriculum development.

"When thinking in terms of curriculum, we need to respond to global ideas and incorporate them in our classes such as history, literature and philosophy," President Thompson stated.

Thompson further emphasized meeting educational needs for all residents and the labor force. "We can offer a packaged program in which employees can earn one or two credit hours without taking a whole semester," he added.

With the ever-increasing need to get higher education, students are directly affected and require higher standards of classroom instruction.

"This trend is measuring student competencies rather than how many courses or what courses a student enrolls in," said Thompson. This area has been directed to Jack Lucas, director of planning and research.

Part of the reorganization, mainly due to growth, is the need for a smoother operation with the market in publications and printing. Bonnie Henry, vice president of student affairs will take on the additional duties in marketing and publications.

In addition, Joan Young, publications and communication director, will focus on campus services such as word processing, printing, graphics, mail room, photo lab and news letters.

The coordination with grants and grant writing has not been dealt with effectively in the past. Elaine Stoermer, director of college relations, will maintain previous responsibilities such as public and media relations but will add the grantsmanship area to her responsibilities.

"By having an individual knowledgeable about grants available through the federal government and private foundations, Harper can gain some resources," said President Thompson.

Another change in public affairs involves Stoermer and Executive Director of the Foundation Ray Devery. They will develop college outreach like alumni affairs.

"We hope to establish a cohesive network to reach out to students; past, present and future," added President Thompson.

Disabled Student Services (DSS) will fall under Student Affairs. Coordinator of DSS Tom Thompson, will advise Joan Kindle, dean of student development, on the change in progress.

"Even though the DSS can be looked on as an instructional service, it is as much, or more, related directly as a student service that Harper provides," President Thompson said.

Due to Joan Kindle's added responsibility, Health Service will be moved to student related programs. Jeanne Pankanin, director of student activities, will have the responsibility for Health Service.

Further structural changes were made in Academic Affairs. Al Dunikoski, dean of learning resources center and Larry Haffner, director of academic computing, will both report to Vice President of Academic Affairs David Williams.

Lee Vogel, director of learning assistance center, will report to Dean of Special Programs and Services Liz McKay. She will, in turn, report to Chuck Harrington, dean of instructions.

Some of the restructuring took effect on April 15; however, the academic affairs, including Al Dunikoski, Liz McKay, Lee Vogel, George Voegel, Jeanne Pankanin and Tom Thompson will not officially take effect until July 1st.

These changes will improve Harper's role for meeting the educational needs of a community college.

"For the future, this transition will give better opportunities for students and expand Harper's role in delivering instructional needs for all of its residents," added President Thompson.

President Thompson summed the reorganization by saying it will benefit both the college and students. "By looking at novelic ways of education, the students and community will have the choice for more flexibility."

Phi Theta Kappa initiates 106

(Photos By John Szlam)

President Paul Thompson and Faculty Advisor Dr. Larry Kent received 106 initiates last week as members of Harper's Phi Phi Chapter of Phi Theta Kappa (PTK), the national honor fraternity of two-year colleges.

Dr. Elizabeth Anne Hall, newly-appointed director of the honors program at Harper, offered reflections on the fraternity's national topic, leadership.

Distinguished Service Awards were presented to Dean of Liberal Arts Martin Ryan for creative support and to Director of Development and External Affairs Ray Devery for financial support.

The ceremony concluded with a presentation of the PTK transfer scholarship to Elizabeth Steffenson. Steffenson, an English major, will transfer to Northern Illinois University in the fall and hopes to pursue a career in library science.

College News Update

The Judy and Emo show, tomorrow in Building M, is expected to sell out. "This will probably be the biggest comedy show to come to Harper," Theatre Director Kevin Gieger said. So far the show has sold over 800 tickets, and Geiger anticipates selling 1500 more at the door. The show has averaged more than 35 ticket sales per day, tickets went on sale six weeks ago.

A contract for a new Cash Station is being negotiated by St. Paul Federal Bank and the college. St. Paul has installed Cash Stations at other schools in the area, including Oakton. The contract which originally had a few problems, is expected to pass soon, and installed this fall.

In the spring of '88, the First Chicago Bank of Mount Prospect removed a cash station that had been there for five-to six years, due to "insufficient amount of transactions."

Program Board, the arm of the Student Activities that determines campus entertainment, announced the appointment of new members for the 1989-90 school year.

Administrative Assistant Jean Tutt, Afternoon Activities Chairperson Bob Jozwiak and Concert Chairperson Dawn Highley are the new Program Board members. Returning members are Dean Morgan, Brad Underwood, and Albert Vazquez.

Two positions remain open. Interested persons should stop at the Program Board Office, A33, or call extension 2242.

The James J. McGrath Recognition will be presented to James Lancester at the Harper College Academic Convocation on May 9.

The award is the only convocation given to an individual who is not a student. This year's recipient, James Lancester, is president of NBD Illinois, which consists of 12 banks in the Chicago metropolitan area. With assets totalling $3.2 billion , making it the fifth largest banking organization in the state.

A psychological focus on exhibitionists

College psychologist offers insight and solutions

By Trudy Herbst
Managing Editor

Recent incidents of indecent exposure merit a closer look at this behavior disorder. An interview with Harper Psychologist Pierre Lacocque profiles a "typical" exhibitionist.

Could you describe the type of person known for this behavior?

Arrest records indicate exhibitionists are males and, typically, the behavior appears by 18 and diminishes by age 40. An individual often had a passive and insecure childhood, was very close to his mother and possibly dominated by his mother and/or father. As an adult, the patient is emotionally immature.

Who are the victims?

The victims are women and sometimes young children (both boys and especially girls).

Why would exhibitionists behave in this manner?

Because the typical exhibitionist is overly close to his mother, he begins to develop doubts about his masculinity. Exposing his genitals is a symbolic way of proving to himself that he is still a male. Impotence and inability to masturbate create a need to expose himself in order to feel erotic. Afraid of intimacy, the male hopes to prove his ability to arouse the opposite sex through deviate behavior.

Student Development Counselor Pierre Lacocque.

Exhibition re is also an unsophisticated method of getting attention. Trauma in childhood both at home in relations with parents or in school in relations with peers (for instance awkwardness or humiliation in athletics) can develop abnormal attention-getting behavior. Because of a lack of a sense of self worth, an exhibitionist cannot discern appropriate methods of achieving esteem.

Are exhibitionists violent?

The act is not an intension to rape. Although the act is a violent and intrusive confrontation, the behavior is rarely aggressive and therefore considered harmless. After exposure, the exhibitionist does not attempt further contact, and therefore "people with this disorder are usually not physically dangerous to victim."

Do married men exhibit this behavior?

Males may be able to control this behavior during marriage. Occasionally during his spouse's pregnancy regressive fantasies occur. A fear of the unborn child as a rival for attention from the wife may provoke a regression to indecent exposure.

Where do exhibitions occur?

Frequent locations are public places, such as schools and bus stops or unlighted areas. The somewhat predictable pattern appears to be a subconscious desire to be caught, and therefore helped.

Alleged Flasher, Steve D. Fam.

Can therapy help?

The typical exhibitionist displays a poor impulse control when it comes to his sexual behavior. It resembles an addiction (alcoholism, drug abuse or overeating) whereby the individual hopes to find some relief for what is bothering him. The problem is not sexual, but emotional. What needs to be worked on in therapy is the deep seated sense of inadequacy and inferiority especially toward the opposite sex.

Many, if not most, exhibitionists feel remorse following an indecent exposure. This is why psychotherapy is often helpful to control this deviant behavior pattern.

Unfortunately, some individuals do not experience remorse and are more difficult to treat. For such individuals behavior therapy and/or medication is sometimes successful.

What local agencies provide help?

Several local community mental health facilites provide help to individuals. Referrals can be made through Harper College Health Service, extension 2849. In Chicago, the Issaac Ray Center specializes in sexually deviant disorders; for help call 942-4462.

Young Corporate Achievers accept challenge

By William Sells
Staff Writer

The Young Corporate Achievers Club accepted the opportunity to run Formulator, a 30-year-old company. It was given to the Harper Foundation by the daughter of a past trustee, Lynne Coleman.

Coleman has close ties to Harper.

After they took control of the business this Wednesday, the club realized a goal they had since forming in 1987.

"We always wanted to operate a real company, but for some reason or another, we weren't able," said Edward Wallace, president and founding club member.

Club members and I will surely benefit by getting priceless experience from making top management decisions, by keeping the books, and assembling the products."

Formulator makes dental products and grosses $65,000 a year.

Formulator exclusively produces a device used for measuring occlusions, the way the upper and lower jaws fit together. The company founder has a patent for this.

The company will move from the Palatine location to a room in Building J, in the Business Social Services Department.

Besides use of the room, Harper will also lend money for the club for the purchase of a computer.

"We will pay the phone bills which I imagine will get quite high because the company has customers worldwide," said Wallace.

Dr. Jedlicka, faculty advisor for the club, suggests "after the company pays its expenses, the remaining money will probably go into a scholarship fund in the Formulator's name."

Jedlicka and Wallace will receive a salary while ten members will be paid an hourly wage of about seven to eight dollars.

Though they're not hiring at this time, the club will need people this fall.

"We're a very open club to be involved with, and would like to thank Lynne Coleman as we appreciate her granting the company to us very much," Wallace added.

Harper librarian reaches for the stars

By Alisa Chlalund
Features Editor

Go to the reference desk at the Harper College Library on a Monday or a Friday and you'll see Tracy Payne. She's the reference librarian, the information specialist, who helps students find the answers to all those important questions. But this is only part of Payne.

When Payne is off-duty, she slips into her actress persona. She may don a costume or adopt a distinctive character personality. It's all right. It's all part of her role. She performs using the skills of those destined for a career as an actress.

Payne began her acting career when she was two. "My mom and dad were both actors in summer stock theatre. My dad taught speech and English in Wheaton Central High School, and also directed the plays.

" My first stage performance was in The Curious Savage. I was excited to be in the play, even though I didn't have any speaking lines. From that moment on, my dad wrote me into every script even if there wasn't a kid's part. I usually had a walk-on role or was in a crowd scene."

Payne caught the acting bug at a very early age. "When I was in grade school my neighbors and I put on basement shows for my parents."

In junior high school, Payne discovered a new love – music. "I love to sing, so I joined the choir to develop my musical instrument, my voice."

She also performed in the local children's theatre which her mother ran when Payne was in high school.

She pursued her acting career when she attended Mankato State University, in Minnesota, with a second major in Business and a minor in Dance.

She starred in numerous college productions. One year, the cast of Mankato State's Shadow Box was selected to perform at the American College Theatre Festival. Payne won two young performer's awards, the Irene Ryan Midwest Regional Award and the American College Theatre Festival Special Award, for her role as Maggie.

Payne recalls her favorite theatre story, "I had the lead role (Winnifred) in the summer production of Once Upon A Mattress.

"During the first dress rehearsal I broke a bone in my foot. There wasn't enough time to get a replacement. I couldn't be on my feet until a day before the opening. I sang from the audience and walked around on special shoes. The headline from one of my reviews said, Star Limps But Show Must Go On."

After college, Payne worked in corporate libraries; first at Skidmore, Owings and Merrill, and then at the Gas Research Institute. She had not given up her dream of one day becoming an accomplished actress. But she needed to pay the rent while she auditioned.

Payne enjoyed working in a corporate library setting. The Gas Research Institute financed Payne's MBA and MA in Library Science. However, the stage still called, so in January, 1988, she left her full-time job to work part-time at Harper and actively pursue an acting career.

Payne began taking classes ranging from how to audition to how to deliver a monologue. "I prepare for my roles by creating a life for them. I write out a biography and may discuss it with the director. Most of the time I can get a feel for the character in the script."

Payne's favorite role was Roxie Hart in Chicago. She was like most women in the 20's and 30's who murdered their husbands, lovers, or boyfriends; they became famous.

Roxie Hart was a real person. She killed her lover and tried to get her husband to confess. She was street smart. The musical was a period piece which showed the publicity, trial and her prison term. Payne felt she really got to know Hart's character, and understood a little about why she killed her lover.

She also took dance and voice lessons. "I'm a belter like Ethel Merman. I have two voices in one: a high blasting voice and a low almost speaking tone.

"I love performing in musicals. The level of concentration is lower in a musical than in a straight speaking play. Everything builds up to the song then breaks with a pause, and starts over again."

Last year, Payne starred in See How They Run at Oakton Community College, spent six months performing musical reviews at Pheasant Run in St Charles, and ended the year with the National Jewish Theatre as Martha Mills in I Can Get It For you Wholesale. She recently entertained audiences in Harper's production of Jacques Brel Is Alive And Well And Living In Paris.

Recently, Payne was approached by Chicago music producer Bobbe Benson to join a female trio. "The group has no name. We will be a comic musical trio. We'll probably go on gigs and perform at conventions. I'm really excited to be part of this group."

Payne would like to be

trained in as many specialties as possible. Eventually she would like to perform stand-up comedy, television and motion picture work, in addition to plays.

She hopes to take a stunt class in the near future "I'm very athletic and can see myself doing things the real actor doesn't do, like fighting, jumping from buildings, and escaping from exploding cars."

"I'm really lucky to have a master's degree in Library Science," Payne said. "I don't have to wait tables. My goal is to make my living as an actress. Until that time, combining libraries and acting is a good solution. I'm very fortunate to work at Harper. I enjoy my job and have an opportunity to help people of all ages."

The tanker runneth over

One man's drink is the same man's spill

Let's practice basic math. Imagine, if you will, 10 million of anything. A lot, isn't it?

Imagine more than 300 gas stations; each is capable of supplying 3000 cars with gasoline for a week. Picture 15,000 backyard swimming pools. Now, turn the water black.

On March 24, the EXXON supertanker, Valdez, dumped more than 10 million gallons of crude oil into the Alaskan coastline. The ships captain, Joseph Hazelwood, had the equivalent of 10 shots of liquor when he was driving the ship through the 10-mile wide gulf toward California. He was responsible for the incident. He was drunk when he ran the tanker into a reef, ripping a hole 6 by 20 feet in its hull.

"Your children could drive a tanker," said Coast Guard Commandant Paul Yost.

Hazelwood faces more than two years in jail on three charges: operating a vessel while intoxicated, reckless endangerment, and negligent discharge of oil. Hazelwood is free on $25,000 bond. These are misdemeanor charges, in other words, "a slap on the wrist." One man responsible for the US's worst oil spill, and we will all pay for it.

Gas prices have shot up nearly 20 cents per gallon in the past month. It is expected to increase another 20 cents within the next six weeks. This will bring the average price of unleaded gasoline to $1.37 per gallon.

The Valdez disaster is responsible for the recent gas increases. However we are not the only ones who will pay for it.

The Alaskan coastline might recover in 30 years.

EXXON's slow response will severely affect the coast. Nearly all the oil was discharged within the first twelve hours. Currently the slick has spread over more than 3,000 square miles of water, and is washing up on shores. During the first weekend after the disaster (March 26), EXXON dispersed hundreds of experts, pumps, and oil burning equipment to the site. Much of the equipment sent couldn't be used. It was too late; the oil had emulsified with the water, making it impossible to burn. If EXXON wanted to use chemicals, they would have to spread them within 24 hours; they didn't. Only time will tell the overall impact of the disaster.

The spill will kill more than 500,000 birds, animals, seals, and thousands of acres of plant life along the shores. There are three vital salmon hatcheries in Alaska. In June, between 50-60 million salmon will return there for spawning, only to be greeted by oil sludge, (Science magazine, April 7, 1989)

Deaths will be as high as 500 million after hatching, resulting in a sharp increase in salmon prices. More than 30% of the U.S.'s salmon is spawn there. It could be more than 10 years before the hatcheries are fully recovered. Overall, fishing industries in Alaska will loose much of its profit for years to come. However little can be done, attempts are being made.

Rescue centers to save the wildlife are being established in Prince William Sound, located a few miles from the site. Volunteers will clean oil off the many animals and birds that either wash up on shore, or are picked up. This will have little effect on the overall devastation to the land and sea.

All this took was one man, drunk behind the wheel. Whether you drive a car, train, fly a plane, or drive a supertanker, drinking and driving don't mix, PERIOD.

Marc J. Balke

The Political Perspective

My Prediction

By Mike Watson
Staff Columnist

It seems that all of us are looking for a way to make it in America today and I would like to explore one of the more interesting and successful options.

Step one: Get appointed or elected to a high ranking governmental position.

Step two: Abuse your power and cause a scandal that will receive nationwide media coverage.

Step three: Get put on trial and hope the judge sentences you to probation. (Note: this step is usually not a problem for an Ivy League lawyer to handle.)

Step four: (This is the money-making step. Write a book telling your story for which you should get handsome royalties. Proceed to sell the movie rights for a cool million. It is necessary to appear on talk shows promoting your book and movie.

Step five: While negotiating these deals, go on a speaking tour and collect $50,000 per speech from corporate admirers.

It's all very simple and you only have to break a few laws and violate the public trust. Not bad!

And in the weeks ahead, we can watch a new participant in this 'get rich' scam, Oliver North, who is accused of lying to Congress, tax fraud, and a few other felonies.

My prediction: He will come out a real winner.

How about a solution? Instead of probation or some other slap on the wrist, why doesn't the judge sentence these scam artists to forfeit the 'fruits' of their illegal labors and use the money to pay off the national debt. After all, money made from crime should be confiscated and these types of earnings are certainly monetary exploitation of their crimes.

My second prediction: It'll never happen.

Harbinger Poll

☐ I believe abortion should remain legal.

☐ I believe abortion should be illegalized.

Make your choice and deposit in any SCIQ box. They are located in Buildings A, J and F. Thankyou.

Abortion poll

During the late 1960's, the Harbinger published polls on issues such as Viet Nam and the legalization of marijuana.

The Harbinger poll is back. Abortion, this week's topic, was legalized by the Supreme Court in the late '60s. Currently, the court is reconsidering its legality.

Tell us your opinion by filling out the poll and returning it to any of the three SCIQ boxes in Buildings A, J and F. The results will appear in the May 11 Harbinger.

Entertainment Editor

"He was a complete gentleman, concerned only with my well being." Susan informed her anxious friend Jennifer. "I was scared to death of him because I didn't really know him, but he turned out to be the guy that every girl dreams of."

Girls, this may sound like some of the romance novels you read and enjoyed in high school. This isn't necessarily bad, it just makes a tough act for all of us guys to follow. If this kind of reading gave you a great feeling inside, have I got a movie for you.

Guys, maybe all of us could learn a little something from... Say Anything.

Lloyd Dobler is a young man who knows what he wants out of life. Diane Court is a young woman, and what Lloyd wants. Unfortunately for Lloyd, she is the school valedictorian. If this wasn't enough, she is also one of the most attractive. "A complete brain, in the body of a game show hostess."

Lloyd finally gets the infamous first date with Diane. Despite what you may believe,

Diane's (Ione Skye) first date with Lloyd everything goes fine. Lloyd is a perfect gentleman, including an updated version of Sir Walter Raleigh. Lloyd and Diane agree to see each other more, and the romance builds.

Lloyd and Diane enjoy each other's company

Bad luck befalls our romantic couple when Diane runs into some family problems. (Her father has been caught by the IRS for embezzling funds from the tenants of his business, an old folks home.) So Diane breaks things off with Lloyd.

Lloyd is devastated and tries everything to get Diane back, but she ignores his attempts. Lloyd finally gives up and Diane comes to him saying that she needs him, and she also comes clean about her father.

Lloyd, because his deep-seeded feelings for Diane, accepts her return, and they confront life together.

Now for the commendations. Although Lloyd is not unlike any of the other characters John Cusak has played in the past, this is most definitely one of his best performances. Cusak, however, was against taking the role. "I don't want to graduate high school again. . ." Cusak told his agent when confronted with the part.

Lloyd is both caring and polite with the girl he is in love with. All of these traits are presented with the mastery of a romance veteran, and should be applauded.

Ione Skye attacks the part of Diane with much the same passion. She plays a girl that couldn't help but fall in love with the compassionate character of Lloyd. Just watching the two of them, made people realize how much they loved each other.

That's all I want to mention in the actors category, so I will move on to screenwriting and

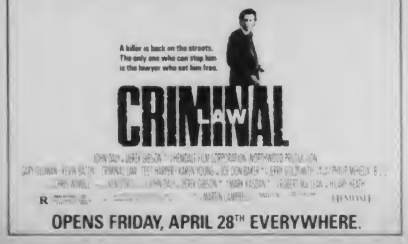

Lloyd (John Cusak) tries to win back the heart of Diane directing. Fortunately, for the sake of being concise, both of these positions are held by one person, Cameron Crowe. Crowe displays a knowledge of young romance unsurpassed by any recent writers or directors that I have seen.

Needless to say, I highly recommend this film for anyone seeking the perfect relationship, even if you think you've already achieved one. We all could learn a lot form Diane and Lloyd, so don't waste the chance.

The "love goddess" speaks

By Tari Vaughn
Staff Writer

"I started in comedy when I was two months old and Mom put a gun to my head and told me to go to work" said Judy Tenuta in a recent interview.

The self-proclaimed love-goddess is scheduled to appear with Emo Philips at Harper on April 28 at 8 p.m. in M Building.

Tenuta revealed that she was born on Mt. Olympus, with the rest of the gods, and shortly thereafter moved to Oak Park. She attended high school at St. Obnoxious in Bondage, an all-girls punk school.

After graduating, she says she worked as a glass blower and a wombat groomer, until she got the sign to begin preaching her gospel.

Tenuta had many influences as she was growing up. She claims her major influences were, "Of course Zeus, Immelda Marcos has always been funny to me, and Bart Convey."

Tenuta explains just how the "Judyism" movement began. "I was sitting in a flower garden, and Elvis came to me. He told me I had to start preaching my religion." When asked how many converts she had to "Judyism", her response was, "At least as many as would attend a Butthole Surfer concert."

Tenuta is also well-known for the a condom she uses in her act. She said that she began playing the instrument as a fetus. "Well, actually it was my mother's IUD. I just popped out playing it."

She knew she had to put it into her act about 12 years ago. She discovered this because of an automobile accident. Tenuta, her brother Bosco, (who has six interchangeable heads), and her mother were in a car when the gates came down at a train crossing.

Her mother thought that she could beat the train, but she didn't make it. Fortunately, nobody was hurt. When the smoke cleared, the car was in the shape of an accordion. Tenuta commented, "Elvis was in the clouds that day, it was a sign that I had to use it to preach my gospel."

Seen recently on commercials for Dr. Pepper, Tenuta commented that she not only drinks the product but, "I use it to baptize my love pigs."

She denies any allegations that her act is a character, "This is not a characterization. I am a goddess, and everyone else is a mortal fool."

When asked about advice for aspiring love-goddesses, Tenuta's comments were, "Stay off my planet."

Tickets are still available for the performance on April 28. Tickets purchased in advance are $10 for Harper students, and $13 for the public. At the door, tickets are $12 and $15. For tickets or more information, contact the Harper Box Office at 397-3000, extension 2547.

A word with Emo Philips

By Scott Neidi
Entertainment Editor

I was sitting in the Harbinger office Thursday morning just minding my own business when the phone rang. Tari got up to answer the call. "Good morning. . . Harbinger." The response, "Connecting..."

After this she tried again, "Good morning. . . Harbinger." The response, "Hi, is Scott Nygell there?" Tari responded by calling me over to the phone and I said, "Hello?" Then came the return, "Hi Scott, this is Emo."

Here I was talking to the E.T. of Comedy himself, Emo Philips. I guess I'll ask the man (and I use that word loosely) a few questions.

The interview then went something like this...

Harbinger: Emo, I've got a few questions I'd like to ask you.

Emo: Okay, but first I have a list of suggested reading before people see the show: Ulysses, The Book of Job (King James Version), for Judy's act, The National Inquirer, for Judy's act, and I Saved Mussolini's Brain, and that one's for me. Well, it's been great talkin' to ya.

H: Wait, wait I still would like to ask you a few questions.

Emo: Oh, okay go ahead.

H: So Emo, how did you get your start in comedy?

Emo: Wait. You're not going to ask me stupid questions, are you?

H: I had planned on it. It may be interesting to the reader.

Emo: Haven't you got any original questions you could ask me? Didn't you get my press kit? All the answers to stupid questions are in the press kit!

H: Press kit?

Emo: Do you know what a press kit is?

H: Yes, but I haven't seen yours.

Emo: Can we try some originality?

H: Why don't we just stick to the standards for the readers sakes.

Emo: Wouldn't you want to kill people who always asked you the same questions day in and day out?

H: I tell you what Emo, after the show I will come backstage and you can kill me if you want to.

Emo: I'm sorry, I didn't mean to blow up at you like that I shouldn't have yelled.

H: Okay, now I will start asking. How did you get your start in comedy, for the reader?

Emo: I was part of a witness protection placement program. It was either do comedy or become a gas station attendant. I figured the comedy would make me just another face.

H: Where did you attend school?

Emo: I went to a military academy in Virginia, and then I studied at the Juliard School of Fine Arts with a major in Celtic Instruments ie, pan flute, bag pipes, and so on.

H: So far, so good. What was your original life-long goal?

Emo: Originally I wanted to become a lounge singer, but then all the comedy clubs started, and I ended up in comedy.

H: I understand you have a video tape out?

Emo: Yes, and if that person returns it some one else can borrow it.

H: Right. Would you recommend this video?

Emo: For what?

H: For viewing satisfaction?

Emo: Sure, it also can cure many gastric disorders.

H: We have a weekly column called "People in Your Neighborhood" where we ask questions to many different types of students. Just for fun, I'd like to ask you some of these questions.

Emo: Okay.

H: What is your favorite movie?

Emo: Fatal Attraction, because I was in a relationship like that. I can really relate to the part where the bunny gets boiled.

H: Who is your favorite celebrity?

Emo: Judy Tenuta. If she wasn't my favorite, I wouldn't be letting her open for me. She is a saucy little sexual pitbull.

H: What is the craziest thing you ever did?

Emo: I put my head through the T.V. set because I wanted to meet Bullwinkle. That was about two weeks ago.

H: Is there anything you would like to say to the readers?

Emo: Please come to the show. You know Scott, I was there at Harper last year. Last year!

H: Two years ago.

Emo: Two years ago? Well good, I've added a new joke since then.

H: Do you have any advice for people interested in becoming comedians?

Emo: If at first you don't succeed...try getting on the Pat Sajak Show.

H: How do you feel about being a comedian?

Emo: I love doing comedy. I figure if I can make one person laugh, I'm already doing better than thirtysomething.

H: Do you have any upcoming events we should watch for?

Emo: I'll be on Letterman on May 18, and I'm in a movie with Weird Al Yankovic called UHF.

H: Sounds good. One last question Emo, Is there anything you would like to add for the readers?

Emo: Can I add 6 and 15?

H: Sure.

Emo: 21.

Graduating From Harper?

Before you decide where you'll go for your bachelor's degree, we think you should read a little fiction:

Transfer Myth #1: You can't afford a private college.

Transfer Myth #2: Your credits won't transfer to a small college with high standards.

Transfer Myth #3: Liberal arts colleges don't offer the majors you want.

IN FACT, over 85% of Rockford College full-time students, including those transferring from community colleges, receive financial aid. The average financial aid award was $6,181 last year.

IN FACT, in many cases, 100% of a student's credits from junior college are accepted for transfer by Rockford College.

IN FACT, Rockford College offers over 36 majors from accounting to zoology.

3 Ice Cream Social featuring Dick Holliday and the Bamboo Gang. Bldg. A Lounge or Bldg. A Patio, 12 noon

Bamboo Gang at social

By Lari Vaughn
Upcoming Editor

Dick Holliday and the Bamboo Gang is slated to appear at the Ice Cream Social at on May 3. The Chicago-based group has been well-known on the bar scene for about three years, having played at places such as Biddy Mulligan's, Orphans, and the Cubby Bear among many others.

The group built their success without management or public relations, and now have a following among regular bargoers and a reputation for party music that has spread throughout the Chicago area.

Dick Holliday and the Bamboo Gang's music has been described as a mixture of reggae and party rock. The band consists of Brad Nye (Dick Holliday) on lead vocals, Grant Tye as lead guitarist, Klem on bass, Lenny Pinkus on keyboards, and Rich Reed on drums.

Dick Holliday & the Bamboo Gang

The Ice Cream Social will be next Wednesday, May 3 at 12 noon in the Building A Lounge. If weather permits, it will be moved outdoors to the patio area of Building A.

Harper plans tours

May and June are perfect months to take advantage of two of the tours that Harper College has scheduled. Space is available and there is still time to register for these mini-getaways.

A trip to Davenport/Dixon is scheduled for May 28. Tuition is $8 plus a $45 fee. Give course number LCC069-001

The other trip, on June 10 and 11, is planned for Speedway City, Indianapolis, Indiana. Tuition is $8 plus a $118 fee based on double occupancy. The fee is $143 for single occupancy. Give course number LCC088-001

Registration and payment must be made by May 10. To register, call ext. 2410. For more information, call ext. 2591.

Harper Student Ambassadors

The Student Ambassador Club is having a reception/information meeting on Wednesday, May 10 at 9 a.m. and 1 p.m. in room A241a for all students interested in becoming Student Ambassadors. The Harper College Student Ambassadors are a group of students who serve the Harper community through a variety of volunteer activities.

Student Ambassadors are involved as orientation leaders, campus tour guides, representatives for high school visits, ushers for special events, and as speakers in panel discussion.

Harper students who serve as Student Ambassadors develop skills in leadership, marketing and communication through involvement in programs coordinated by the Admissions Office and the Center for New Students.

Participation in the Student Ambassador Club adds another dimension to job resumes and applications to other colleges. An added benefit to the students are the friendships formed as a result of their involvement in the club.

Students who are interested in the Student Ambassador Club should be able to volunteer about one hour per week to selected activities.

To learn more about the Student Ambassador Club or to obtain an application, contact Bev Hoffman or Lisa Vargas in the Admissions/Outreach Office, room C101, or call extension 2247.

A Sweeney Medley

By Peder Sweeney

Having written for the Harbinger in '82, '86, '87 and '88, I thought I'd add '89 to the list by accepting an invitation to put something together for this twentieth anniversary issue. It's kind of a "Best Of" thing like TV shows do when the female leads are all knocked up or the entire writing staff is in de-tox.

I've learned a lot about writing and, more importantly, about the creative process in those seven years, and I think I am now in a position to share some hard-won insight with you, not just about writing or creativity, but also about their younger cousin--life. Here is my advice:

Get wasted and have lots of sex.

No, but seriously, get wasted and have lots of sex.

Don't seek knowledge, don't pursue holy enlightenment, don't try to achieve community standing, don't try to be successful in your chosen field. Just get wasted and have lots of sex.

What are you gonna do? Take biology so you can work in a lab so you can make 25K a year so you can get married and have children who are gonna grow up and be just as boring as you are now? Think!

Get wasted and have lots of sex. Seriously, I'm not making this up. You're gonna be dead soon, ever think about that? And do you know what 98 out of 100 people say right before they die? That's right! "I wish I got wasted and had more sex."

Get wasted and have lots of sex.

Trust me on this one.

Best of Sweeney

Finally, Tom withdrew his glazed digits from his ravaged nose holes and Bill was able to look away and take a breath. When he looked back, Tom was at it again with renewed vigor, his fingers jutting and plunging higher and deeper in a grotesque dance of proboscal intercourse. Bill watched in rapt fascination as Tom slipped a second finger into his bloated nostril... and then a third! Tom's nose bulged and stretched obscenely with its full compliment of fleshy augers and caused Bill to imagine a hand groping for a pea in a condom full of marbles.

"May I help you sir?" asked Bill the salesperson.

"Well, yes," replied Joe, "you see, my wife has been calling me a scrotumhead for the past forty years and..."

"If I may say so sir, your head does not look especially scrotum-like."

"Yes," said Joe, "that's rather how I see it too. That's why I'm here, I'd like my head to look more like a scrotum. As much like a scrotum as possible."

"Very good sir," said Bill and he led Joe to the Scrotum Headwear department where Joe found thousands upon thousands of scrotum headpieces to choose from.

Joe was in scrotum heaven.

Building M: Then and now

By Cindy Syson
and Karen Theesfield

When Harper College was nothing more than partial buildings in 1970, there was a need for an athletic building on campus. An old barn that used to be used for horse training was remodeled into the first athletic building. This was the beginning of what we now know as M Building, a much more sophisticated arrangement.

The large barn served as a temporary physical education building, however, it was limited to its uses. The barn was not big enough for basketball games. It was mainly used for weight lifting.

In 1973, the stable turned gym burned down. For the next few years, the athletic program moved to V Building. The building offered more office space and an activity room for weights and exercise activity. This building was inadequate for basketball games. Games were played at various high schools such as Forest View and St. Viator. In one season, Harper played thirteen different home games at eleven different schools. After that season, home games were mostly played at St. Viator.

In 1975, advisors went to the community to seek funds for a new physical education building. Their efforts were successful and by 1979, Building M was constructed.

Employees were able to move into their offices by October even though the swimming pool and the racketball courts still had some flaws. The swimming pool not only had a leak, but it was built too small. A moveable platform was constructed to allow both meter and yard laps. An almost permanent decision to make the laps in meters could have been a mistake, because in Building M's lifetime, meter laps have been used once or twice.

"Once we got the facility, it was more attractive, numbers (of athletic students) increased, and we were able to be more competitive," said John Gelch, dean of physical education, athletics, and recreation. Building M isn't perfect, however. Some future improvements may include converting some racketball courts because of the decrease in popularity. One has already been turned into a power lifting room. Another might be turned into a dance studio.

The mat room also needs improvement. It was originally designed to be the gymnastic room, but gymnastics wasn't popular. The mat room's ceiling will be lowered and air conditioning will be installed.

Building M has so many more advantages than the barn or Building V. We now have basketball games at Harper, competitive and just for fun; indoor tennis, volleyball, badminton,indoor golf practice, indoor jogging, wrestling, self defense, judo, karate, dance, and racketball courts. Building M also provides rehabilitation for students and community suffering from heart disease, restricted activities for the handicapped, and the all new Human Performance Lab.

Building M will keep changing with the times, but what about the students? Geleh said, "In the past, students were more interested in the team sport, but now everyone is 'doing their own thing'."

Building M, today, is very different from its humble beggining, however, it remains the heart of Harper's athletic program.

Momentum high for track & field

By Peter Soby
Sports Editor

Last weekend at the Lewis Relays the men's and women's track and field teams did and outstanding job. Both teams are pacing themselves to qualify for nationals.

Sophomore, Marc Rader said, "We are all pushing each other so at least some members of the team make it to nationals."

The men's track and field team featured many highlights at the relay. First place finishes went to Brian Pawlak at discus (141' 10") and Tom Irons in the 1500m (4:05.42).

Frank Barath captured a second place finish at the triple jump (39' 9") and third place in the long jump (21' 7"). Barath was also part of the 400m relay team (44.30) which also consisted of Marc Rader, T Taylor and Jerome Taylor.

Third place finishes also went to Rader at the javelin (166' 10") and Andy Lerman at the shot put (42' 4").

Pat Ludvigsen finished fourth at the hammer throw (128' 6"), Jerome Taylor placed fourth in the 100m (11.20), and John Beatty finished fifth in the 1500m (4:45.04).

One of the highlights for the women's track and field team was a second place finish and team personal record for the 4x100m relay with a time of 50.46.

Nikki Hollinsworth also started a personal record with a second-place finish in the 400m hurdles (69.96).

Pam Wilder took third place in the 1500m (5:03.91). Dana Petersen placed seventh in the 400m hurdles (1:11) and Pascale O'Donoghue achieved a personal best at discus with a throw of 90'.

"We had a great meet. Everybody on the team did great. Not just one person; but everybody. A lot of personal records were set," said Nikki Hollinsworth.

Tennis team feels pressure

The men's tennis team continued to lose to conference opponents by one point all season long.

However, they did defeat South Suburban 8-1 Tuesday.

Eric Ford (6-0, 6-3), Bill Adams (6-4, 4-6, 7-6), John Pitchford (6-0, 6-1), Jay Orlick (6-0, 6-2) and Mark Bartleson (6-0, 6-1) all won their matches.

This Friday and Saturday, the team will compete for the conference championship at DuPage. With the recent loss of three team members, for various reasons, the team will be feeling some heavy heat this weekend.

Mark Bartleson, who was undefeated until last week, has recently gone into a tail spin, losing two of his last four matches.

"This team has the talent and ability to finish the season as strong as we did last year," said coach Roy Kearns.

"They know what they need to accomplish over the next week and I hope that they are mentally prepared for the challenge. The ball is in their court."

Hawks stay afloat

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

The past two weeks have had more than its share of thrills for the Harper baseball team. Perhaps the biggest highlight of the season came on Monday when a 5-3 win over Truman in game two gave Head Coach Dan Koss his 100 career victory at Harper.

"It's nice but it's really nothing," Koss said modestly.

Harper 8-6, St. Francis 6-4

It was Tony Vaca's day as he saved both games in a double-header sweep against the Saints (11-5). He also batted 3 for 5 including a two-run triple and a solo homer in game two.

Harper 1-2, Oakton 8-12

A strong pitching effort by Andy Fornuski went down the drain in game one as the Raiders broke away from a 1-1 tie with three runs in the top of the sixth and four in the top of the seventh as Vaca and Rod Sowizrol failed in relief to hold off Oakton.

Game two was a nightmare from the opening pitch as the Raiders exploded for five runs in the top of the first.

Harper 2-2, DuPage 3-12

Game one could have easily been called "The Great Homerun Robbery."

Trailing 3-2 in the top of the seventh, Tony Pignataro hit an apparent home run for a tie. Instead, the umpires ruled a ground rule double since the ball went under the centerfield fence. Despite heated protest from from Koss, Asst. Coach Mike Brake and the team, the call stood.

Still, the Hawks failed to move Pignataro as COD reliever Burgess Watts fanned Todd Lambel, John Burzawa and Vaca in succession to end the game.

The emotions of that home-run dispute took the Hawks out of the contest in game two as the Chapparals (15-12, 5-3) broke away from from a 2-2 tie with seven run spree to end it via the ten-run slaughter rule. Vaca and Brake were tossed out for arguing with the umpire.

Harper 8-9, Moraine Valley 5-8

Tim Longmore was the big man as he had a field day against Moraine Valley pitching, going 6-for-7 with 5 RBIs in the sweep of the Marauders (10-16, 3-7).

Harper 1-1, Elgin 0-0

The Hawks received a double forfeit win because of a shortage of players. "From what I understand, they're saving their players for (Skyway) conference (play)," Koss said.

Harper 8, DePaul 2

After spotting the Blue Demons (2-10) a 1-0 lead in the first, the Hawks got the help they needed with a two-run double from Longmore and a three-run second by Falcone's run-producing double.

Harper 3-3, South Suburban 4-3

The Hawks picked up momentum for game two on a two-run homer by Longmore in the top of the ninth with two outs that sent the Bulldogs running for cover before reliever Keith Walker got Tony Vivarito to popup for the last out.

In game two, Dave Miller's pitching kept SSC at bay as the left-hander went 6-1/3 innings, fanning five and leaving five on the basepaths.

Harper 12, DePaul 2

The Hawks put this one away in six innings via Brad Dalsroon's pitching and the slaughter rule.

Harper 2-5, Truman 9-3

It was the big inning that determined the winners of this doubleheader. A five-run sixth gave game one to Truman (13-15) while Harper used three in the first of game two to give Koss win number 100.

Harper 2-3, Triton 6-7

It was another case of the big innings as a three-run second in game one and a three-run fifth gave the Trojans (40-10, 13-1, ranked 13 in the nation) the sweep. Dave Szarzynski scored all of Harper's runs in game two.

Harper 1-1, Malcolm X 0-0

In lieu of a grade scandal at the Chicago school in which a large portion of the athletic faculty resigned including the baseball coach, Malcom X had to forfeit the rest of their games including yesterday's scheduled double-header with Harper.

The Hawks conclude the season hosting Morton Sunday at 11:00 A.M. and at Wright Monday at 1:30 P.M.

Ryther leaves Harper; M Bldg.

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

Physical Education, Athletics, and Recreation (PEAR) Facilities Manager Dennis Ryther has accepted the post of Manager of the new aquatic facility at Oklahoma City Community College (OCCC) in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

The facility at OCCC, nearing completion, will be one of the top three aquatic facilities in the country. It will also be the swimming venue site of this summer's Olympic Sports Festival.

"I'll be like a dean, because they're (OCCC) trying to start a sports program over there with this (the aquatic facility) as the beginning," Ryther said.

Ryther has been the facilities manager at Harper for the past three years. He succeeded in filling Harper's swim facility to 100 percent occupancy. This means that the pool is always being used in some capacity. Ryther accredits this to diverse and innovative scheduling.

Ryther said, "I'm gonna miss all the good times I've had here at PEAR. I'm leaving behind a lot of very good, close friends. I've had an exciting three years here."

There won't be rush to find a successor due to the number of events already planned for the future months.

"We have events going way into the summer, so that whoever is my successor can slowly work his way into the job," Ryther said.

Prior to coming to Harper, Ryther had been Athletic Director and Swimming Coach at Westview High School in Kankakee for nine years. During that time, his teams won one South Inter-Conference Association (SICA) South Division Title and never had a losing season.

Softball loses seven

By Chris Boghossian
Staff Writer

The women's softball team had a tough week, losing its last seven games and running it's record to 9-13 overall, 6-6 in the NAC.

Against Triton Wednesday, the Lady Hawks won the first game, 10-6, but lost the nightcap, 17-6.

On Thursday, Kishwaukee came to town and took two from Harper, shutting them out 7-0 in the first game and winning the second, 7-1.

At Kankakee Friday, Harper again lost two games by scores of 4-0 and 5-2. Kankakee is ranked thirteenth in the nation among junior colleges.

Back at home Saturday, DuPage also won two from the Lady Hawks, 8-5 and 7-3, running its losing streak to seven games.

During the streak, Harper went in a hitting drought, going 23 innings without scoring a run.

The Lady Hawks will try to turn things around in time for sectional play against Illinois Valley at Rock Valley on Friday.

Chicago sports rap

Blackhawks are on a roll

By Chris Boghossian
Staff Writer

I'll start off with Chicago's hottest team this week, the Blackhawks.

As of my deadline Tuesday night, the Hawks lead their best-of-seven play-off series with the St. Louis Blues, 3-1, heading into game five Wednesday night in St. Louis.

Who would have believed that a team who barely made it into the play-offs would beat Detroit, the division champs, and be one game shy of making it to the conference championship?

Well, even if the Hawks do beat the Blues, which I think they will do, they are going to have to pull off a miracle to beat Calgary, owners of the best record in hockey and winners of four straight over Wayne Gretzsky and the L.A. Kings.

Who knows, though? If Dennis Savard and goalie Ataan Chevrier continue on their hot streaks, the Hawks just might pull it off.

Turning to basketball, the Bulls start postseason action in Cleveland Friday in the best-of-five series.

The Bulls have lost eight of their last ten games and were winless against Cleveland in six games this season.

Cleveland is just too strong for the Bulls, and I say they will beat Michael Jordan and Company in four games. It might not even last that long.

In baseball, both the Cubs and the Sox are on slides, but what can we expect? More of the same.

At least the Cubs provided a little excitement, going on a seven game winning streak. Rick Sutcliffe is off to a fast start, compiling an impressive 4-0 record. Rookie Jerome Walton is also doing well and is among the lead leaders in runs scored.

The Sox, after a decent 5-4 start on the road, have since gone 2-7 in Comiskey Park. I think any team in the majors would do bad if they had to play in that poor excuse for a stadium, but having the White Sox there makes it twice as bad: a boring team in a dreary stadium.

It was time for the annual college draft in the NFL last Sunday, and the Bears took advantage of their two first round picks by choosing two defensive players--cornerback Donnell Woolford from Clemson and Trace Armstrong, a defensive end from Florida.

On draft day, rumor had it that Jim McMahon was being traded to San Diego for their number one pick, which was the eighth overall (three picks higher than the Bears' number eleven).

But as of Tuesday, Mad Mac was still in Chicago wondering if the $4 million he spent on his house last year was really worth it.

Math plus Art equals Fractals

By Mona Isa
News Editor

As part of the celebration of Mathematics Awareness Week, the math department invited students and residents to a one-day program on the computer art of fractals last Wednesday.

"Fractals is a form of art generated on the computer from a mathematical viewpoint," stated Dom Magno, mathematics and computer science professor.

A fractal is defined as an extremely irregular line or surface formed from different dimensions. It characterizes objects in various scales, large as well as small.

Besides being a form of computer art, there currently is research to determine the applications for this type of math.

"This program was more of a personal interest, allowing those to learn about a fractals and their applications," added Magno.

Included in the program, were exhibits of fractal art, a video on various fractal dimensions and a presentation given by Shirley Scheiner of Truman College in Chicago.

In addition, four art students from Harper demonstrated their work on Amiga's and IBM's.

"We were very pleased with the turnout. There were approximately 50 people who attended," said Magno.

Representatives from Fremd, Wheeling, Schamburg and Elk Grove also attended.

Since there was a great deal of interest, the math department is hoping to plan more programs in the future.

Currently, an on-going display of fractal art is in the upper level hall in the math section of building D.

The math department appreciates the cooperation of the art department, especially Ken Dahlberg, professor of art," stated Magno.

If anyone has any questions or an interest in fractals contact the mathematics division, extension 2374.

Golf goes for second chance

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

The Harper College Athletic Department announced Monday that it will bring back the sport of Golf for 1989-90 season and it will drop Cross Country due to lack of student interest.

"I'm very pleased to have Golf back in the Harper Intercollegiate Athletic Program. We have had success in the past and we hope to see the same success in the future," John Gelich, Dean of Physical Education, Athletics and Recreation (PEAR) said.

In addition, the naming of a new head coach for the Golf team was announced.

Former Harper star Jim Karras (1979-80), now general manager of the Poplar Creek Country Club in Hoffman Estates for over four years and a golf professional at the club for six, was hired Monday as the new Head Coach.

Athletic Director Roger Bechtold added to Gelich's thoughts, "We're very excited to have the Golf Program come back to Harper. We feel very pleased to have Jim Karras, a former Harper Golf player and student for a head golf coach. He is a golf professional and manager of the Poplar Creek Country Club. We're especially pleased to have him because of the ties he has to Harper."

Karras, 30, has built an impressive list of credentials in a short amount of time.

He was certified as a Class A-1 Head Professional by the Professional Golfers Association (PGA) last year.

He has actively participated in PGA events and tournaments since 1984, including the Florida Spacecoast Tournament in 1985.

Karras established a new course record at Poplar Creek, two years ago. He also won the Hillside Country Club Best Ball Tournament in 1981.

"I'm very happy. In fact, I'm elated to be getting a chance to come back and coach the team that I played on," Karras said.

He went on to say that "the area is so strong that we'll be

The Harper Board of Trustees presented an honorary award to former Student Trustee Laura Jacobson at last Thursday's board meeting. The board acknowledged her accomplishment as a student trustee and her involvement in school and community activities.

"This was totally unexpected; I was surprised," stated Jacobson.

Jacobson ended her term on April 14, her successor Darlene Ivarson was officially inducted to the board that evening. Ivarson hopes to set up a system in which she can get more student input on publicizing student events.

Professor publishes second book

By Phyllis Benson
Staff Writer

Associate Professor of English and Communications John L. Dodds published his second college English textbook "Roles for Writers and Readers," an anthology of essays used primarily by freshman English students, is being published by Macmillan.

"I wrote this book because, first of all, I wanted a text with reading and writing done the way I teach," explained Dodds. "Most of the others available didn't do that."

Dodds also said he wanted to express more ideas that came from the experience of his first book, "Writers and Performance," published in 1987.

Come home to Belize

By Trudy Herbst
Managing Editor

"Planes, Trains and Automobiles" worked for John Candy and Steve Martin, but modern transportation was not the normal mode for Associate Biology Professors Bill Andresen and Jack Gallagher during their recent trip to Belize, Latin America.

After normal flight to Belize City, the bio duo needed to take a small plane (which landed at a dirt airstrip), an hour bus ride and a ten minute boat ride to arrive at the Sittee River jungle location.

Don't take out an atlas or an encyclopedia and hope to find the Sittee River. You will find Belize, formerly the British Honduras, south of Mexico and east of Guatemala, but no atlas nor travel brochure can describe its unexposed beauty.

Gallagher and Andresen, two of sixteen community college teachers from across the United States, experienced the tropical ecosystem at the Possum Point Field Station. "Possum Point is the only true biological station designed solely for educational and research purposes," explains the information brochure.

A typical day would have the adventurers up at six and observing over 100 species of birds from their balcony before seven o'clock breakfast. A coral reef, jaguar preserve, rain forest, frigate bird island, milpa (a family farm) and a Mayan ruin were some of the daily excursions.

A visit to the thatch-roofed Hopkins featured a lecture and tour by the mayor about village life. One evening, a government-licensed snake doctor lectured on the curative power of plants used in salves or tea. How did a broken-toothed, uneducated native win the confidence of local authorities? Andresen explained, "The snake doctor earned his reputation with only one loss and one hundred snake bite cures during the past few years!"

The heat and density of the jungle did not dim Gallagher and Andresen's sense of humor. "Roads did not require speed limits," explained Gallagher. "No one could drive that fast anyway," quipped Andresen. Passengers were required to leave the bus in order to go up a hill which was mired in mud. Gallagher and Andresen laughed as they pushed, but not everyone thought this was humorous.

Many interesting species of birds, lizards, ants, snakes, beetles and iguanas were sighted, but Gallagher will always remember when he saw a margay on a morning walk. Margays are an endangered species and resemble a cat-sized leopard. The poisonous snakes were gladly unseen.

Over 100 feet high bamboo grew at a rate of one foot per day. Although bamboo is native, it is rare to be so tall in that climate.

Inland forests suffered at the hands of British corporations. The forestry resource is devastated; grassy areas have replaced them. Vast mangrove swamps dominate the coast and serve as a protection against all but the most severe hurricanes.

Impressed with the wildlife diversity and the untouched beauty of the coral reefs, Andresen praised Belize. "I've never seen anything like it!"

Gallagher described the accommodations, "The cottages are plain, but safe and comfortable ... their own way. Their organic design blends with nature. Bathrooms are outhouses, and river water is used for showers. Generators only run for two hours each night."

Any lack in accommodations is compensated by tasting the culture. Natives prepared indigenous food. Part of the beauty of Belize is its people and easy lifestyle.

Because of a shortage of work opportunities, many natives come to the United States. Marjorie Garbutt, a native, explained that Belizean life is reminiscent of generations past.

"Life is uncomplicated. Belizeans do not know the meaning of the word stress. Natives frequently visit and yearn to return home by retirement age." Garbutt reflected on the possible growth in tourism, "I realize the benefits of a tourism industry, but I am concerned about maintaining the quality of life."

"Travellers to Belize need to be adventurous and flexible," cautioned Gallagher. Andresen was quick to add, "One needs to be able to make-do in a 'fun sense'."

At this time most tourists are only interested in scuba diving. Gallagher and Andresen would like to change this, "The potential to increase knowledge and awareness of the environment, coral reefs, rain forestry and river ecology is something extraordinary." They are in the midst of exploring the possibility of an adult education trip during spring break 1990. Surprisingly, the ten-day trip would cost $1200 including air fare, meals and lodging.

The Belizean experience was more than just fond memories for this energetic twosome. Their new insights and enriched perspectives will be shared with future biology students.

Staff Writer

Political Science Club Faculty Advisor Molly Waite accompanied four students to Washington D.C. for the Home of the Presidency convention March 15 through 19.

Jim Nix, John Felt, Matt Lundeen, and Jim Cabaj attended several political lectures by noted authorities such as Helen Thomas, a U.P.I. correspondent, and David Eisenhower, a noted historian.

The Home of the Presidency is a prestigious organization seeking to inform and educate its members on current issues affecting American Government.

The lectures covered a broad range of topics including foreign policy, the election process, presidential powers, and the power of the press.

The conference allowed up to four students from each college to participate. Waite chose Harper's representatives based on essays explaining why the students wanted to go.

"I learned to see government in a new way," said Jim Cabaj. "Like a diamond, it has many sides."

While in our nations capital, the students had time to do some sight seeing. Senator Paul Simon was in Chicago, but his office gave them passes to watch the Senate, where they saw senator Robert Dole debating a bill.

Dealing with stress

Burnout occurs when pressures related to school, work and family lead to increased feelings of stress, and the ability to cope with everyday problems becomes increasingly difficult. Students are especially susceptible to stress at the end of a term and during final exams. During these peak stress times, it is necessary to identify and to evaluate those factors which cause the most stress and to apply management techniques to cope with increased tension and pressure.

People who are in control of their lives are less likely to become over stressed. Take charge of your life. If there are too many things to do, determine which tasks can be delegated or postponed and which ones can be eliminated. Break down complicated or difficult tasks into smaller parts, and approach each part individually. Small victories can be real morale boosters. Make an effort to communicate with instructors and/or supervisors. Establish mutual expectations and determine how goals can be met to everyone's satisfaction.

Sometimes an 'attitude adjustment' is in order to stop the vicious cycle of worry and tension. Replace a negative thought with a positive one. Is the glass half full or half empty?

Not every source of stress can be alleviated, however, it is possible to meet the challenge of stress management through positive habits including good nutrition, regular exercise and controlled relaxation and active interaction with supportive individuals such as friends and family.

Letters to the Editor

Kudos

In my fourteen years here I have never seen the Harbinger so well written and so well "set up". This is the most professional I've seen our paper, both in terms of the articles and the use of different types, headings, etc.

Congratulations!

Janet Friend-Westney

Sweeney Medley

In regards to the article "A Sweeney Medley", I am saddened to see this type of perverted attempt at humor in the Harbinger. The writer and editorial staff must have a pretty low opinion of its readers and Harper students, unless they're having difficulty filling in the pages. It would be better to have left them blank.

There is perverted thinking in the inside pages and perverted action of the front page: i.e., the second flasher. They support each other. First we read, then we do. The Bundy Case made that clear.

I wonder if Fantastic Sams, Tan Free and the Army Reserves are proud to be on the same page.

I always thought higher education was to raise individuals and society to a higher standard, that above the gutter.

You slandered Jesus. Well Jesus is long-suffering, merciful and just. We all must stand before Him one day.

Harper pride

Since most Harper students work full or part time while taking a full load of classes, it is not surprising that this year may not be quite what we had imagined as a typical year.

A survey written by a group of students evaluating the lack of Harper's school spirit, indicated that over a hundred of the students approached did not know Harper's school colors or mascot. For those of you reading this who are among that majority, our Harper HAWK proudly sports the colors maroon and gold.

Many of the students indicated on the survey that they have never attended Harper sporting events because they never know when or where they will be held. One obviously confused student (who was under the impression that "Fred Flintstone" was our mascot, and that our school colors were black and red) suggested to "...make announcements more noticeable, post them everywhere."

After reading the results of the survey, the group thought there must be a group of people in charge of publicity for the sporting events. After further investigation, they found that there was not.

One student suggested that Harper College should acquire a "...fight song, like the one at Notre Dame." Once again the group thought there must be a Harper song somewhere...nope!

With the number of talented students at Harper, a competition of some kind should be organized. The student body should vote on the best song and print it in the handbook.

The survey also revealed that a number of the students were unaware of Harper's homecoming court. Few students could explain the process by which the court is selected. A student commented "...let the students pick..."

Since the idea of the homecoming court is to select students who exemplify Harper school spirit and represent Harper College, I agree. Who better to ask than those represented?

After sufficient publicity, nominations would be taken and then voted on by the students, to narrow down the number of nominees. An evaluation of the amount of activities and involvement should be made in order to make a final decision.

Harper College is academically recognized as one of the best junior colleges in the nation. Unfortunately, the lack of respect for Harper is within our own walls. With more publicity of the upcoming events and past accomplishments, I believe that Harper will overflow with proud Harper Hawks and prospects for a higher enrollment.

Colleen Jennings

Give a hoot

About three weeks ago, I was walking down the hall on the third floor of F Building. I was shocked to see the break area such a mess. Cigarette butts were all over the floor. Pop cans were in the ashtrays, and paper debris was scattered on the tables and chairs.

How shameful that Harper students lack respect for their school! I thought how embarrassed I would be, if I were giving prospective students a tour.

It's time the students take pride in the appearance of Harper. A group formed to address this problem. Signs were posted, and more ashtrays and garbage cans were added to the break area.

We ask you to help us keep this campus clean. Put cigarettes out in ashtrays; place pop cans and trash in the garbage cans provided. If you see a fellow student littering, ask him to help, too. Thank you.

The Political Perspective

Where will the Supreme Court draw the line?

America is on the verge of taking a further step in her long history of judicial review. A handful of men and one woman, who are members of the Supreme Court, will decide if we step forward into the future or backward into the past. The recurring theme that has permeated our culture is the issue of a woman's right to an abortion during the first trimester of pregnancy.

On one side are those who espouse the notion that life begins at conception. Abortion is the same as the murder of a human being. The fight is to protect the "rights of the unborn."

On the other side are those who believe a woman has a right to decide what to do with her life and body. A woman's right as a human being supercedes any "alleged rights" of a potential human being.

As the Supreme Court determines the constitutionality of a Missouri law which bans abortions, it will decide whether women will once again be forced into alley "butcher clinics" or whether they can exercise individual rights to obtain a legal abortion.

The Supreme Court should uphold a woman's right to choice. During the first trimester of pregnancy, the embryo is an undifferentiated mass of protoplasm, entirely dependent on the mother's body for life. Can rights be ascribed to a fetus as a potential human being any more than to a sperm cell which carries the ability to produce a human life?

The concepts of this issue are actual versus potential. Until the potential human life, in the form of an embryo, develops into an actual human life, no rights can be given. The mother's rights are actual, not potential.

Hopefully, the Supreme Court will once again affirm the individual rights of women. If we allow the Supreme Court to outlaw abortions, will birth control be next? Do we allow the condemnation of an unwanted embryo to grow up as an unloved child who clings to an enslaved mother, or do we affirm the freedom of women in this country?

Judy and Emo leave 'em laughing

By Alisa Chmlund
Features Editor

The stage was set last Friday night at 8 p.m. for a two-and-a-half-hour comedy spectacular in Building M with America's "high priestess" Judy Tenuta and her "trainer" Emo Philips.

Tenuta opened the show to a packed audience. Fans came from miles to catch a glimpse of the "petite flower, giver goddess, fashion plate, sass."

Dressed in a diaphanous gold gown and toting an accordion, Tenuta took the stage. She spoke to her fans known as "stud-puppets" in her trademark voice "half Glinda the Good Witch on laughing gas, half Ethel Merman on steroids."

She recruited followers to her own brand of religion--Judyism. "In Judyism, I pray for special blessings--wealth, power, small animals, unlimited socks, and love-slaves ..." Anyone can become a Judy-zombie by worshipping the love goddess regardless of their religious teachings.

Tenuta recently became a spokesperson for Dr. Pepper. "I get to be me ...You can't get a body like mine into a bottle unless you push real hard."

She remarked that the Dr. Pepper people let her say anything she wanted except "power tool because it was too sexual. I can say chain saw and attract all the psychos in Texas, but I can't say power tool."

In one of her routines Tenuta claimed that males were sexists. "Men say women are at their loveliest when they're pregnant. Then how come when you go into the Bears' locker room, you don't see some poster of some nude babe in her third trimester?"

Act two, Emo Philips emerged on stage in typical dork attire--a red short shirt and matching jacket, orange plaid flood pants, and mismatched socks. He looked like an innocent young child with his doe-eyed expression and pageboy haircut. He performed his one-liners like a master.

Philips delivered his entire routine utilizing a voice similar to an adolescent whining through puberty.

"It's great to be back here at Harper & Row," said Philips. "I was at O'Hare Airport. And this fellow said, 'Would you like a Hare Krishna cookbook?' I said, 'Well, I've heard you guys taste like chicken.' He said, 'Before becoming a Hare Krishna, I was a drug-crazed zombie.' I responded, 'So I guess it was a lateral progression.'"

During the performance Philips shared his favorite childhood memory, "I put my head through the TV screen to meet Bullwinkle."

Philips suffered from asthma as a young child, and years later joked about it. "I had an asthmatic attack on the way over here. Three asthmatics jumped me. I know, I know I should have heard them hiding."

Toward the end of Philips' performance, Judy "that saucy little sexual pit bull" Tenuta, reappeared on stage. Together they closed the show. Philips stood next to Tenuta "away from her colostomy bag." Tenuta referred to Philips as her "personal trainer", "a half-bred", her "Prince Valiant", and a "pop-tart." Yet, in the end their admiration for each other showed through as they mentioned each other's respective comedy awards and nominations.

ELECTRIC PHASE

By Eric Jason

Guns 'N' Roses; Live ?!★Ø Like A Suicide

The story behind Guns 'N' Roses newest release Lies, is an interesting one. Contrary to popular belief, Appetite for Destruction was not their debut release. In 1986 they released a live EP entitled Live ?!★Ø Like A Suicide on a small independent record label called Uzi Suicide.

Because of the size of the aforementioned label, it didn't get much attention beyond the underground movement. Now that Guns 'N' Roses is on Geffen, they've rereleased Live ?!★Ø Like A Suicide with newer music on an EP entitled Lies.

The Guns side is the live material from 1986. Guns 'N' Roses live sound is captured really well, and hard rockin' tunes like Reckless Life and Nice Boys are played with a lot of energy. Both songs are very similar to some songs on Appetite for Destruction. You can tell Reckless Life and Nice Boys laid down the framework for the street-smart heavy metal that has made them famous.

Move to the City is the song that really stands out. It has an interesting mix of saxophone and powerful rhythm riffs by Slash. This blend of saxophone and guitar give Move to the City an old time rock n' roll feel that provides a great atmosphere for the song's story of life in the city. The side closes out with a cover version of Mama Kin. Its just a bit faster than Aerosmith's version, but it sounds just as good.

The Roses side is a collection of acoustic and semi-acoustic songs written in 1988. The first song, Patience, is an acoustic ballad that is really out of character for Guns 'N' Roses, but still has a great back-to-basics feel to it. It also gives Axl a great opportunity to really sing.

Used to Love Her is a comic song that offers the best solution for men dealing with girls who complain too much.

You're Crazy, from Appetite for Destruction, appears here as a slowed down version with acoustics and electrics mixed to give it more of a blues feel. The only flaw of this second version is Axl's singing. It's too intense for the pace of the song.

The final song One in a Million is heavily folk influenced. The sound is original, with Slash's rhythms giving a perfect blend to this hybrid song that's between hard rock and folk, however, the lyrics are confusing. They deal with racism, but it's hard to determine the point of view of the song, so the true meaning is obscured. Because of the racist overtones of One in a Million, there is a caption on the cover of Lies that apologizes to anyone it may offend.

Because of the Roses side, people might say Guns 'N' Roses have mellowed out. I think that the Roses side is proof that the critics were wrong. Those people who said Guns 'N' Roses were too loud and brainless, should know that they have a lot of originality behind them. I believe, if they keep blending different types of music to their hard rocking street-smart metal, they will be a major force in music for many years to come.

Fabulous T-Birds 'Tuff' again

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

To follow up their immensely popular Tuff Enuff LP of 1986, the Fabulous Thunderbirds chose to make the most abysmal album possible.

Their 1987 release Hot Number deserved every bad review it gathered. Barely-concealed retreads of the songs that brought them nationwide fame seriously impaired their popularity.

I began losing interest in this genre of music about two years ago, and Hot Number certainly didn't stir any new interest in me. All of this is different now, because the new release from the T-Birds is bordering on excellent. It has the variety and stylistic leap-frogs that made Tuff Enuff such a great record.

There are uninteresting and uninspired moments that bring the album down, but I've been telling people that the first two songs on Powerful Stuff are better than the entire previous album. Rock This Place and Knock Yourself Out are a great pair of songs to place back to back. This is because Knock Yourself Out is about as far away from the blues the T-Birds will get. Considering that their range of style is rather limited, this is saying a lot.

The third track is a good one too. After that, things calm down for a couple of songs. Track number six is the title track, originally from the Cocktail soundtrack. It remains one of the best songs the T-Birds have ever done.

The rest of the album is fair to good. She's Hot is a very typical T-Birds blues-rock song, understandably so, because it was written by lead singer Kim Wilson who ran out of original ideas several years ago. The last track, Runnin' in My Heart, is the only real slow song on the album, a doo-wop ballad that brings to mind every other doo-wop ballad that the T-Birds have ever done.

By reading the last three paragraphs you can see that the album declines as it progresses. This is unfortunately true, but it starts out so good that it remains a good album overall. The producer of this album is Terry Manning, and he does his usual great job of beefing up the sound.

The last T-Birds album was produced by veteran Dave Edmunds who was perhaps getting lazy. Another theory is that the band wanted to return to the low profile they had when they were signed to Chrysalis. Perhaps they deliberately produced an inferior album. Then again, I do have an overactive imagination.

Another point to raise is the songwriting. Most of the songs on Powerful Stuff were NOT written by the band members. Kim Wilson only wrote two of the ten tracks and contributed to one more.

Considering his limited songwriting ability, the less he writes the better. As long as he sticks to his pleasant vocals, stage presence, and excellent harmonica work, he needn't embarrass himself by writing the same song over and over with slightly different lyrics.

This album proves that it doesn't hurt to record songs written by other people. In fact, this album proves that it helps one band a lot . . . the Fabulous Thunderbirds.

Graduating From Harper?

Before you decide where you'll go for your bachelor's degree, we think you should read a little fiction.

Transfer Myth #1: You can't afford a private college.

Transfer Myth #2: Your credits won't transfer to a small college with high standards.

Transfer Myth #3: Liberal arts colleges don't offer the majors you want.

IN FACT, over 4,000 of Rockford College full-time students, including those transferring from community colleges, receive financial aid. The average financial aid award was $6,310 last year.

IN FACT, in many cases, 100% of a student's credits from junior college are accepted in transfer by Rockford College.

IN FACT, Rockford College offers over 46 majors from accounting to zoology.

Hawks need offense to contend

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

For the Hawks to win their second straight sectional crown E..t weekend, they'll need to find an answer to a sometimes sluggish offense that has continously bogged them in the mire all season.

"We should have won 25 games this season, it's just been that we haven't been able to hit those pitchers that are hittable," Third baseman Marty Cruzan said.

Harper (18-18) draws the No. 3 seed behind sectional host Lake County (28-12) and Skyway Conference Champion Oakton (28-7, ranked 13th in the nation) and will open up sectional play against the host Lancers tomorrow at 1:00 P.M.

Also competing in the tournament are Skyway conference members Elgin and McHenry.

The Hawks will be facing a Lancer team that has won IV of their last 22 games April 6th in which the two teams split a doubleheader. "They're playing tough," Cruzan said.

Still, the Hawks feel good about their chances.

"We're gonna be their stopping point," Pitcher Dave Miller declared.

Tennis takes last two; vie for region title

The men's tennis team was victorious in their final two regular season meets against Moraine Valley and Triton.

The winners for Harper versus Moraine Valley were Eric Ford, Bill Adams, Josha Pitchford and Mark Bartleson.

The winners for Harper versus Triton were Eric Ford, John Pitchford, Jay Olrick, Mark Bartleson and Brian Udany.

Last Friday, the team traveled to Glen Ellyn to compete for the conference championship. Bill Adams and Mark Bartleson advanced to the finals and were to play the following morning, but they were an hour late to the tennis club and their opponents were automatically declared the winners. Bartleson and Adams had to settle for second place.

The team will compete for the regional championship May 4, 5, & 6 in Rockford. They will be trying to qualify for national competition for the second year in a row.

able to get some good kids who normally wouldn't have a chance to play at a four-year school unless they received a scholarship. We have a great outlet with the (area) coaches, plus we can get good players from the Illinois Jr. Golf Association and from the (Poplar Creek Country) club, so we'll be able to start the program off with some great talent."

In addition to a lack of student interest, the decision to drop Cross Country coincided with the resignation of Head Coach Ron Theberge.

"We've been struggling for the past three or four years, and we'd been having diminishing numbers turnout," Golch said.

Anyone interested in joining the team can leave their name at the PEAR office in Building M or by calling the coach at Poplar Creek (884-0219).

Track teams bring home regional gold

By Peter Soby
Sports Editor

Entering the meet with the hopes of qualifying more members for nationals, both Men's and Women's Track and Field teams came out with first place finishes, garnering both Region IV championships.

Between both teams, three more members qualified for nationals held next week in Odessa, Texas.

In addition, Men's Coach John Johnson and Women's Coach Renee Zellner were named Region IV Track & Field Coaches of the Year, respectively.

For Zellner and the women's squad, it was the fourth straight year that they earned Region IV honors.

In getting their fourth consecutive Region IV crown, the women practically demolished their competition by taking 28 top three finishes including 12 first places.

Among the first place finishes were national qualifying performances by Nikki Hollinsworth in the 400 meter hurdles (69.3), qualifying for her second event in nationals; Pam Weider in the 1,500 meters (5:03.6), and Michelle Maxwell in the Heptathlon highlighted the day.

Other women who win titles Saturday were Karen Wilkepe in the Discus (25'8"), Shot Put (8.34) and Javelin (33.42), Lori Wilkens in the High Jump (4'8"), Hollinsworth also in the Long Jump (14'6") and 100 Meter Hurdles (15.0), Weider also in the 800 Meters (2:33), the 3,200-Meter Relay team (Irene Reichmuth, Vicky Gadiusky, Patty Canchola, and Weider), and the 4 x 400 Meter Relay Team (Weider, Hollinsworth, Wilkens, Pascale O'Donoghue, and Anne Thayer (4:27.64).

For the men, it was a close shave as they edged second place Wright by 1 point 183 to 182. "It was by the closest of margins," Head Coach John Johnson said.

One of the keys to the men's championship was the 18 top three placings including three firsts, and a second place national qualifying performance.

Pat Ludvigsen became the first man to qualify for nationals despite placing second in the meet at 14'8.6". Men's Champions were Andy Lerman in the Shot Put (42'11), Brian Pawlak in the Discus (138'8"), and Frank Barath in the 110 Meter High Hurdles (15.45).

Both teams look towards the "last chance meet" at North Central College in Naperville this weekend. It will be the last chance for individuals to qualify for nationals.

Harper invests in South African education

By Lisa Aust
Staff Writer

Placement Specialist Christopher Kranz will participate in a five week exchange program with South Africa. He will be part of a five person team sponsored by The Rotary Foundation, visiting South Africa from May 23 through June 30.

The Board of Trustees approved a short term leave of absence with pay for Kranz, who is a member of the Professional/Technical Staff.

Kranz will represent higher education with his study exchange group. His position and experience will make him unique because there isn't a junior college equivalent in South Africa.

To qualify, the applicant must be between 25 and 35, and reside within the Rotary district, but not be a member of the Rotary itself. The group is composed of four applicants and one Rotarian who acts as the leader.

The group will be hosted by a Rotary district in the Orange Free State and is expected to cover a large area, from Johannesburg to Port Elizabeth.

In turn, the Rotary district of Palatine is hosting the exchange group of South Africa, which will visit Harper this Thursday.

The exchange group will visit such diverse places as a Volkswagon plant, a college, rural farms, the government, and some of South Africa's infamous gold and diamond mines.

See Harper in South Africa: an affront in morality page 5

Kranz explains, "I expect we'll see the behind the scenes processes of their country, their infrastructure, not the typical tourist sites.

At least one day a week has been set aside for vocational purposes. Kranz explains, "Each group member will investigate his own vocational field. One man is a paramedic and he will spend time with the fire department. I will explore the school system and how it relate to placement in the job market."

Kranz added, "I don't know how much actual active investigation we will be allowed to do. Obviously they want to show us their best side, but with the social environment the way it is, it's hard to say."

When talking to people about the exchange, Kranz has found, "Most people focus on the Apartheid issue." Before he found out he would be a member of the exchange, he admits he knew little of the Apartheid system. He has since done research to acquaint himself with South Africa and its policies.

Kranz reveals, "South Africa's problems are very complex. There are 12 indigenous languages. How do you even come that? Its so complicated, I can't even try to give an answer."

He added, "If South Africa could solve a few problems, they have the resources to grow substantially. American companies are very reluctant to pull out. I would like to identify the advantages of their system."

Kranz will stay an additional week at his own expense to explore the northeastern portion of the country.

LRC closes for 5 weeks

By Alisa Chinland
Features Editor

Dean of Learning Resource Center (LRC) Al Dunikoski announced that the LRC will be closed this summer for five weeks in order to convert to a computerized library system.

The LRC staff, who will be placing barcodes on all library materials while the center is closed, request that students and faculty return all books, records, films, audio tapes, video tapes, etc. by July 31 or earlier.

Students taking fall classes can still preview book magazines, audio tapes and telecourse videotapes that are placed on reserve; however books from the stacks can not be checked out.

Students will have to find another place to study. Alternative study areas will be available in the A2/4 complex and Faculty Dining Room for the students while the library is closed, said Dunikoski. "We ask that the faculty and students bear with us while we change to an automated library system."

Construction project evaluated

By Mona Isa
News Editor
Douglas Ray
Editor-in-Chief

A project, which may include the construction of a new building, is scheduled to be voted on by the Illinois Community College Board in July. The project is designed to effectively utilize building space on and off campus.

The last buildings constructed on the campus have been Buildings L,J and M in 1980.

The Board of Trustees approved an institutional goal in May 1985 to evaluate the use of space on campus.

A study to determine what space is wasted and what areas need more space was assigned to Legat Architects.

The space utilization study was completed in 1987, and in Oct. 1988 Legat Architects submitted their analysis of area requirements. The estimated construction costs at that time totaled $17,500,000.

The Executive Council, which includes the president and the three vice presidents, began efforts to reduce the cost in Dec. Legat then reviewed the space requirements and requests, and submitted a revised estimate of $20,580,000 last January.

To help ease congestion the Executive Council is considering offering off-site day classes at the Northeast Center and evening classes at the local high schools.

The construction of the new project requires extensive preparation. The main concern is to make the campus more accessible within the college's budget.

"In the past, the classes have been fragmented. Specific classes are not located within the same area. For instance, art classes are located in Building C and U," said Manke.

A contract for a new Cash Station was approved last week. The Cash Station, owned by St. Paul Federal Bank, will be installed next week between the Bookstore and the Information Booth in Building A.

A First Chicago Bank of Mount Prospect Cash Station was removed due to the lack of transactions. St. Paul Federal hopes the Cash Station will be more marketable.

Doctors declared Kim Noonan Leukemia free last Wednesday. Tests conducted at the Loyola University Medical Center in Maywood confirmed that the Harper freshman and athlete is no longer afflicted with the disease. Noonan was originally diagnosed with Leukemia in January 1987.

Over $300,000 was divided between all of the Student Activities at the annual budget committee meeting last Friday. Director of Student Activities Jeanne Pankanin advised the committee comprised of the Student Senate President Pat Ryan, Student Senate Treasurer Anthony Garcia, and Harbinger Editor Douglas Ray, Program Board member Brian Dawson, and Student Senator Kristin Brogan. Together the committee cut over $25,000 in budget requests.

The annual Student Awards Banquet was held last Friday. The banquet recognized student accomplishments in clubs and organizations. The students were cited awards in the form of plaques, mugs, or certificates, depending upon the activity.

Student vote: last but not least

By Phyllis Benson
Staff Writer

The Student Senate voted unanimously on April 28 to send a letter to the Board of Trustees recommending that the student trustee be allowed to vote first, in motions before the board.

The student trustee vote, which is solely an advisory vote, is last. Student Trustee Darlene Ivarson stated, "While the vote is last, my input always came during the discussions before a vote."

The senate recommends this change because "There is no point in an advisory vote after the motion has passed or failed."

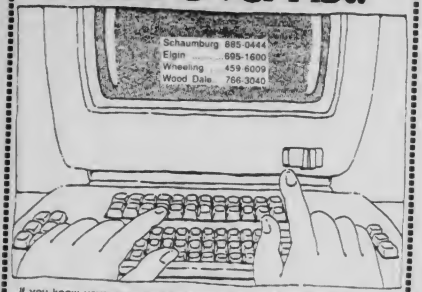

Senators Laura Jacobson and Anthony Garcia were appointed to draft a letter to be submitted to the board.

Tips for a safe summer

Here comes summer! Gone are colds, flu and frostbite, slippery sidewalks, snow shovel sciatica and other winter paraphernalia. But be careful...don't let summer hazards take the fun out of your time in the sun.

Many of us are ready to jump into sports and outdoor activities, including yard work and home repairs. But is your body ready for this intense physical activity? It is important to start any activity gradually and build your exercise intensity and duration over time, especially if you are out of condition and the weather is hot.

In summer, work or exercise during the cooler parts of the day- early morning or early evening. Exercise moderately for at least one week, 'till your body has adapted to the weather. Wear light porous, loose fitting clothes, drink plenty of water and protect yourself from the sun with a hat. Don't forget the sunscreen and the shades! Dress appropriately for the activity and the weather.

Always protect your skin from sun exposure and UV (ultraviolet) radiation both of which promote skin cancer and cause sunburn. To get the right amount of protection from your sunscreen, be sure it's no more than a year old. Apply generously to all exposed areas, including feet, 15 to 30 minutes before going into the sun. This gives the sunscreen time to interact with your skin and set up a shield against UV rays. An SPF (sun protection factor) of 15 means that you will be protected from burning 15 times longer than without. If you've been perspiring or swimming...are sunblock on your nose, lips ears and anywhere you feel vulnerable.

Wear sunglasses that absorb the sun's UV radiation and screen out 75-98% of light. Lenses that much in color (the best color choices are gray and green) and absorption and which are free of defects and distortion will lower chances of cataracts and shield your sensitive eyes from the sun. People who are taking medication that increases sensitivity to UV radiation, such as oral contraceptives or acne medication containing Tetracycline, need maximum UV protection.

Ticks and chiggers are a common hazard of summer outdoor living and hide in shrubs and tall grass. The tick buries its head and crab like pincers beneath the skin with the body and legs protruding. Ticks, including the mouth parts and pincers, should be removed although they will eventually 'loster out'. The key to removal is to get the tick to release its bite and withdraw from the wound. This can be accomplished with the application of alcohol, acetone, petroleum jelly, clear fingernail polish, or gentle heat from a heated paper clip. Once withdrawn use tissue to remove the tick from the skin. Ticks do transmit illnesses. If a fever, rash or headache follow a bite within 3 to 12 days, consult your physician.

Chiggers are small red mites. Their bite contains a chemical that irritates the skin causing a tremendous itch. Cuprex, A200, or Kwell applied the first few days will help kill the chigger larvae, but the itch will persist. Home treatment for relief of itching includes aspirin, warm baths, oatmeal soaks and calamine lotion.

The best medicine for chiggers and ticks is prevention. Use insect repellant and wear clothing which covers ankles, legs, arms, neck and head when in the woods or tall grass.

Recognition, avoidance and appropriate attire is the best approach for poison ivy and poison oak. It is the oil of the plant remaining in contact with the skin for several hours that causes the rash. Thorough cleansing with ordinary soap, repeated three times, will often prevent reaction; but if you are too late, hot baths and oatmeal soaks will provide relief. Consult a physician if home treatment is ineffective.

Graduation '89

By Jamie Beeum
Staff Writer

Graduation 1989", now doesn't that make you feel warm inside?

This year's graduation ceremony, scheduled for May 21, at 3 p.m. in Building M, is going to be special. Approximately 275 students will participate in the ceremony.

The program includes the presentation of the class gift and the award for excellence scholarships, followed by a reception in the dining hall.

Fr. Daniel Lawlor III M.D. Lawlor will be the featured speaker at the ceremony. Lawlor is a former Barrington resident, and a member of the class of '82. He received both an Associate of Arts, and an Associate of Science degree. This as the first time that a Harper alumnus will speak at the graduation ceremony.

Another highlight of Graduation 89, the twentieth graduating class, will be an honorary Associate of Arts degree awarded to Mrs. Jessalyn Nicklas, who was instrumental in establishing Harper College. Nicklas served on the Board of Trustees for 14 years, helped start the Illinois Community College Trustees Association, and has remained a strong supporter of Harper throughout the years.

Tickets are not needed for this event and there is no limit to the number of guests each graduate may invite. However seating is on a first- come basis.

AED recognized for excellence

The Adult Educational Development (AED) Department of Harper College offers Basic Skills, Pre-GED, Citizenship Training and Pre-Employment Programs for persons who are over 16 years of age and who are not currently enrolled in high school. Also offered is the Normative Literacy Program for persons whose second language is English. In addition, on-site customized academic skills for business and industry are offered in the Basic Academic Skills for Employee Development (BASED) Program.

As a result of its work and community involvement, the AED Department garnered several awards for the College during the past 9-10 year.

Harper was recognized by the United States Department of Education as an outstanding provider of adult education programs in 1988. The College also won the Secretary of Education award. Only two community colleges in the country have receive the award.

The award, also given to Seattle Community College in Washington, recognizes excellence in a number of Adult Educational Development areas. These include comprehensive academic skills, support services, cooperative training programs, with governmental and social service agencies, and customized instructional services to business and industry.

This spring Harper was honored by the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges (AACJC) which annually recognizes exemplary partnerships between community colleges and local business. The College was recognized for its collaboration with Motorola Inc. with Honorable Mention in the Keeping America Working Project at this years national convention.

Currently a plan to start production of a new cellular mobile car telephone in Arlington Heights, which Motorola prepared to build at a competitive price. Harper privided the needed training and education for workers making the transition to the new environment.

The College initiated a program involving literacy and productivity for Motarola employees. This effort resulted in a program providing more than 47,000 hours of on-site literacy instruction for reading, mathematics, and non-native language skills.

In addition, the Northern Cook County Private Industry council recognized Harper's Adult Educational Development Department as its "Outstanding Educational Partner" at their annual recognition dinner last April. The council is responsible for federally funded job training programs in northern Cook County. They're top priority is the battle against illiteracy.

Retirees honored at reception

By Phyllis Benson
Staff Writer

Professor of English Michael Bartos and Professors of Nursing Jeanette Mazurek and Lola Smith were honored at a reception on Wednesday in the Board Room in Building A.

Each will be retiring this year, and together represent 87 years of service to Harper College.

"Bartos joined the faculty in 1967, Mazurek in 1970 and Smith in 1973. These people have been a part of Harper for a long time.

We wish them well and they have earned their retirement, but we will miss them," Director of College Relations Elaine Sinemus said.

Faculty and staff extend their best wishes.

President Paul Thompson presented each professor with an aerial photo of Harper with an inscription of the service each performed for the college.

While Bartos has no definite plans after his retirement, Smith plans to do some traveling and stay active in the nursing field. Mazurek plans to travel and would like to do some writing.

Harper in South Africa; an affront to morality

The Board of Trustees' decision of April 22 to grant a paid leave of absence to a Harper employee traveling to South Africa was an unfortunate step in the wrong direction.

Placement Office Specialist Christopher Kranz was recently offered the dubious honor of traveling to the Republic of South Africa. He will be traveling as a member of a Rotary International Group Study Exchange (GSE) Team to the embattled nation.

In light of the historic and ongoing South African racial policy of Apartheid the board's allocation of school funding for Mr. Kranz's leave of absence is an affront to the moral standing of Harper's tuition paying students and the Harper community at large.

The Board's decision, in the face of divestment rallies which are sweeping American college campuses, is a risky initiative.

To those unfamiliar with South Africa's system of Apartheid, it is time for a lesson in racism. The system of Apartheid, or racial separation, dates to 1909 when the British-controlled South African Parliament withdrew the right of non-whites to sit in Parliament.

Apartheid in its modern form began in 1948, and was instituted by Prime Minister Daniel Malan as a system to separate the races. The white minority population supported Apartheid because it feared the loss of supremacy to the vast black majority. Malan's main plan called for a complete separation of the races in South Africa by an actual boundary dividing the nation. This, however, was not feasible due to the historical and continued white dependence on cheap, slave-like, black labor.

Today, Apartheid is firmly entrenched with the 4.8 million strong ruling white minority in control of the 27.9 million black majority. More than 300 pieces of legislation provide the apparatus for Apartheid, currently the most repressed system of racial laws in the world.

As you would imagine, the black majority in South Africa is not very fond of this agreement. The system of Apartheid is obviously unjust. As black opposition to Apartheid has grown, so has the brutality and repressiveness of Apartheid.

This opposition has also turned more overt and violent. In attempts to maintain control, the minority government has repeatedly declared martial law or "States of Emergency" during the past decades. The latest and most bloody State of Emergency was declared on June 16, 1986, and remains in effect today. Provisions declared on June 12 provided security police with sweeping powers, unleashing a reign of terror across South Africa. Under the provisions, security forces are empowered with the right to arrest and detain anyone without a warrant. Detainees may be held indefinitely, and are not entitled to a trial. Security forces may also impose curfews and seize property at will.

A ban on foreign and national press was also imposed on June 12. The 24 page press ban stipulates television and photographic reporters may not cover unrest or riots. Additionally, journalists are excluded from trouble spots. Newspapers are banned from printing the names of those detained by the government. Furthermore, the press cannot publish statements calling for strikes, boycotts, or resistance to any government action. The government is empowered to shut down any internal press organizations that violate these measures. The penalties for such violations are a 10-year jail term and/or a $9,000 fine.

Those unfortunate enough to be detained in South Africa prisons (thousands under the State of Emergency regulations, 40% of which were children at one point) are subject to harsh brutality. A 1985 University of Cape Town study found that a detainee stood an 83% chance of being tortured.

Last year all of South Africa's major black trade unions were banned as an extension of the State of Emergency. They join the ranks of long-banned groups such as the African National Congress (ANC). One of the leaders of the ANC, Nelson Mandela, has been jailed with a life sentence since 1964.

The facts of Apartheid's political injustices are indisputable. Apartheid's social injustices are another aspect to be considered.

Medical care for blacks in South Africa is a travesty. For a country that claims to be a first world, modernized, industrial nation, there is only one doctor per 17,000 blacks. Perhaps this is why the infant mortality rate among blacks is a shocking 80.6% (as opposed to 14.9% for whites). Another shocking statistic is that 55% of all deaths among South African blacks occurs between the ages of one and five. In addition, black life expectancy is only 55 years, as opposed to 70 years for whites. Blacks are likewise disadvantaged educationally. The government spends seven times more on the education of whites than it does for blacks.

The case against Apartheid is overwhelming. It provides a moral mandate to the international community for the imposition of sanctions. This is precisely the conclusion which was made by a negotiating team representing the 49 British Commonwealth nations in 1986.

The negotiators, after six months of attempting to reach a settlement in South Africa, stated that, "a racial conflagration with frightening implications threatens..." They continued, saying that of a full scale armed civil war were to engulf South Africa, it "could be the worst bloodbath since the Second World War." The negotiating team concluded that sanctions were imperative to avert this disaster.

Critics of sanctions usually state that they are useless and counterproductive. In fact, current sanctions are simply too weak to be totally effective. This is why the UN has long called for mandatory sanctions by all UN member nations. Nations such as Canada and Australia have answered the call. OPEC and the World Court have boycotted South Africa for many years. However, until South Africa's two largest trading partners, the US and the UK do the same, sanctions will be unable to bring change.

Some progress has been made. Just last week, Mobil Corporation announced that it was selling its South African assets and leaving South Africa. In September of 1986, the U.S. Congress passed a limited sanctions bill, despite much dissent from the conservative right.

Two questions arise at this point. First, if the sanctions are of basic importance to a resolution of tensions in South Africa, why is a civically minded organization like the Rotary Club sending a 'team' to South Africa? Second, if Rotary International seeks to facilitate positive change in South Africa, would they not be supporting cultural boycotts of the Apartheid Regime?

If the Rotary Team is functioning as a fact finding venture, they will only find what has been reported in thousands of books and periodicals. Obviously, the Rotarians have other motives. These motives are thinly veiled and obvious to the opponents of Apartheid.

It's no secret that the Reagan administrations, the American right and the Business community are all staunch critics of sanctions imposed on South Africa. The US sanctions bill passed over a Presidential veto. Conservatives, by and large, see economic sanctions as "bad for business". sanctions are viewed as a hindrance to business, not a proponent to morals.

The Rotary Club is not known as a bastion of liberal thought. As recently as 1986, Rotary International members voted by a two-thirds majority to keep its doors closed to women members. One year later, the US Supreme Court had to intervene to prevent Rotary International form ousting a California Chapter that has admitted women.

By participating in cultural exchange programs with South Africa, Rotary International is not aiding in the forces of change. It is not even promoting a free exchange of ideas.

The GSE Team will spend most of their time in the Orange Free State, Province of South Africa. The Orange Free State has long been a center of South African White Nationalism. It is not as plagued by unrest as some other provinces. Of course, no nation wants to show its house guests the dirty dishes stacked up in the sink. South Africa is, by having the GSE team visit the Orange Free State, refusing to even let its guests in the kitchen.

Through the actions of its exchange program, Rotary International is sending this message: The current Apartheid regime, with all its injustice and brutality, is a viable business environment. In South Africa, everything is business as usual.

In granting a paid, short term, leave of absence for a staff member, The Harper College Board of Trustees is sending an equivalent message.

South Africa's current government is the definition of a totalitarian regime. If Harper College chooses to send such an immoral message through its actions and plans to do it with tuition fees, the student body is prepared to respond. The Board's actions have and will not go unnoticed.

The Cure for common music is 'Disintegration'

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

Robert Smith must have some pretty strange dreams. Consider the song Lullaby from the new Cure album Disintegration. It's hard to tell if its inspiration was a bizarre dream, a comic book fetish, or arachnephobia. "And there is nothing I can do when I realize with fright that the spiderman is having me for dinner tonight" whispers Smith.

Disintegration can be described as the music of dreams, the soundtrack of sleep. Lullaby is only an example of the dream-like quality of the latest Cure product. Most of the album's twelve tracks (ten on the vinyl version) are a bit dreamy as well , not as much lyrically as musically.

In contrast to Kiss Me, Kiss Me, Kiss Me, the previous Cure album from 1987, Disintegration is very downbeat and rather uncommercial. Kiss Me was an album of mixed emotions, from happiness to anger, from love to pain. Disintegration is an album of despairing sadness.

It is a depressing album, but not a suicidal one like 1982's Pornography. There are no straightforward pop songs in evidence. Only the first U.S. single, Fascination Street, and Pictures of You even remotely approach the turbound pop singles of Kiss Me.

Fortunately this is not a bad thing. For years the Cure have been making music that misunderstood youth could relate to. There is a Cure album for every mood, and that is part of the reason for their popularity around the world. Any fan who accused them of selling out with their last release can rescind their judgement after listening to Disintegration, which does not cater to the uninitiated at all.

Although the album as a whole is unlike any previous album from the Cure there are similarities when taken song for song.

The first track, Plainsong, is a slow, lush dirge that recalls 1987's A Thousand Hours in everything except vocal style. In the latter song Smith's voice is a plaintive wail, whereas in the former it is more like a low moan. The next track, Pictures of You, is reminiscent of 1987's Snow in Summer.

Smith once again finds himself drowning again in The Same Deep Water as You. In the title track he seems to come back to a recurring theme of the end of a relationship, but with the Cure you can never be so sure.

Joy Division's classic 1979 album Closer shares something in common with Disintegration. Both albums close with two songs that leave an indelible impression in the mind of the listener. Instead of getting a feeling from the whole album, it's only the last two songs that create the mood. Both create the same mood as well . . . one of infinite sadness and emptiness, of heartbreak and despair.

Disintegration on CD and cassette clocks in at over 72 minutes with 12 tracks. Kiss Me, . . . on CD as the same length but with 17 tracks (the double LP and cassette have 18 tracks). The extended length of the songs is barely noticeable when listening to the album from start to finish, and that's a testament to their excellence.

The music, as usual, is perfectly produced and generally surpasses superiority. There's really not a flawed spot on the album. Along with New Order's Technique, this is the best album of the year so far.

Rating out of 5: 5 (I've only given out a 5 once before)

Further music notes

By Steve Hill
Staff Writer

Love And Rockets fourth LP is somewhat of a disappointment. This self-titled album is easily their weakest despite the appearance of two strong tracks, I Feel Speed and the current single So Alive.

Entertaining lyrics also make Bound For Hell an interesting song. David J sings two songs through a harmonizer while Daniel Ash boosts up the feedback. The harmony of their voices, one of the band's greatest assets, is used very little. Although the LP is okay, I hope their next album will see a return to the sound of their previous excellent releases.

Rating out of 5: 3 1/2

Cindy Lee Berryhill's second album is an exhilarating collection of mostly acoustic folk rock songs. Why exhilarating? Just listen to her lyrics. Most of the tracks cram three songs worth of material into one. It's almost a recording of stream of consciousness thoughts, but there is enough structure to call it poetry, and good poetry at that.

Berryhill's voice at first made me think of Rickie Lee Jones and Suzanne Vega, but she has a style all her own. When her voice cracks, she makes it sound as if it were the focal point of the song. Her backing musicians show a lot of talent, but it's really Cindy Lee Berryhill's lyrics that deserve the highest praise.

Rating out of 5: 4 1/2 (almost 4!)

The Proclaimers' second release on Chrysalis Records is called Sunshine on Leith. It's an irresistable record. I bought it on the strength of one song and I soon discovered that EVERY song is just as good.

Craig and Charlie Reid (no relation to Jim and William Reid of the Jesus and Mary Chain) are excellent songwriters, excellent guitarists (mostly acoustic), and their voices sound great together. Each of the 12 tracks is worth repeated listening. A delightful surprise.

Rating out of 5: 4.

ELECTRIC PHASE

By Eric Jason

Living Colour: Vivid

Living Colour has [illegible] work in support of their debut album Vivid.

[illegible] the way through. I expected just hard rock, but the songs that constitute Vivid are a mix of styles of music that's really in a class all its own. They deal with a lot of political ideas, but in a fun way that doesn't alienate their audience.

The album starts off with Cult of Personality, a song that deals with following leaders too blindly. The only real songs that don't have a strong message, I Wanna Know and What's Your Favorite Colour keep this album from getting too wrapped up in the issues.

Middle Man and Desperate People keep the ideals flying, urging people to become more politically aware, the music however, is a mix in styles somewhere between Jimmy Page and Jimi Hendrix.

Open Letter to the Landlord is a really strong ballad mixing the rhythm and blues singing styles of Cory Glover and Vernon Reid's soulful riffs. The song tells a story of businessmen wanting to tear down a run down neighborhood without caring about the people living there.

The next group of songs, Memories Can Wait, Broken Hearts, Glamour Boys, and Which Way to America, are all an experiment in blending hard rock to soul, funk and the blues.

Memories Can Wait is a more straight mix of rhythm and blues and hard rock. It has multiple tempo changes that gives Reid the opportunity to go from hyperspeed metal to melodic rhythm and blues playing.

Glamour Boys and Which Way to America both have stinging racial and social topics that are pretty much self-explanatory. The guitar on the lyric parts of these songs are soul. Clear, fast and repetitive chords give these songs great speed, but during the solos and chorus the guitar goes to standard rock.

This album is really beyond classification and hard to review because everyone has their own perceptions of the way it sounds. Reid's guitar work, Glover's singing, and the unique structure of this album makes it a must buy.

The Best of '89: A

By Alisa Chistlund
Features Editor
and Mona Isa
News Editor

Calling all fashion buffs! See the best fashions of '89. The Harper Fashion Department is bringing it's glamor, dazzle and creativity to the public with the keener style of competition this Friday.

After months of preparation for the annual fashion show the public will catch a glimpse of 200 student-designed garments of different styles and categories.

The fashion presentation will consist of specific ready-to-wear garments such as sportswear, dresses, wearable art, coats, children's and women's fashions, swimwear, lingerie, evening gowns and more.

The student fashion show is indeed an extravaganza. A tremendous amount of planning goes into producing a fashion show. A master plan must be developed and executed; many decisions are made before the work is done.

Students in the fashion design classes create an idea for a design and prepare preliminary sketches. They then wait for approval before proceeding.

The next step is to make a pattern. "There are no commercial patterns; all students establish their own creative, original design," said Sandra Clark, associate professor and coordinator of fashion design and merchandising.

"The students base their designs on current trends, cycles in fashion, marketability and creativity," said Clark.

One hot fashion trend Clark predicted was wearable art, "wild, exaggerated clothing developed for creativity rather than versatility."

Other forecasted fashions include "mini skirts that are short, practical and professional, bright-colored designs and garments with silhouette waistlines. Femininity is in," said Clark.

The students re-create their designs using muslin fabrics, which are then fitted to dress forms.

While students are given the opportunity to model, professionals are also encouraged to participate. Tryouts were held last February. Certain physical specifications have to be met. The models must fit into a size 6, 8 or 10 garments, be available for a training session and all shows.

The fashion student and the model work together on the garment(s). Models are then trained to make the entrance on stage, walk, pivot, turn and properly display the garment to give the best presentation.

"The garments can be painted, printed or embellished," said Clark. "We encourage students to use the highest level of craftsmanship."

Next, the "Juried Show" hosts 12 to 15 fashion specialists from Chicago, who choose which garments

Fashion Designer Beverly Adams (L) holds the sketch for the first prize winner in the Career category of the Fashion Group Regional Competition. will be displayed in future shows. Garments are graded on creativity, construction, model presentation and effective use of accessories.

Once the garment(s) qualify, the student brings the design to area clubs and benefit shows.

"The fashion shows give the designer a chance to display the garment, gain exposure to the fashion industry and receive a good learning experience," said Clark.

The Best of 80, our 20th Anniversary, will present two shows on Friday, May 12 in Building M at 2 p.m. and 8 p.m. The shows cost $6 and $8 respectively. Students with an activity card can see either for $3.

Student designers can win scholarship awards from the following sponsors: the Northwest Business and Professional Women, the Women's Club of Inverness, Fishman's Fabric, Vogue Fabric, Finn's Fabric, Hagenbring's Fabric. Winners will be chosen on May 12.

After the fashion show, some of the designers will sell their garments. A boutique will be set up so the audience can purchase clothing designed by Harper students.

The proceeds raised from the fashion show will help subsidize a trip to Paris for fashion design students. They will compete in the Concours International, a show for young fashion designers held in December.

Steel Drum Band performs

The Harper College Steel Drum Band will perform on Thursday, May 11 at 8 p.m. in room J143. The public is invited and admission is free.

The instruments used by the ten-member ensemble consist of 14 hand-hammered 55-gallon steel barrels which are accompanied by a drum set and Latin percussion instruments.

Music played on the drums ranges from the traditional calypso to more popular music. The band is under the direction of Stephen Swogger.

Steel Drum Band is a credit course offered to anyone who is interested, with or without musical experience. The band rehearses weekly, allowing students and members of the community to experience music of this style in an enjoyable and educational atmosphere.

The band will be appearing throughout the Northwest Suburbs during the spring and summer months.

For further information regarding concerts, the course, or performance locations, contact Dr. Robert Fillerson at 392-3000, ext. 2569.

Focus on future

Start right here planning your future. Join Carol Kleinman of the Chicago Tribune as she gives the keynote at this year's conference, Where Women Are Today. Exciting and challenging workshops will fill the day's topics such as overcoming the "I'm just a secretary syndrome; coping with difficult people; managing the time in your life; new techniques in records management, how to promote yourself and be promoted; and more.

You will leave at the end of this day feeling great and knowing how to better plan you future.

The conference will take place on May 23, 1989 from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. For a descriptive brochure call 397-3000, ext. 2591.

The Harper Baseball Team concluded its season with a 6-5 loss to Oakton at the NJCAA Region IV Section II Tournament Semi-Final at Lake County Sunday.

The loss, second in the double-elimination tournament, finished the Hawks up at 19-20 for the year.

In reaching the semi-final round they began tournament play with a tough 17-2 loss in six innings to the host Lancers on Friday, and advanced to the semi-final with 4-3 win over Elgin on Saturday.

Friday's contest saw [illegible] run second to knock Vaca out of the game.

It got worse when Lake County exploded for four more in the fourth, and a run in the bottom of the sixth to put the Hawks out of their misery.

Harper was able to rebound Saturday as they jumped out to an early 4-0 lead and held on behind the pitching of Rick Barrell. The game really wasn't that close. Head Coach Dan Koss said about the win over his former school.

ceremony.

"We did it as an experiment to see what it would be like with a combination of the two winter and spring sports at the banquet, Athletic Director Roger Bechtold said.

After an opening speech by Bechtold, the Most Valuable Players from each of the winter and spring sports were announced.

For Women's Swimming, freshman Peggy McCann earned MVP honors as she led the team to a runner-up finish [illegible] relay.

Mark McAvoy earned MVP honors for Men's Swimming as he placed five times in top five competitions prior to qualifying for the nationals in three of those five. Like McCann, McAvoy also won two championships at the Region IV Meet in the 100 & 200 butterfly.

Women's Basketball MVP went to Sophomore Pascale O'Donoghue.

The 6'1" center received [illegible] Hawks entered in preparing for the national championships at CSUD in Glen Ellyn. He never missed a practice, Coach Norm Lodge said.

Guard-Forward Travis Perry earned MVP honors for Men's Basketball as 6-2 Sophomore earned Honorable Mention Region IV honors in addition to All-Sectional, and third team N4C honors for the second consecutive year in a row. He also received N4C player of the week honors on [illegible]

MVP of the third year sophomore earned first team N4C Honors for head coach Martha Lynn Bolt.

Tiny Longmore picked up Baseball MVP as the Sophomore earned first team N4C honors by hitting .404 on the year.

MVP's for Men's Tennis, Men's Track & Field and Women's Track & Field were not announced due to their seasons still being in session.

But the highlight of the banquet came when Women's [illegible] MVP [illegible] had to disadvantages as well.

First, We didn't have the outstanding turnouts for winter sports that we had for spring sports. And second, the ceremony was just long (two hours) due to the coaches taking a long time during their presentations," he said.

In a final assessment, Bechtold added that it will be up in the air whether or not the banquet will return in this form.

"We'll just have to wait and see," Bechtold said.

Tennis falters despite Bartleson's effort

By Chris Boghossian
Staff Writer

Tennis standout Mark Bartleson won the Region IV Singles Tennis Championship at Rockford's Guilford Tennis Club May 4-6.

The rest of the team, however, did not fare well. Aside from Bartleson, every member had been eliminated by the third round.

In first round action, Bartleson, Bill Adamic and Eric Ford were automatic winners, receiving byes because of winning records during regular season play.

Dave LeBike lost a tough match to a Moraine Valley player 4-6, 6-4, 7-6. John Puchford lost to a player from Rock Valley 6-4, 6-3, and a Triton player defeated Harper's Joe Pinthaast 6-2, 6-2.

Adams and Ford both lost in the second round, but Bartleson defeated his opponent from College of Lake County 6-1, 6-1.

At this point, all eyes were on Bartleson, he was the only member of the Hawks' team left in the tournament.

Bartleson continued to outhit his contenders, outlasting his semi-final opponent from Moraine Valley in three sets, 3-6, 7-5, 6-0.

For the regional championship, Bartleson easily won against Rock Valley's top player 6-3, 6-0.

Although Bartleson won the regional singles title, only players whose teams finish first or second in regionals advance to the national tournament. The Hawks did not place first or second, so Bartleson's season ended with his regional championship.

"It was really disappointing for the team not to advance, especially after last year," Bartleson said.

Last season, the Hawks finished strong and placed second in regionals as a team, thus advancing to nationals.

"Coach (Roy) Kearns went to great extremes for mental as well as physical preparation," Bartleson said. "He was a great influence on me and the entire team."

After the match, Coach Kearns declared Bartleson the team's most valuable player for the 1989 season.

"Mark was consistent throughout the year," Kearns said. "He has the ability to stay calm in stressful situations.

"Mark has an innate athletic ability which allows him to execute at the right time. He makes mistakes like any other athlete, but he overcomes his mistakes. His good winning and great playing attitude helped the team as a whole."

The Hawks ended the season at 6-7, but five of their losses were by one match.

"We had a good team, and I feel good about the outcome," Kearns said. "We had the effort. the players did as well as they could do, but it just wasn't enough.

"We never really got into the outdoor environment. With the weather as bad as it was, we practiced indoors a lot and had outdoor matches. We never really got comfortable with the constant changes.

"With four returning players from last year, I really thought we could go far. We tried, but it didn't work.

"It takes a little bit of luck to win the close ones. We were unlucky at the end of this year, but that is what makes the sport challenging."

Cubs looking good

By Kevin Oates
Staff Writer

The Cubs look good, better than I thought. Granted it is still May. Granted Andre Dawson is out for the next 3-5 weeks with knee ligament damage. Who knows? No N.L. East team looks dominating.

The pitching staff, looks the best it has been in ten years. No, make that twenty years, better than the .84 N.L. East Champs. All five starters are doing well. Greg Maddux has not been as bad as his 2-4 record indicates. The relief has been outstanding.

As for the Rafael Palmeiro/ Jamie Moyer deal to Texas for Curtis Wilkerson, Paul Kilgus, Steve Wilson and Mitch Williams, the numbers speak for themselves. Wilkerson is hitting .224, but has been an excellent back-up infielder. Kilgus and Wilson are a combined 5-2 and 3.43 ERA. And Williams has 10 saves with a 1.59 ERA. Jim Frey has done a good job.

As for the future, the Cubs have a shot at first, but they have to keep pitching well and manufacturing runs, especially with Dawson out.

I predicted the White Sox to come in second, and they could have, but the injury demon has decapitated this team. Carlton Fisk, Greg Walker, Dan Pasqua and Harold Baines are or have been hurt this season. With the tremendous loss of hitting power, they have faltered.

They're not bad, but not as good as they could have been. They'll get better as the season progresses.

Watch out NBA, Here come the Bulls! How about that 120-109 overtime win over the Knicks in the Big Apple Tuesday evening. And what about that Cleveland series. Unbelievable, that's all I can say.

After missing two crucial free throws that would've given the Bulls the series in game four, Michael Jordan came through with the shot of his life at the buzzer on Sunday's game five for the 101-100 win that sent the Cavaliers home for the summer. Jordan is and will always be the greatest basketball ever.

As for the future, the Bulls could go all the way. I felt there were only two teams that dominated the Bulls this year. Cleveland and Detroit. The Eastern Conference is tough and if the Bulls get through it, they can win it all.

The Hawks can beat the Flames, even though they're down 3-1 in the series, as we go to press Tuesday night, after that heartbreaking 2-1 overtime loss at the Stadium Monday Night.

My gut feeling is that the Hawks are going to start their comeback with a win over the Flames last night in Calgary.

If they lost, They should raise their heads high for making it to the Campbell Conference finals after barely making it into the playoffs.

The Harper Baseball Team concluded its season with a 6-3 loss to Oakton at the NJCAA Region IV-Section II Tournament Semi-Final at Lake County Sunday.

The loss, second in the double-elimination tournament, finished the Hawks up at 19-20 for the year.

In reaching the semi-final round they began tournament play with a tough 12-2 loss in six innings to the host Lancers on Friday, and advanced to the semi-final with 4-3 win over Elgin on Saturday.

Friday's contest with Lake County started out well, but soon turned into a nightmare.

After taking a 2-0 first inning lead on Dave Szarzynski's double and a single from Tony Vaca, the Lancers retaliated with two in the bottom of the frame to tie and then exploded with a four-run second to knock Vaca out of the game.

It got worse when Lake County exploded for four more in the fourth, and a run in the bottom of the sixth to put the Hawks out of their misery.

Harper was able to rebound Saturday as they jumped out to an early 4-0 lead and held on behind the pitching of Rick Bartell. "The game really wasn't that close," Head Coach Dan Koss said about the win over his former school.

But Harper's luck would run out as they squandered a 7-1 lead, keyed by a Marty Cruzan homer, on one single pitch.

That pitch, off starter Dave Miller, wound up being a three-run homer that tied the contest, eventually leading to Oakton's win.

"We just self-destructed, that's what we've been doing all year long," Koss said as he summarized the game and the season in one sentence.

Baseball players receive honors

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

Although the baseball season ended this past week for the Harper Hawks, seven players received postseason honors from the NJC & Region IV.

Team MVP, Centerfielder Tim Longmore, was the only Hawk named to the NJC All-Conference team. The sophomore from Hoffman Estates, batted .442 with 3 homeruns and 14 RBI's.

After the announcement of Longmore to the All-Conference team, the remaining six players-Pitchers Rick Bartell, Tony Vaca and Dave Miller, First Baseman Dave Szarzynski, Right Fielder Angelo Torello and Third Baseman Tony Pignataro received NJC honorable mention.

"It's not bad. In my heart, they did a nice job, and they deserved to receive NJC honors (All-Conference and Honorable Mention). They had a decent year," Head Coach Dan Koss said.

"In some cases, they didn't have the stats to make All-Conference but they still deserved to make honorable mention. The Freshman can set the goal to make the all-conference team next year."

In addition to the NJC honors, Longmore and Szarzynski have been nominated for the Region IV All-Star Team. The team will compete against the Region XXIV (Southern and Central Illinois) All-Star Team on June 25 in Springfield.

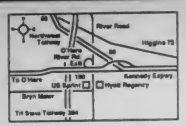

"Longmore has an excellent chance to start, whereas Szarzynski might not, because there are a lot of infielders that have been nominated," Koss said about his players' chances.

MVP's named at banquet

By Lou Nunez
Staff Writer

This year's athletic awards banquet held last Tuesday night in the Building A dining hall had a different twist to it.

For the first time in school history, the banquet combined the winter and spring sports for one big awards ceremony.

"We did it as an experiment to see what it would be like with a combination of the two (winter and spring) sports at the banquet," Athletic Director Roger Bechtold said.

After an opening speech by Bechtold, the Most Valuable Players from each of the winter and spring sports were announced.

For Women's Swimming, freshman Peggy McCann earned MVP honors as she led the team to a runner-up finish at the Region IV meet in February. McCann qualified for six separate events at the nationals by placing in the top three each time. This included two firsts in the 100 & 200 freestyle. At the nationals, McCann went on to place in the top ten three times highlighted by a pair of ninth place finishes in 400 medley relay and the 400 freestyle relay.

Mark McAvoy earned MVP honors for Men's Swimming as he placed five times in top five, enroute to qualifying for the nationals in three of those five. Like McCann, McAvoy also won two championships at the Region IV Meet in the 100 & 200 butterfly.

Women's Basketball MVP went to Sophomore Pascale O'Donoghue.

The 6'1" center received first team N4C Sectional, and Region IV honors by breaking four Harper scoring records. She also received N4C player of the week honors January 30th, and was a member of Region IV All-Star Team.

Mark Cecchi earned Wrestling MVP as the team captain consistently placed in the top five in tournaments this season for the Hawks enroute to qualifying for the national championships at COD in Glen Ellyn. He never missed a practice, Coach Norm Lavelee said.

Guard-Forward Travis Perry earned MVP honors for Men's Basketball as 6'2" Sophomore earned Honorable Mention Region IV honors in addition to All-Sectional, and third team N4C honors for the second consecutive year in a row. He also received N4C player of the week honors on December 17th, and was a member of the Region IV All-Star Team. "He's a good student-athlete who dedicated 100% every time out on the floor. He brought out the best in others. He's the type of person that you would want to be," Bechtold said.

All-Star third baseman Lynn Hoyer received Softball MVP as the third-year sophomore earned first team N4C Honors for first-year coach Martha Lynn Bell.

Tom Langmore picked up Baseball MVP as the Sophomore earned first team N4C honors by hitting .404 on the year.

MVPs for Men's Tennis, Men's Track & Field and Women's Track & Field were not announced due to their seasons still being in session.

But the highlight of the banquet came when Women's Basketball coach Tom Teschner presented Freshman Kim Noonan with a special certificate from the N4C for the example she set in fighting Leukemia. The presentation culminated with a two-minute standing ovation for Noonan.

Bechtold found that the two-season format had its disadvantages as well.

First, We didn't have the outstanding turnouts for winter sports that we had for spring sports. And second, the ceremony was too long (two hours) due to the coaches taking a long time during their presentations," he said.

In a final assessment, Bechtold added that it will be up in the air whether or not the banquet will return in this form.

"We'll just have to wait and see," Bechtold said.
